The Gibraltar Parliament

The Parliament met at 3.05 p.m.

[MR SPEAKER: Hon. M L Farrell BEM GMD RD JP in the Chair]

[CLERK TO THE PARLIAMENT: S Galliano Esq in attendance]

PRAYER

Mr Speaker

CONFIRMATION OF MINUTES

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Wednesday, 18th January 2023.

Order of Proceedings: (i) Oath of Allegiance; (ii) Confirmation of Minutes – the Minutes of the last meeting of Parliament, which was held on 21st and 22nd December 2022.

Mr Speaker: May I sign the Minutes as correct?

Members: Aye.

Mr Speaker signed the Minutes.

COMMUNICATIONS FROM THE CHAIR

Rulings and decisions of the Speaker – Statement by Mr Speaker

Clerk: (iii) Communications from the Chair.

Mr Speaker: It is my considered view that some Members of Parliament are disregarding the Speaker's rulings and decisions and often challenge his authority. Standing Orders are also being flouted. I cannot allow this state of affairs to continue.

20

Some hon. Members engage in rather lengthy preambles when asking a supplementary question. In this respect, I should like to draw the attention of hon. Members to Standing Order 16(5)(i), which says, inter alia, that supplementary questions are also subject to the same admissibility rules as are applied to original questions. In dealing with this recurring issue, I intend to proceed along similar lines to that which Speaker Canepa adopted on 15th September 2016. These are contained in the Speakers' Rulings and Statements booklet, which every Member should now have in front of them.

Hon. Members will know that a point of order is an appeal to the Speaker for clarification or for a ruling on a matter of procedure in the House. It cannot be used to challenge the authority and, in particular, the Speaker's impartiality, or as a means of making a complaint or expressing dissatisfaction about an answer given to a question.

It is the Speaker's responsibility to intervene when words or expressions are uttered which he considers unparliamentary or likely to create disorder in the House.

30 I now turn to the Hon. Elliott Phillips and his behaviour in this Chamber on 22nd December 2022. The word 'misleading' is unparliamentary and not permitted and requires to be withdrawn immediately. If a Member wishes to pursue accusations of the kind not permitted, the proper course of action is to table a motion about the conduct of another Member. The Hon. Mr Phillips will know that he was given the opportunity of withdrawing the offending word but chose not to do so and angrily and abruptly left the Chamber. A number of weeks have elapsed since the 35 incident and therefore I cannot sanction the hon. Member, but I must warn him that any repetition will lead to speedy and appropriate action.

That ends my Statement.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Changes to parliamentary procedure – Statement by the Chief Minister 40 Clerk: (iv) Petitions; (v) Announcements – the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, may I start by wishing all Members, although it is a little late, a happy New Year and wishing everyone in the House, and indeed beyond the House, all the very best for 2023.

45 Mr Speaker, thank you for your Statement and for leave to make my own, which deals with matters also relating to parliamentary procedure.

It is no secret that 2023 will be an election year. As a result, the debates we will have in Parliament will be followed perhaps even more assiduously than they are at most times by our many compatriots. In the circumstances, I want to make sure that the Government contributes as much as possible to the smooth running of Parliament.

50 In many respects, we have already changed Parliament beyond recognition from the manner of operation we inherited and which left a lot to be desired. Although hugely important, the long-overdue introduction of cameras to these proceedings was the most high-profile but perhaps the least seminal of all the changes. Some more in-depth changes on the running of Parliament were necessary and are now, perhaps happily, taken for granted.

55 Quite unlike the position when I was in Opposition, we have tried to help by publication of a timetable of proceedings for each session. We want to ensure that continues and that it helps hon. Members opposite to plan their work around the Parliament sessions. Already, they know that we meet monthly in the third week of the month, unless we are unable to do so, other than for Easter and the summer recess. That will already help them greatly in planning for the use of 60 their time, but we want to ensure that the public and hon. Members will also know which questions are likely to be dealt with in the session and which Bills are likely to be taken.

The effects of both Brexit and COVID have made continuing some aspects of what we had changed less easy to continue, but as from today, as we are looking at publishing even more information in the timetable so that we can advance matters with the public and all hon. Members
65 are aware of which business we are intending to take and when, I hope to put behind us all the issues that Brexit and COVID had created. In particular, I am happy to confirm these matters, which I know the Opposition are often in contact with us on. First of all, that the Government will introduce a convention in this House, as has been the case in the United Kingdom for some time, to allow the Leader of the Opposition and the relevant shadow Minister, where appropriate, sight 70 of ministerial statements before delivery.

Second, I shall ask the excellent Parliament team at No. 6 Convent Place to advise your team, when we are sure of the order in which questions will be taken, to give notice to all of the public and to the Opposition, to know in advance which Ministers are taking questions on any particular day.

75 Mr Speaker, I already endeavour to advise the Leader of the Opposition informally in advance, in answer to his requests for information, which Bills on the Agenda are intended to be taken, and I shall continue to do so, via your staff, more officially to the Opposition and the public generally, so that any person with an interest in a particular Bill will be able to know more accurately when they may need to attend Parliament or tune into our debates.

80 Finally, where possible, I shall continue to ensure that the Opposition will know in advance when a Bill is certified as being urgent. I shall ask that this should also be reflected in the timetable to be published, so that the public can also see a Bill is to be taken that has not been published for the requisite six weeks.

85 Mr Speaker, I know that these measures will also be helpful in particular to members of the press who report on our proceedings to inform our citizens of our work here. I hope this is helpful and I commend this Statement – which I have provided a copy of to the Leader of the Opposition – to the House.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, thank you.

Yes, I have received a copy of the hon. Member's Statement – at 2.59, I think it was, accurately, so a minute before the session of Parliament was going to start.

95 I did note when I was reading it before we actually started the session – within the 60 seconds that I had the Statement for – that it starts with the words 'Mr Speaker, thank you for your Statement and for leave to make my own, which deals with matters also relating to parliamentary procedure.' That was the first time I became aware that Mr Speaker was going to make a Statement. It presupposed the knowledge of the Chief Minister of the Statement that Mr Speaker was going to make, and clearly he had a copy in advance of his own, which is a typed, two-page Statement. I am surprised that that is the way I found out that Mr Speaker was going to make a Statement on matters important to parliamentary business, and I would have hoped that if we are going to start a new beginning, perhaps that would not occur in the future.

Hon. Chief Minister: Will the hon. Member give way, Mr Speaker?

105

Hon. K Azopardi: If the hon. Member –

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I will answer to some of the things the hon. Gentleman has said in a moment in my right of reply, because he is asking me for clarification on my Statement, but he has said that I had a copy in advance of your Statement. I did not have a copy in advance of your Statement. When I rang you today, at lunchtime, to tell you that I intended to make a Statement, you told me that you were going to make a Statement when the Parliament began, and for that reason I have added the sentence to my Statement – which I finished at quarter to three, 14 minutes before I gave a copy to the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition ... that I would be making a Statement myself, and that is why that reference is there. So the hon. Gentleman, for now, will allow me just to give him the information, so that he does not make statements which are factually incorrect, and I am sure he will want to withdraw.

Hon. K Azopardi: It is certainly not factually incorrect to say that the Chief Minister was aware that there was going to be a Statement by the Speaker and I certainly was not aware. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) I said it presupposed it. He has clarified you did not, but it is –

Mr Speaker: Can I interject a second? The Leader of the Opposition should be aware, as the Chief Minister is aware, that I do not provide a statement of what I intend to say, if I intend to say anything, to you or to the Chief Minister. I never have done that in the four years.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am also grateful for that clarification. I do repeat the point, however, that I made, which has been confirmed by the Hon. the Chief Minister, that in a conversation he became aware that there was going to be a Statement. If that was said, casually or otherwise, to the Chief Minister, it would have been helpful for the Leader of the Opposition to also have been told there would be a Statement by the Speaker today. Of course, on the basis of the practice that Mr Speaker has followed, I would not have known it, nor the Chief Minister, but certainly I would have been aware of the matter.

In any event – and I will ask for clarification on the Statement – I will say this on the Statement. The hon. Member knows that I feel quite strongly about parliamentary reform and we have spoken about it before, several times. I think much more needs to be done than has been done so far and is in this Statement, and without sounding churlish about it, of course I welcome any progress that can be made, however slow. So I do welcome it, but I do think that much more needs to be done than this. It is also the case, for example, that the Parliamentary Reform Subcommittee that was set up with such great aspirations of reform has not met at all in the last three years and certainly had made very little progress before then. So much more needs to be done and much more beyond these issues.

Can I ask, on the specific measures that the Hon. the Chief Minister has announced, for some clarification? He says we know we meet monthly in the third week of the month, unless we are unable to. Of course that is, aspirationally, true. In the last few years, of course, it has not happened in that way. Again, I am not going to suggest that there has been anything other than good reason why that is the case, because we have had the COVID and then the Brexit challenges, but it would be helpful, and I hope the hon. Member agrees with me ... Will he agree that in terms of trying to agree some kind of calendar so that we know precisely when we are going to meet, it would be helpful to do so for diary purposes and for everyone to plan their lives and their business?

Secondly, he says as from today they are looking at publishing even more information in the timetable. With respect, even though he is the Leader of the House, it is a matter for Parliament and for the parliamentary staff, I would say, under the guidance of Mr Speaker, perhaps, to be able to have some control of the publication of not just the timetable but the Agenda of business of the Parliament, and to make it more accessible to the public it would be helpful for that to happen. Mr Speaker knows, because I have privately also discussed some of these issues with him, that I also feel strongly that there should be much more information made available to the public because that will improve public participation and knowledge of the business that, at the end of the day, we are doing on behalf of the people of Gibraltar, who elected us.

He says he will introduce a convention in the House to allow the Leader of the Opposition sight of ministerial statements. I welcome that, of course. He did not need to have announced this in any kind of formal way as a convention. He could have followed that practice before and he has not done so. I repeat that I got notice of this Statement one minute before this session started, so that is not a good beginning, but I am not going to hold that against him. If we can start a practice that I have advance sight of the statements with better time, then that would be helpful to us, but can he clarify what kind of notice he expects to give the Members on this side, the Leader of the Opposition, in relation to the ministerial statements?

He says that he will advise the Parliament team of the order of questions. Again, that would be welcome for Members on this side, so that we can organise ourselves in response. We would like to know a bit more of the kind of notice we get. It does not need to be huge notice, but for example, so that people who are listening to this debate understand what we are talking about when we file questions a week in advance, we are doing so but often get notice of the order of questions minutes before the session is about to happen, and when we are sitting here on this 175 side of the House there is jumping around from question to question without us being aware, even though others are aware, of the order of the questions.

This important. The Chief Minister, sotto voce, from a sedentary position, seems to be unhappy that I am making these points, but when you go to any kind of association in Gibraltar, you will have a set agenda. They know what they are talking about and in what order they are talking 180 about it. When you come to this Parliament, sometimes we are sitting here on this side of the House without any kind of awareness of the kind of business we are going to take and in what order we are going to take it, so this side of the House cannot organise themselves when we are responding to important issues that affect people's lives. That is the point.

Mr Speaker, in clarification, when he says also that he is going to endeavour to advise us of the 185 Bills that are going to be taken, of course some Bills are on the Agenda for months without us really being aware when they are going to be taken. Often there are about 20 Bills and he knows that ... Yes, he does answer some of the questions, although I tend to have to chase him on WhatsApp for information, but for example, in this particular meeting today he knows that I also have asked him about which Bills are going to be taken and I still do not know which Bills are going 190 to be taken from among the ones that are on the list.

So while I welcome it, it has to then be seen in the delivery of these commitments, in the notice that we are going to get and in the organisation of the Agenda, and also that that information that is passed on to us is also passed to the public, because the public is sitting at home and wants to know which Bills are going to be taken, which questions and in what order. If someone is 195 interested in Education questions, they do not want to be sitting at home thinking, 'When are the Education questions going to come up?' They want to be told when the Educational questions are going to come up. (Interjection)

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition for his 200 reflections, which reflect an extreme lack of generosity in the way that he has approached the Government's attempt to modernise the way the Parliament works. He has managed to get up and turn every virtue into a sin in the way that he has approached the remarks that I have made.

Mr Speaker, I have been now a Member of this House since 2003, which is 20 years, although I do not feel as if 20 years have passed, but when I first arrived in this place you were then a much 205 younger-looking Clerk of the House and the hon. Member had just left as a Government Minister. In the time that I was here, the practice that I experienced was the practice that had been established when he was a Minister. Nothing changed from 2003 – and I hear the hon. Gentleman say from a sedentary position, which I welcome ... a recognition that the practice under the former GSD administration was not a good one. Not surprising, Mr Speaker, because that is the reality, 210 and he then went on to lead a party that suggested that things should be done in a different way.

But, Mr Speaker, let's be very clear –

Hon. K Azopardi: Will the hon. Member give way?

Hon. Chief Minister: Of course. If I have made a factually incorrect statement that he did not 215 go on to lead a party, that he was not a Minister, that he did not leave in 2003, I am happy for him to clarify. If he is going to get up to comment, then I am not going to give way. Is he going to correct any factual statement I have made? A factual statement?

Hon. K Azopardi: Yes, Mr Speaker, I am going to correct a factual statement, because what I 220 did not say was that the GSD practice was not a good practice, what I said was ... When I was sitting, I said the practice was not a good one, meaning the historic practice of this House was not a good one. Under the previous administration, under the AACR or indeed the GSLP before 1996, it was not a good practice, and when I was a Minister on that side, even though I did not have 225 control of the Agenda because I was not the Leader of the House, I often used to say that I wanted to have parliamentary reform, but it actually was the Leader of the Opposition on this side of the House who never wanted to engage on working practices.

230 Hon. Chief Minister: Well, Mr Speaker, as I have demonstrated today, you do not need to engage with the Leader of the Opposition, because you can unilaterally get up and change things for yourself, (Interjection) as I did after 2011, without the engagement of then Leader of the Opposition or the subsequent Leaders of the Opposition, given that both had been Ministers in the Government that had not made the changes.

235 So let's be very clear. What we have seen from the hon. Gentleman this afternoon is not to welcome the progress made, it is the very definition of churlishness. It is to demonstrate a desire only to welcome those reforms that he wishes to see welcomed. In the 20 years that I have been in this House, and, as he now says, in all the time that he was in this House before me, and even before, no Leader of the Opposition has been given a statement by a Chief Minister to read before or during the delivery of a statement by a Chief Minister. Today, he has been given it one minute
240 before, and it is not enough. Well, even if he gets it one minute before, at least he is able to follow what I am saying, and that will aid him in being able to understand what I am saying to the House and prepare himself to clarify. I hope to be able to give him as much notice as possible. In future instances, I may be able to give him overnight notice of a statement I am going to make, or half 245 an hour, or 15 minutes or 30 seconds, but my commitment is that if I am going to have a piece of paper printed in front of me, once that statement is settled I will let him have it on an embargoed basis. If I let him have it overnight and I need to change it, I will give him the updated version when it is updated.

So, in the context of statements, I would have thought, Mr Speaker, that at least he would recognise that it is better to have a written statement before him when I am delivering it, for the 250 purposes of seeking clarification etc. Did we get any suggestion that that was helpful? No. What we got was simply, 'I have only had it for 60 seconds.' The 'without sounding churlish' sounds remarkably churlish from him. It sounds, actually, more than churlish. It sounds unconstructive and it sounds negative, which is really quite something given it has come from somebody who says that his hallmark in local politics is to be positive.

255 It is therefore not untypical to hear him say that more needs to be done. He always says that more needs to be done. He always says he is going to be the one who is going to change things. He always says he is the one who is going to do things in a different way. He never says what he is going to do in a different way. He never says what he is going to change and what it is that he is going to do differently. For example, he might as well go around saying he is going to reduce debt 260 and undo the pay freeze, although that would require something called a magic money tree.

Mr Speaker: Chief Minister, you are digressing from the ...

265 Hon. Chief Minister: I accept that, Mr Speaker. I got carried away by how some people say one thing that is completely opposite to the other thing they say and are unable to reconcile it, but Mr Speaker – (Interjection)

270 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, on a point of order, you asked him to stick to the issue, and in excusing himself he is just having a second bite at the cherry of diversion.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have no appetite for cherries. I am sorry if I went down the wrong route. They really are not in my diet, and I do want to stick to my diet.

275 The hon. Gentleman then goes on to say that of course these things should be dealt with in the Parliamentary Reform Subcommittee and that it is dreadful that it has not met, although he forgets there that we have been dealing – (Interjection) No, he forgets there, Mr Speaker, that we have been dealing with a pandemic and Brexit. He mentions that when he gets further down the line and talks about us meeting in the third week of the month. I will come to that in a moment.

Of course we have not been able to enjoy the benefit of meeting hon. Members in Select Committee – which we wanted to do in a number of them, not least the Disability Select Committee, the Environment Select Committee and the Constitutional Reform Select Committee – because it has just not been possible. There are only so many hours in a day and there are only so many opportunities to direct attention to work that needs to be done. If he wants that as a mea culpa, then he can have that as mea culpa. We are just not able to do more in the minutes and hours available in the day whilst also trying to deliver a safe and secure Brexit deal that is beneficial to Gibraltar and whilst also having to deal with the exigencies of Brexit, which now everybody just thinks is the same bleeding excuse etc. No, that is the reality of what we have had to deal with.

What I have not had from him, obviously because he understands that these are issues that have been more important, is an email asking me when the Parliamentary Reform Select Committee is going to meet, and putting it on the Agenda and saying, as he does when it is in his interest to know which Bills we are going to deal with, ‘Fabian, when are we going to meet in Parliamentary Reform Committee? These are the things that I propose we should be dealing with.’ I cannot recall when he has sent me those emails. Given that he has not had to deal with COVID or Brexit, I am surprised that, if these were such important things, I have not had that from him.

The other question is meeting in the third week. It is unfair, in my view, and just as churlish for the hon. Gentleman to say that this is aspirational as far as we are concerned. We have certainly wanted to meet, as often as we can, in this House once a month. We demonstrated that from December 2011, when we kept the steadiest pace of monthly meetings – in fact, I think we only stopped when the refurbishment was ongoing in this place – for a period of six years until the Brexit conundrum hit, and then it became impossible because we had to deal with all of the issues, first with the Withdrawal Agreement etc. Incidentally, I remind the hon. Gentleman that just after the last election we immediately went on to deliver the Withdrawal Agreement and then we went on to deliver the New Year’s Eve Agreement.

So it is not fair, in my view, by any objective assessment, to say that our meetings in the third week of the month are an issue that has been aspirational when we have demonstrated real commitment to that and the record is there for anyone to see. Therefore, working out in the calendar when we are going to meet is not difficult. We tend to meet on the Tuesday or Wednesday of the third week. We tend to meet towards the end of that week with Chief Minister’s Questions at three o’clock on the Thursday, other questions dealt with thereafter, then the Friday left over for legislation and motions, where appropriate, and if we have a lot and we need to go into the other week, then we do it in that way also. That is more ability to plan than is available, I think, in most parliaments.

What we are looking at, at the moment, and what people should understand from outside this place ... what we are looking to now make even clearer, is what happens in those pockets for meetings to facilitate hon. Members, who I know in great measure have other jobs outside of Parliament – not that I am saying this is part time for them, but they have other jobs outside of Parliament. We meet at three o’clock in the afternoon, which means they get to run their working day in the mornings, we get to do most of our business in the afternoons – unless we have to meet in a morning, exceptionally, for example, at Budget time – and we get the benefit of working with our civil servants, who finish at 3.30 in the afternoon. So it works for everyone. A lot of detail is already there and we have not deviated from that, other than not to meet. If we have not stuck to that, we have not met, so they have had other opportunities to meet, or we have said, exceptionally, we have to meet in the fourth week etc. It is hugely churlish to suggest that they are not able to plan. They have to plan to be here the Wednesday, the Thursday and the Friday of the third week of the month from about three o’clock in the afternoon, sometimes 3.30. What we are looking at and people need to understand is how we regulate that time. So in terms of diary purposes, I think they do get the opportunities that most would expect them to be able to have, and the public is aware of that and should be even more aware of that now, but most people I speak to know it is the third week of the month, absent the very difficult period we have had.

330 Of course, the June session is different because it is the Budget session. It goes on for longer. We get the right date for the Budget. I inform hon. Members. We were not even informed of when the Budget was going to be. We had to be ready to deal with the Budget as soon as the time was up for the Bill to be dealt with. That caused huge angst when hon. Members were in Government. I do note that the hon. Member is decrying the practice of the Government that he was a Member 335 of – and all other Governments, he says, but he includes in that, whether he likes it or not, decrying the practice of his own Government – surprising, Mr Speaker, not least because he talks about going back to 1996 in many of the things that he says publicly.

Never before had a timetable been published until we were elected in 2011. The timetable that was published included all of the business the Government could deal with in a particular day 340 and the names of all those who would answer questions. What I am proposing now, which I hope will be of assistance to hon. Members – I am sure it will be of assistance to hon. Members and to members of the public – is the list of those who will answer questions on a particular day. So today, all of those who we are ready to answer questions with now have their names on – not the Order Paper, which will continue to be the same – the published timetable.

345 Why do we do it that way? For a simple reason: in this Parliament, quite unlike in other parliaments, we have no control over supplementaries. Mr Speaker, it is up to you whether supplementaries are 10 in a particular line of questioning, or two, and that may depend on whether Members are asking questions which you think are relevant or not, but we receive the questions when they are allowed. Those questions can take longer or shorter – you have given a 350 Statement today on preliminaries – and can lead, although the Rules say they should not, to a debate, in effect, which we must not have at Question Time, we must have, as Speaker Canepa used to remind us, under motions. So we are unable to say that questions to the hon. Lady, who I think on this Order Paper has two questions, will take five minutes or 50 minutes. I am unable to say whether the questions to the Hon. Minister for Digital Services and Health – although there 355 are probably 30 of them – are going to take 30 minutes or three hours. So we cannot say, given the procedure that we have, Education questions – to take the example the hon. Member was talking about – will be at four o'clock, because four o'clock could be eight o'clock. What we can say is that those questions are ready to be answered today, and therefore, as long as the motion of Question Time enables us to deal with them, they are ready to be dealt with today. Hon.
360 Members will see in what has been published that there are two that will not be ready to be dealt with today: of course, my own, because as Leader of the House I would answer tomorrow at 3 p.m., at Chief Minister's Questions; and Minister Bossano, who is not in the House today and therefore would be able to answer his questions tomorrow. That is how we are going to ensure that people can see that the questions they may be interested in would be able to be answered 365 today during the course of the afternoon.

I am very happy to sit down with the Leader of the Opposition – the one that I know, not the churlish one that sometimes pops up; the Keith that knows the Fabian of the past 30 years – to agree a mechanism where we might be able to give even more certainty about it – the positive 370 Keith, the one I miss – so that we might be able to find a way of giving greater certainty to members of the public about when questions are going to be answered. But at the moment we are doing as much as we can to ensure the public gets that notice – and so that they can plan for themselves, because if a Member does not have a question for those who are going to be down on the published timetable, they do not need to come to the House on that particular day if they have not got other matters.

375 When are we able to do that? We will try to do that by the lunchtime of the day in question. The hon. Gentleman talks about them giving seven days' notice. Well, they give the notice that the Rules require and that is the end of their job until the questions have to be answered. The machinery of Government then goes into overdrive to prepare all of the answers and collate all of the information. So there are bevies of civil servants preparing the information to get the answers 380 ready. That does not mean they can all be ready for the same time. One particular Member may ask a question that requires particularly lengthy statistical information to be provided, and therefore, for example, the Minister for Health, who is ready to answer today, may not be ready to answer today because one of his questions may require statistical information and it is going to take an extra day or two. And so there is a lot of work going on, on this side, before we are able to say the Minister for Health is available to answer questions in the afternoon because all his questions are ready. That is how we will do our best to ensure that we are able to provide the information to the public and hon. Members and to further refine the practice that we introduced after 2011 of giving this information and meeting with regularity once a month, the third Thursday of the month.

Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman said I did not need to read out that I was going to give sight of ministerial statements. The reason for reading that out, and to put it on Hansard, is to require me to do that in order to keep to my own commitment to the House and entrench that commitment as Leader of the House so that future Leaders of the House will either need to comply with that which I have called a convention or say that they will not, or indeed improve upon what I have said will be the convention by saying that they are going to give at least 30 minutes or provide a protocol to that effect. At least I have made clear that that is the convention I am going to comply with, unless there is a reason where I cannot. For example, I may have to go into the back room now and craft a statement on something that is an emergency, and then I would give you, Mr Speaker, in seeking your leave to deliver the statement, the handwritten photocopy, and I would give the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition the handwritten photocopy. But I am trying to ensure that we are progressing things, that we are modernising things, that we are changing things always in the right direction.

So I do not think it is fair, proper or anything less than extremely churlish to say that this is not a good beginning. Far from it. It is much less than a beginning, because we have done a lot of this work already, from 2011 onwards, but it is already a huge step in the right direction, which, as he has admitted, when he was a Minister he was unable to influence in the Government that he was a Member of. At least it shows us what sort of influence he can have in achieving things which are not in his control.

Mr Speaker, on the question of the order of questions, I think it is important that people do understand, because the hon. Gentleman said there is no Agenda for this meeting – they do not know what they are going to be dealing with. That is absolutely and completely incorrect. There is an Agenda for this meeting. It is called the Order of Proceedings. It is provided by the Parliament, it has always been provided by the Parliament, and hon. Members know that when the meeting opens, the first thing we do is say a prayer and the second thing we do is the minutes, then you make your announcements, then any Government statements are provided, any documents are laid on the table, then the next item of business is Answers to Questions. They know they are turning up here for Answers to Questions, and they know already the sort of order in which questions are dealt with and we are just going to give them more detail. And they know that after questions, written answers are tabled and they know that after that we deal with Bills, and they know that after that we deal with Government motions, and they know that after that we deal with Private Members' motions. That Agenda has been established for generations, so it is incorrect factually to say that hon. Members do not know what Agenda they are going to be dealing with, that there is no set Agenda. Quite the opposite is true.

On Bills, Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman, I said in my Statement, seeks information from me and I try to provide information to him. I am seeking to ensure that the information I provide is as updated as possible. The position is that they now have six weeks of publication, unless something is urgent, to prepare for a Bill. If what they are saying is that they prepare for a Bill only when I tell them that it is going to be dealt with, fair enough. I can understand that there is pressure of work in other respects, but we do try to answer the hon. Members' questions. What I am saying is we are going to try to provide even more detail, not just to hon. Members but also to the public, who may have an interest in a particular debate. Yes, it is true that there are some Bills that have lived on the Order Paper for some time, the victims also of the pandemic and the Brexit negotiations. I am very keen to ensure that by the end of the lifetime of this Parliament, which will be during the 435 course of this calendar year, we will have cleared all of the Bills that are outstanding, so none fall over on Parliament being dissolved, and in fact that they should be dealt with in good time.

Mr Speaker, I think I have dealt with all the points that the hon. Gentleman, if I may say so again, ungenerously raised, but we will not be deterred in seeking to continue the work of modernisation of the House.

440 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

445 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I want to thank the Chief Minister for coming up with this new plan framework and for giving us this information. It definitely is better late than never, but my question, for clarification, would be why now, four years into the term? And does he expect people to actually accept this move by him and his Government as a genuine incentive and in good faith? Can he understand that perhaps people might not have faith or trust in this new incentive? I think the excuse of Brexit or the pandemic is not one that really can accompany the plans that have been announced today. Why has the Chief Minister waited to announce this months, probably, before a General Election?

450 Hon. Chief Minister: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

The hon. Lady, I think, is a little more generous in her approach than the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition, although her scepticism could best be described in another religion as her being a little bit of a doubting Thomas. I will tell you why, Mr Speaker: because we are not introducing this four years into this term – first of all, because we are not four years into this term, we are three years into this term, and that is important to understand, in particular by all those who are, I understand, living their lives believing that they are on the cliff of the election about to be called. We are three years and three months into the lifetime of this parliament, we are not four years gone – although I do recall, as an aside and with amusement that I am sure he will share, Mr Clinton’s declaration on television last year, I think last February, that we were about to have a General Election then, in March or May last year.

465 What we are doing here, and the hon. Lady has to reflect on, is further refining the practice we brought into effect in December-January 2011-12. We are refining that further. We are ensuring that the timetable is going to be even more precise, insofar as we are able, and providing that, therefore, people have even greater clarity of what we are going to do, although they now have the clarity and she has the clarity that is the third week of the month etc. That is the answer to her question of whether we are genuine about doing this, because we have been doing this.

470 I do have to say to her that I thought it was a little bit of a betrayal of the approach that she is taking to this and other matters to refer to Brexit and the pandemic as an excuse, which was the word she used. I really wish that Brexit were just an excuse and that COVID and the pandemic were just an excuse. They are not an excuse. They have been the most difficult issues to deal with, and members of the public, who sometimes have a better ability to reflect on matters than any of us here have, I think do understand that these were genuine hurdles in the way of us being able to continue the practices that we introduced in December-January 2011-12. She was here from 475 2015, so she had the benefit before June 2016. Indeed, the campaign started and we did not have a meeting that May or that June because of the campaign. She knows that we were having those meetings. She knows that they had that third week of the month. Hon. Members who left in 2015 knew that they could plan in that way. So we have not waited until the last minute. We have not done this with any lack of genuine desire to make changes in the last month of a Parliament or in 480 the last months of a Parliament. We are bringing back and further improving the reforms that we led on from January 2012.

I hope she will reflect on what I have said in reply and that she will see this as a genuine approach by the Government to deliver against this desire that we have espoused to assist them and assist members of the public to better follow these proceedings, and indeed to make it easier 485 for people who may have families and might want to, in the future, consider forming a part of the life of this Parliament as candidates, and, as Members, that they can plan, that it is possible to have a family life that goes with the Parliament because you are talking about three days in the third week of the month when you might be a little late when things might be harder, but otherwise you are not at the whim of the Leader of the House, expecting to be told when Parliament is going to be called etc., which was the case before us until January 2012.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Just by way of clarification on the Statement, there seems to be an assumption in everything that has been said so far that ministerial statements are reserved for the Chief Minister. That obviously is not the case. I would be grateful for clarification, because looking at one of your rulings, Mr Speaker, from 31st July 2020, going back to some of the comments that Speaker Canepa made back in 2019 when he was quoting House of Commons procedure, looking at the definition of a ministerial statement, I quote:

What is a ministerial statement? Government Ministers may make oral statements to Parliament which usually address major incidents, government policies or actions

Then there is a comment that says:

The important thing here is that after making a statement the Minister responds to questions on its topic from MPs.

Mr Speaker, I would observe that perhaps in the past there were topics that would require clarification from the House, of a Minister, but I feel that perhaps the procedure of ministerial statements outside those of the Chief Minister's remit should be reinforced, so that we do not hear matters of national importance from Ministers outside this House in private gatherings, organisations, before being ventilated in this House. I would invite the Chief Minister to comment on that, please.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Mr Clinton has made his statement that there is an assumption that statements are by the Chief Minister, having heard what I have said today, because I specifically said 'ministerial statements' and I said specifically a copy would be provided to the Leader of the Opposition and a relevant shadow Minister. My words actually contradict that which he says is the assumption. So having specifically set out that the procedure I am providing for is not limited to statements by me as Chief Minister or as Leader of the House but by Government Ministers, I am demonstrating that the Government understands that statements can be made on any matter which is considered by the Government to require a Government statement by any of the relevant Government Ministers who would then share, applying this convention, their statements with the relevant shadow at the appropriate time.

If what the hon. Gentleman is saying is that they would like more statements from Ministers on matters of national importance, well then I would say this to him: I think we have done them in the past, I think we will do them in the future, but we will have to determine when it is appropriate to do that, and that comes from the nature of this Parliament sitting the third week of each month for approximately three days. If you have something that you need to say in the first week of the month or in the second week of the month, it is very difficult, if it is an issue of national importance, on some occasions, to wait six days or to wait seven days because you have to make a particular statement.

If hon. Members want to ask a question about that, then of course they get an answer from a relevant Minister. An answer is not a statement, but they can follow up with questions and supplementaries so far as you might allow it. But when you make a statement as a Minister in this House, what you make it about etc. will have to be informed by the discretion of the Government in the context of a Parliament that is not in permanent session as the Parliament in the United Kingdom is. In the United Kingdom, from Monday to Friday, absent the period of the long vacation, the Easter vacation, the Christmas vacation and party conferences, Parliament is in session, and so a Minister is not able to say, 'I had to say this in that place because I could not say it in Parliament,' because Parliament is there. Here, out of the 30 days of the month, Parliament is sitting three afternoons, and so the exercise of the discretion of what can and cannot be said in a Parliament versus doing it outside is obviously going to be balanced in a different way.

The hon. Member might want to reflect that I have made a number of Statements in this House because we are in this House. That is to say I have wanted to inform the House about progress of treaty negotiations and I have wanted to inform the House about matters relating to the COVID pandemic because the House was meeting and therefore it was important to set out for posterity in the Hansard where we were then, but not because those Statements were, on most occasions, otherwise time sensitive. In other words, I did not wait until the third week of the month to say something that I needed to say the first week of the month. But in many instances if you go beyond that remit, it may be that we would be required to wait for longer than is in the national interest, as he says, because he is talking about things of national importance, if we were to bring things to this House than if we were able to say them.

And so, Mr Speaker, the Government will continue its practice of, of course, respecting this House. We do so in the respect of the convention that once a question is asked about a particular subject we would not make a statement which gives the answer to that question unless we had to because it is in the national interest, so that hon. Members can have the answer to their question instead of a statement by the Government in a press release etc. But beyond that, it is very difficult to see how we can extend the practice without interfering with the other 27 days that the Government has to do business at a particular time.

I hope all that is helpful, Mr Speaker, and, apart from the initial churlishness, I do sense that the House does welcome the remarks I have made.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Elliott Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, just one point of clarification. Given the measures that the Chief Minister has indicated he wishes to deploy in this House to make everyone's lives a lot easier, he mentioned the General Election twice in his contribution and what I would simply ask is whether the Government has a position in relation to fixed-term parliaments.

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, the Government does have a position in relation to fixed-term parliaments. We have indicated that position, in 2015 and in 2019, and that is that we do not believe a Fixed-term Parliaments Act is in the interest of this community. I do not think anybody has suggested that it is.

If I may say so to the hon. Gentleman with respect, he should look at the practice in the United Kingdom, where the Fixed-term Parliaments Bill, I think, survived two Parliaments, if that. I do not believe it is in the interest of democracy that there should be a fixed-term parliament in a system like ours, where we are not electing a head of state, we are electing a head of Government. There is fixed-term provision in other democracies which are very successful and thriving democracies. In most of them, that election is to elect a head of state, not to elect a head of Government, and those are different dynamics. In the context of a presidential election, you are looking at different dynamics, whether it is in Italy, France or the United States, whilst if you are looking to elect a head of Government and you look at most of the Overseas Territories, you look at the Commonwealth and you look at the United Kingdom itself, absent that blip after 2011 when the Fixed-term Parliaments Act came into effect in the United Kingdom, the lack of a fixed-term parliamentary provision, I think, has served common law jurisdictions well. We have no inclination to change that, although I suppose if you are one of the people sitting in Opposition – and I have been there, too – knowing the date of the General Election at least assists in planning, if I may say so from my own experience, honeymoons and holidays, if nothing else.

585 Mr Speaker: Let's move on to the next matter.

Questions for Oral Answer

HOUSING, EMPLOYMENT, YOUTH AND SPORT

Q1/2023

Employment Tribunal – Number of cases and progress

Clerk: (iv) Petitions; (v) Announcements; (vi) Papers to be laid; (vii) Reports of Committees; (viii) Answers to Oral Questions.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, can the Minister for Employment provide updated statistics in respect of the number of cases currently going through the Employment Tribunal process, with breakdowns in respect of what stage they are at in the process?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, there are currently a total of 109 cases going through the Employment Tribunal process. This includes the allocation of chairpersons, mediators, applications that are undergoing hearings or directions and applications that have been heard and are awaiting judgment from chairpersons. The status of these is as follows: awaiting appointment of chairperson, 59; awaiting appointment of mediator, 10; awaiting mediation outcome, six; awaiting response, two; undergoing hearing or direction, 31; awaiting judgment, one.

Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I failed to include this when I wrote out the question, but the Minister has provided me with the information in the past. Does he have to hand information as from when these cases have been filed at the Employment Tribunal, so that we can monitor the progress? I believe somewhere dating back to 2020, and it might even be a case of 2019 ... I do not know. The Minister will perhaps have that information to hand, as in the past.

Hon. S E Linares: No, Mr Speaker, I do not seem to have that information, but I am willing to pass this information to the hon. Member.

Mr Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I was just going to ask about the 59 awaiting the appointment of a chairperson. It is exactly the same number as the hon. Member gave some months ago, and either it is a coincidence or there has been no progress. Can the Minister explain why several months ago he said there were 59 awaiting the appointment of a chairperson? I did indicate to him at the time that that was of some concern because, as my hon. colleague to my right,

610 Mr Reyes says, there were then some isolated cases that had been filed in 2020, and obviously some in 2021 and 2022, that were still awaiting the appointment of a chairperson. He says he does not have that specific breakdown, but if it is due to lack of progress, does he agree that it is a matter of some concern that there are people, obviously, who have lost their jobs and put in a claim for unfair dismissal, or whatever it is, and yet their cases have not progressed in more than two years because a chairperson has not been found? What steps will he be taking beyond the ones he has already indicated to the House, because little progress has been made?

615 Hon. S E Linares: Yes, Mr Speaker, it is very coincidental, actually, because the information I have is that there are six new cases pending appointment of chairperson and there are six that have progressed to the next stage. So it is actually a coincidence that it is six and six and it happens to be the same number, 59.

620 As to what the hon. Member has just asked, are we to progress, I think it will be very helpful once we have a permanent chairperson and this will proceed in a smoother way than currently, but until we do that, we will have to continue as we are.

625 Hon. K Azopardi: And given the answer he has just given – which luckily explodes the coincidence, at least, but we have now established that there are 53 historic cases, which is still a huge number and therefore everything that I have said above applies, and he says that will be resolved, or at least made much better with the appointment of a chairperson – does he have a timescale in mind for the appointment of a chairperson? He has said on occasion to the House before that they were taking steps towards the appointment of a chairperson. Given that we are 630 some months on, has there been progress in relation to that person? Has there been an identification of a person, and if so, have the terms of the appointment been agreed?

635 Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, the terms of the appointment have been agreed, the appointment has been published, everything has gone through the process. I think it is to do with – and I think I said it in the last Parliament – the lack of people wanting to do it and therefore we are having ... Yes, it is a problem and we are trying to solve it, to see how best we can appoint someone who can then smoothly go through all these cases.

640 Hon. K Azopardi: So is the answer no to the question has a person been identified?

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, I would not like to say yes or no at this point, because I am not sure, but I will find out.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q2/2023
Children's play parks –
Maintenance and repair of facilities

645 Clerk: Question 2/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

650 Hon. E J Reyes: Can Government provide details in respect of what maintenance and repairs it is currently undertaking in respect of all facilities provided at the children's play parks, together with details of expected completion dates?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, the standard parks and playgrounds maintenance continues in conjunction with GJBS. This is a rolling maintenance programme and is constant.

In terms of other projects, all that is pending at present is the relocation of the Mid Harbours children's playground. We are awaiting delivery of equipment, at which point the project will be completed.

Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

The Minister has provided information in the past that an arrangement had been entered into with GJBS and so on, but my question is what maintenance and repairs it is currently undertaking. It could be as of today or as of the day I filed the question.

When parents, grandparents and so on attend play parks with children, quite often the information being fed through is 'Yes, this is going to be repaired,' and therefore I was asking for expected completion dates, because if a piece of equipment unfortunately gets broken, it may coincide, if it is a simple repair, with an item that is in stock, or it may require sending for that part. Although the Minister has tried to provide a general type of answer, he has not specifically homed in on something in respect of repairs. And again, in respect of maintenance, if I may, Mr Speaker, the Minister has not said because it is better to stitch things up as and when the first signs of wear and tear are noticed, he has said something is scheduled to be happening over the next few months, so that a general overall ... Especially where we have the rubber type of flooring that helps break the impact of a child's fall and so on, on some of them one can see that it is going to need a major overhaul. Seeing that we tend to plan ahead, is that something that is scheduled, and when would that happen?

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member must understand that it is very difficult to give him information on what is being done on a constant basis. If the hon. Member wants, I could give him, every month, a list of things that we have done. I do not have any problem. I will get GJBS to write to the hon. Member and say, 'This month we have done all these.'

We are also hoping that we have the same regime we used to have at one point, which is putting a hotline in each park, where everybody who sees something that is broken can actually have a number and a place to call and say there is a swing broken. These people who are constantly going round all the parks can then go to that specific park and say, 'Okay, the swing is broken,' and either take it off, make it safe, or repair it on the spot. These are the things that they are doing now, and I must say I am really pleased with the regime we have, because they are constantly going around trying to identify where any of the equipment is broken. Therefore, at least one of the things that I am satisfied with is that anything somebody reports or anything that is unsafe is made safe very quickly, or at least as immediately as can be done.

So if the hon. Member wants, I can give him, every month, a list of the things they have done. That is the only thing I can do. I cannot predict what is going to be broken next month in order to be fixed. (Interjection) Yes, and we could well put it on the GSLA website, if you want.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, it is not a question that I am asking every month. I have asked this month, in particular, what maintenance or repairs are currently being undertaken.

If I can use one of the Minister's own examples, by attending one of the play parks you may find that a particular swing is missing, and the Minister has more or less implied in his answer that that swing may have been found to be broken or unsafe and therefore they have removed it completely. Therefore, in the answer to this question one would have expected him to say that in such-and-such a play park area a swing has been removed because it was broken, the hinge had come off,' or whatever – I am asking for the expected completion date – 'and we are awaiting a part that should arrive within a fortnight,' or a month, or six months. That is what I was aiming at.

I know the Minister can feel ... 'Is he being pedantic by asking me every month?' No, sir, if one looks back at the record, this is the first time I have asked for an update of the maintenance and 705 repairs. And again, on the maintenance, when one comes to the Appropriation Bill, the Minister gives a rundown of all they have done, so I can gather the information from there. He also tries to give a prediction. He says, 'We have set aside so much money and hope to carry out this maintenance work and so on.' Seeing that we are now in the last quarter of the current financial year, perhaps the Minister has some information in respect of what maintenance works are currently taking place, because come 31st March, only money that is voted for and approved in the next Budget session can be used for that sort of work.

715 Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, I repeat what I said before: I will try to give him the information we have got and I will pass over to the hon. Member the current information. Again, it is very difficult because if he asked me the question two weeks ago and I answer it today, it is not accurate. So it is very difficult ... what is happening today. It is on a rolling basis all the time, so if I give him an answer today that is appertaining to two weeks, it might not be relevant today. I will speak to the hon. Member about exactly what he wants, and I will facilitate that for him.

720 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q3/2023
GSLA swimming pools –
Reasons for closure and dates

Clerk: Question 3/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

725 Hon. E J Reyes: During which dates have any of the GSLA swimming pools been closed for public use, indicating the reason why?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

730 Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, I will answer together with Question 6.

Mr Speaker: This is Question 3. Can I ask the Hon. Minister to check? This is Question 3.

735 Hon. S E Linares: My apologies, Mr Speaker.
The GSLA accessible pool has been closed since 30th November 2022. The air-treatment system has suffered significant damage to its control mechanism. It was an arduous task to locate and purchase the relevant spares, given that they are in extremely limited supply at present. Thankfully, the part was purchased just prior to the Christmas break and is en route.

740 I would like to add that I have just had a communication from the GSLA in respect of this question and they have managed to patch up the air treatment system so that it will be within a couple of days that the pool will be reopened, even though the parts are en route. So we will be able to have the pool open even sooner and we do not have to wait until the parts come.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

745 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, can I ask the hon. Member does he have an indication as to when the parts are likely to arrive in Gibraltar?

Hon. S E Linares: Well, no, we do not know exactly when they are coming, but if they are en route we can assume days.

Q4 and Q6/2023
Island Games facilities –
Completion and remedial works outstanding; Lathbury Barracks stadium parking

750 Clerk: Question 4/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Can the Minister for Sport update this House with details of what facilities still require full completion or remedial works in respect of all facilities built or refurbished for the 2019 Island Games?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 6.

Clerk: Question 6/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino

Hon. D J Bossino: Please state when the parking facility at the Lathbury Barracks stadium will be made available to the public and how many will be made available.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, I am glad to report that the Lathbury swimming pool itself and the air-treatment system are in the final stages of commissioning. Aside from this, all that remains is the re-turfing of a small area at the Europa Sports Complex. The turf was lifted to conduct remedial works on the waterproofing membrane and the specialist contractor is due to visit soon. This, however, does not affect use of the facility.

In respect of Question 6, the public parking will be made available in coming weeks once the external infrastructure of the complex is complete. This is not in any way affecting the use of the facility by service users. Parking spaces will be made available for users of the complex as well as for non-users and tourists visiting the Upper Rock Nature Reserve. The Government will permit three hours' free parking, as at Midtown, for local residents.

775

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, coming back to the Europa facilities, where the Minister said that a patch was being waterproofed, what area specifically is he talking about? Is he talking about where the rugby playing it is? I am a bit lost as to the exact location within the facility.

780

Hon. S E Linares: Well, it is amazing, Mr Speaker, because the last time I was there with him, I actually pointed it out to him. It is, I would say, the southwest corner of the complex. If he remembers, it was where the complex goes to the corner. I was commenting to the hon. Member how bad it looked and I was annoyed that I had not finished it yet. But it is not affecting the rugby or the cricket, or anybody else. It is just that it is one of those snagging things that the contractor has to finish.

Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I suspected it could have been that area, but given that the other Members of this House, or indeed anyone listening, were not necessarily present with us there ... Does he have an approximate date by when he hopes all that will be done?

Hon. S E Linares: Well, I hope that the next time I go with the hon. Member it will be fixed. I want it done ASAP, so it is just a question of calling them up and trying to make them fix it as soon as possible.

795

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I am not sure if the hon. Member answered the second limb of Question 6. How many parking spaces will be made available?

800

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, this like the Midtown parking. We have a certain amount of parking, all to be used, for everybody. It depends on how much is used on the day. I will give you an example. If we have 30 tourists ... I would not like to give a specific figure, but we have hundreds of parking spaces, and if there are only 30 being used by the tourists, there are still another 40 or 50 that can be used by other users, so there will be enough parking for everyone.

805

Obviously, the regime is different, so it is similar to what you have in Midtown. If you have many tourists coming in and using the space, then the others will not have ... We have had meetings very recently on this and we are confident that it will suffice for the three sections we said – those people who are using the complex, those people who want to just park there because they are spectators or parents who might want to see their children training or playing, and also there will definitely be enough for all those tourists who want to walk up to the Nature Reserve.

810

Hon. D J Bossino: I understand that he is talking about different categorisations of parking spaces and their availability, but does he not have the full number with him? And then I understand that that is then going to be categorised for public use, for tourist use and for those who are going to be using the facilities.

815

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, the last time we went there ... we have at least, now, currently, 120 parking spaces, so there is plenty of parking for ... I asked the question how many tourists do you usually get coming here, and in August, at top peak time, you might get 30 cars coming during the day because it is not only at one given time, so it is rolling again. You might get 10 coming for an hour, then another 10. What I am saying is there are 120 and that will be split as and when needed. Even the days when the Gibraltarians would use it more, which I think is probably the children's sports days, if there are going to be any over there – because there is a running track and it will be, probably, the only place where you have a running track – you might get 40, 50 or 60 parents coming there and parking, and there is plenty of parking even for that, of which they will have hours free.

825

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if I may just ask one supplementary on this – just if the Minister could confirm these 120 parking spaces are all underground? And can he also confirm that the Fire Brigade have issued or are about to issue a petroleum certificate?

830

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, yes and yes, and the petroleum certificate was issued in respect of the occupation by Bassadone Vehicles, who are already in occupation of the two other levels of parking in that area. The hon. Gentleman needs to recall that there are other levels of parking – there are three levels of parking – and the petroleum certificate had to be issued before then, before their occupation was regularised, so I understand that has already been dealt with.

835

If I can be a little helpful to the hon. Gentleman in respect of his questions before, the timings when tourists may likely want to use this facility – other than on sports days, as the hon. Gentleman has indicated – are likely to be different to the times when local families are going to be accessing with vehicles at the weekend to watch the junior league of football, the running or the swimming, which will be outside of school hours. So we think that this is plentiful provision.

840

Hon. D J Bossino: Just one final point of clarification on the answer. I did not quite catch it. I think it was at the end of his prepared answer. He talked about three hours' free parking at ... I did not catch where. If he can read his answer, it was at the end: three hours' free parking at ...? I did not quite catch it.

845

850 Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, in Midtown for all locals is how I said it. That means that for anybody who comes there it will be the same regime, using the ID card.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q5/2023
Sport England –
Whether similar scheme under consideration

Clerk: Question 5/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government confirm whether it is considering the introduction of a Sport England type scheme?

Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, the Government is not considering a Sport England type scheme.

Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful for the answer, but has the Government considered any other ways it could introduce gateways to young people in order to increase the growth and development of grassroots sports within our community?

Sports England has obviously proved in the United Kingdom to be incredibly successful at allowing young people opportunities in sports, and there are ways, of course, that the Government might be able to find some funding, which might not necessarily need to come from the Government itself, in order to incorporate this type of activity and scheme within our community. So the Government has not explored those opportunities, if they exist?

870

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, we in Gibraltar have very good development programmes for sports. Each association has its own development of sports. We do not intervene in the development of those sports. What we do is support them financially. As the hon. Member knows, we give funds for development to all the associations that apply. There is a system by which they apply when they want to bring people who do coaching, training, all these things for young people, and they are even helped in the funding of that. Through the GSAC, which is the Gibraltar Sports Advisory Council, we have all sports represented and we have discussed ways and means by which we can develop all sports.

I think we are pretty generous in the way we fund all our sportsmen and women here, including the young people and development.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q7/2023
Meetings with housing estate tenants –
Actions under way

885 Clerk: Question 7/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What steps has Government already put in action following meetings with housing estate tenants last month?

890 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, officials from the Housing Works Agency and the Housing Department meet and engage with the committees and tenants' associations from the different housing estates on a regular basis. Since 895 last month's meetings, we have gone through all the requirements put forward by them, and the Housing Department is already attending to their requests and needs, as they always do. Many works have already been completed and other works are being programmed.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, can the Minister expand on the bit where he says 900 many works are being completed and others are being programmed? Can we have some more information on any tangible effects of this?

Hon. S E Linares: Well, Mr Speaker, anybody who walks around the estates will see the difference that painting all the walls in a colour ... and cleaning, which we have concentrated on 905 recently, because yes, we found the tenants' associations were complaining about the lack of cleaning and we have accelerated that. We have got the Housing Works Agency to work with Britannia, the contractor company, in order for them to do what they should be doing and what they get paid for. I am happy to report that most of the tenants are now very happy because they see that they are going round, they are cleaning, they are painting, and we hope that we have a 910 more regular rolling maintenance programme in all these states.

Q8/2023

Road resurfacing programme – Update

Clerk: Question 8/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government update this House on the road surfacing 915 programme for 2023?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Transport.

Minister for Transport (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, the road resurfacing programme for the financial year 2023-24 is presently being prepared. However, there have been repairs in areas 920 requiring particular attention during 2022 and these include: Line Wall Road by the youth club; Line Wall Road by Orange Bastion bridge; Europa Road by Europa Mews; Grand Parade – there were two large areas; Levanter Way; Harding's Road – and both these areas are near Europa Point Lighthouse; and South Barracks Parade by the front of St Joseph's School.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Hon. Minister for setting out what the programme might appear to look like over the next 12 months, but clearly, given that the Government has announced Gibraltar's Active Travel Strategy, which of course will form part of a debate that he and I will enjoy tomorrow with other Members, possibly, of this House as well, it is clear to many people who approach me on the subject insofar as the state of the highways and 930 our roads that this an integral part, is it not, of the approach and the Active Travel Strategy that he announced the day before yesterday? I think it is important that the public have reassurance that as part of this ambitious project – as he has, I think, put it himself, and to use his words exactly – this has to go hand in hand with repairs that are made and advance made in terms of 935 road management and the repairs to those main roads which have been expressed to me by many members of the public as in a state of disrepair.

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, although they come together, they are two separate things. One is a strategy and one is a road resurfacing programme, which falls under Technical Services but is not part of the strategy. The strategy is specifically geared towards walking and cycling.

940 The list of roads I have just gone through is what has been done this year. I have said we are deciding and preparing now the list of the roads for next year. But of course in next year's Budget we intend to include funding to improve the state of the roads. Obviously, we know for what reasons this year we have had to do important repairs, but we have not seen any wholesale resurfacing programme projects that done. In every other year we have been in Government, 945 Gibraltar has seen large areas of road resurfaced, and this year, obviously for reasons we have given publicly, we have stuck to the repairs. We expect that next year we will also be tackling roads. We must also be aware – and many constituents have mentioned it to the hon. Member, because I see this in social media, complaining perhaps ... One of the roads that they complain a lot about is the entrance into Gibraltar. They complain about Winston Churchill Avenue, and just 950 to make that section clearer, remember that we are close to completion of the tunnel, and that road, although we appreciate that it is uneven ... We were loath to spend taxpayers' money to do more in that area when we know that the tunnel will mean the vehicles will travel in a different direction, and then, in good time, we will repair that section of road once and for all.

955 Hon. E J Phillips: I think maybe the Minister has misunderstood what I was trying to get at.
Perhaps it might be, on reflection, the question I put. Maybe it is my fault as well in conveying that to the Hon. Minister, but I would have thought that as part of the strategy, which is a separate thing ... I accept that it is a separate thing, but ultimately it is using that same thoroughfare and shared spaces. That is why I put the question to him as to whether the strategy has had a view as 960 to the state of our current roads and whether they need to be done at the same time as this process is being engaged, because clearly we are looking at advancing how we move around our city insofar as this type of active strategy is concerned, with the current state of the infrastructure, and that was really what the question was designed to do. I wonder whether he might be a bit more helpful with that.

965 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, the parts of the programmes that are scheduled for this year are primarily ... Today, cyclists will actually ride on the road. We are developing segregated bicycle lanes which will have their own surface and so on, so we will be looking at the surface of those particular areas and the lanes in areas which will be permanent. I did explain this in yesterday's 970 press conference. Glacis Road will be one of those areas because there is no imminent construction expected in the area. There will be a coloured screed on that bicycle lane to demarcate it as different and segregate it from the main road. Obviously, that area will be in a condition worthy of the users of that lane, which will be bicycles etc. So yes, in areas where there is shared space – for example, past the evacuation roundabout ... Again, every road is to be looked 975 at independently. In that area, for example, the road is not too bad – in fact, it is in quite good condition. It is a question of seeing whether bicycle in on a particular route is off the road using parts of what used to be a pedestrian area or part of a layby, or where maybe parking spaces have been relocated, or whether the bicycling is actually on the road and the area is in a bad state. So it is very difficult to give you a precise reply in that respect.

980 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q9/2023

Bus user surveys –
Number in last three years and publication of results

Clerk: Question 9/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

985 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state how many bus user surveys have been conducted over the last three years, and can the Government state whether it will publish the results of the surveys in full?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Transport.

Minister for Transport (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, no official surveys have been undertaken over the last three years.

995 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, that is an interesting answer. I was expecting to receive the opposite answer, that of course we conduct surveys by users because we want to know how frequently people use the service, the destinations they are going to, and the difficulties they may have in using the service, so the Government is alive to issues of the public in relation to public transportation.

1000 I think the Minister himself actually said to me that we took the view a long time ago that the night bus was deeply unpopular. Well, obviously they must be talking to the drivers about that particular unpopular route. Indeed, I think there was some reference to summer in exchanges in this House before.

1005 Can I get the Government to commit to something as simple as this: to make sure that we understand the needs of the general public when using public transportation? That is the only way we can convince people to use public transport, if we know exactly what they need and what we can deliver as a community.

1010 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, I apologise if I have given the hon. Member the wrong impression. My actual reply said that there have been no official surveys. Remember that we constantly monitor and we are constantly looking at the bus routes. I have prepared a few examples because people are constantly feeding back to us saying, 'We want a service to this destination,' or 'You need to consider bus no. 2 going to certain other areas because of the movement of the Hospital,' for example.

1015 We have recently, on social media, had someone saying that bus route no. 1 is highly convoluted. We looked into that route and saw that bus users actually wanted a convoluted route. They would not be prepared to change buses like we do in other cities, where we jump on no. 1 and then changed over to no. 2 to complete our journey. People want the bus to service every single potential area, so we have looked at that.

1020 We have also surveyed the bus stops. We have a way finder on board each bus. The way finder gives us statistics of how many people get on the bus at every single stop, so in that way we can ascertain whether certain bus stops are relevant or irrelevant.

1025 Some people said there was not a service up to what will now be the new sports stadium. We have looked at many ways of trying to get a bus up there, and so far, with the resources we have, it does not seem to be possible. It is very difficult because of turning circles, and also we need to try to keep the bus as regular as possible. If we extend the bus routes any further, we cannot guarantee a bus every half an hour or every 20 minutes with regularity.

We did one with the STTP. Back in 2017 there was a survey done looking at the whole ... From that we had the improved bus maps on the bus stops, we had the bus tracker, we had various improvements to the bus service. I just wanted to clarify that.

1030 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the answer and the explanation given as to the formal data by way of the way finder that he has explained to this House, but doesn't he agree with me that reliance on anecdotal evidence, as he suggested, and social media posts to govern the way in which you work with public transportation is not the right way, really? A government properly should find the data by conducting surveys on bus users in order to find the best way of moving people around our city. Could I encourage him one more time to accept that the only way we can properly improve the bus service is by improving the data that we have about its use?

1040 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, we listen to the bus users. Fortunately, in Gibraltar a lot of people use social media, and as you know, you yourselves rely an awful lot on social media as well. I think we both use that media. I think, today, everyone vents their anger, and it is a great way of doing it, especially if your face is not on the picture. No one knows who you are, so you can really express yourself freely and give an honest opinion. We do that, but we also receive letters and phone calls, and people will tell us what they think. Sometimes they will complain and sometimes they will congratulate us.

1045 The bus drivers also are there, listening to the public, and via the bus manager we do get feedback. When I ask certain questions – why can't this be done? – the bus manager already has an answer for the question because of the experience. Remember, they are the people who run the service and they know exactly what the user needs, and they relay that back.

1050 So we have a number of ways of getting feedback without physically having to go into a big survey. I am not saying it is not useful. I think it is useful to have bus surveys every so often, but not ... We had a big one in 2017 and I am sure it is something we will consider, but we are constantly monitoring the bus fleets and the service being provided and trying to improve it as best as possible.

1055 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q10-11/2023
Vehicle emissions –
Two-stroke motorcycles; vehicles entering from Spain

Clerk: Question 10/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1060 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government confirm, in the context of its ban of two-stroke motorcycles, that it will curtail the circulation of these vehicles around residential areas, the centre of town and other areas where emissions are having an impact on human health?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Transport.

1065 Minister for Transport (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 11.

Clerk: Question 11/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1070 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, given that a significant number of motorcycles are coming in from Spain, what steps are the Government taking, with or without dealing with their counterparts across the border, to reduce emissions from these vehicles on our streets?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Transport.

1075 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, at present there are no plans to curtail circulation of these types of vehicles throughout Gibraltar. We have, however, been considering for some time the possibility of implementing low-emission zones.

The Government is taking no steps at present to control, with regard to emissions, the entry of any particular or specific types of vehicles. As the hon. Member may appreciate, there are European and international directives addressing vehicle manufacturing standards that will result in manufacturers producing vehicles that produce less or zero otherwise emissions.

1085 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am interested to hear more about the low emission zones. I think I actually heard the same sort of answer from his predecessor. But it is clear that two-stroke motorcycles have a massive effect on the health of young lungs and the adult population in terms of human health, and I think this a matter that has been accepted by Members opposite. In fact, some of the reports that I have seen emanating from Government agree with that proposition and therefore I am surprised that the Government is not looking at reducing the circulation of these types of vehicles around our town in specific residential areas, because that is where the key moment is in reducing those emissions and to prevent those harmful fumes affecting the lungs of many in our community.

1090 So I would ask him this question, if I may: when does he propose to implement low-emission zones in Gibraltar, given the fact that the Government has been considering it for some time?

1095 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, as yet, I cannot give the hon. Member a definite answer as to when this will happen. The fact is that we are looking to see how best to tackle these low-emission zones and in which areas.

But just to reply and to give a bit of further information on the two-strokes, remember two-stroke motorcycles just have not been manufactured. In fact, we have not had an import of a two-stroke motorcycle since – again, as far as I can recall – 1999, I believe, so they are a dying breed. These motorcycles are not being brought into Gibraltar because they are just not being manufactured, but that does not mean that there are none of these motorbikes available, and there are numbers that do come through the Frontier every day, but of course locals also have them. Remember that these motorcycles have to go to MoT just like any other vehicle, and what the law states in that respect – the European laws inclusive – is that a motorcycle or a car, a motor vehicle, needs to conform to the emissions standards as at the date they were manufactured. So what does happen invariably over time is that these motor vehicles will progressively worsen in their emissions, because they do not service them, because they get gunge in the exhaust pipe etc. This is why every time they need to go to MoT they are checked, and if they do not conform they fail. And the same we expect from ITV the other side. So any motorbike which is roadworthy and has the relevant documentation has passed these tests for those vehicles. And as I said, these two-stroke vehicles, I do see them occasionally, but the truth is that you see them less and less all the time.

1115 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the answer, but of course we do not really have any control whatsoever insofar as what is coming across the border, and I would have thought that given this Government's commitment to Green Gibraltar and a Child-friendly City, we would use Brexit as an opportunity to focus on creating spaces in Gibraltar which are more breathable, if I can put it like that. There must be something that we can do with counterparts across the ...
1120 because clearly the vast majority of these vehicles are coming in from Spain, and therefore there must be something we can do to manage that, insofar as the air quality in Gibraltar and the pollution emanating from these vehicles. I just wondered whether the Minister had any view as to whether Brexit is a mechanism, and given the green credentials they profess to have, whether they are doing anything about that in that context.

1125 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, the two-stroke motorcycles that come through the frontier throughout the whole of Europe. It is not just La Linea and the surrounding area. Personally, yes, I agree, I would rather not have any vehicles that emit, and I think yes, when we develop the low-emission zones and the chances ... Again, we are looking at different areas, but the centre of town is one of the key areas where we will try to push that, and I am working with my colleague's team and Minister Cortes to see whether there are some drafts, some proposals and some mechanisms of how this can work.

1130 Anything that we prohibit entry, the chances are that there will be a prohibition on exit, so where do you draw the line in terms of emissions? There are vehicles which are Euro 3 and prior to that, that people own and cross the Frontier with as well, so again I think I have said because these vehicles, although they are undesirable – I agree completely, they are undesirable – and the noise they make sometimes is greater than a four-stroke, I think we will and we have seen a massive decrease, and the work that we are trying to do with emission zones will help in the future.

1140 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q12/2023

Government electric cars and motorcycles – Comparison with petrol vehicles re repairs, maintenance and reliability

Clerk: Question 12/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1145 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state, given that it has been using EV cars and motorcycles, how these vehicles have performed in relation to repairs, maintenance and reliability in comparison to previous petrol-powered vehicles?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Transport.

1150 Minister for Transport (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, the information being requested by the hon. Member is not available for comparative purposes.

1155 Hon. E J Phillips: Is any information available to the Minister as to the efficacy of e-vehicles in this context? As the Minister will recall, there was much fanfare by the Government in relation to this development, one which I think Members on this side of the House supported. I just wondered whether there is any assessment of these particular vehicles. I would have thought there would have been, but if it is not actually available in the way in which I have described, is it available in other ways, does the Minister know?

1160 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, it is not available, and I will explain in a moment why it is not available to us, other than the fact that we can rely on manufacturers' details and we know exactly how an electric vehicle will perform in terms of emissions compared to an internal combustion engine or whatever.

1165 The reason why we cannot give that reply is because we used to service all cars within one department, within what used to be a technical service garage department, and obviously they do still service some of our fleet – in fact, they service the refuse trucks and a lot of the older-type vehicles – but a lot of these other vehicles, these new electric vehicles, are serviced by the garages, so we cannot marry the statistics that we have for, say, the old G1, which was a Rover, I think, and maybe the new Jaguar. That is why it is impossible to actually [inaudible] other than relying on manufacturers' statistics, which are proven.

1170 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): If it is of assistance, Mr Speaker, the new G1s, the electric ones, have never had to have their oil changed. They have never had to go, because of any of the internal combustion engine needing any attention etc ... I think they have been down when we had the accident in Spain and the rear axle issue arose, and I think there was an issue with the electric window, but no need to change the spark plugs, none of that.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q13/2023
Dockyard project –
Works re access route and cost

Clerk: Question 13/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

1180 Hon. D J Bossino: When will the new south district access through the dockyard project start and end, and how does the Government intend to finance the project?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Transport.

1185 Minister for Transport (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, no dates have yet been set to commence the works for the project involving the proposed access route through the commercial shipyard. The detailed designs and easement negotiations are in progress already since the takeover of Gibdock by new shareholders.

1190 Hon. D J Bossino: Is that why he is not able to answer the second limb of the question, which is how the Government intends to finance the project, because it is at too much of an early stage as far as the issues that he has raised are concerned?

1195 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): No, Mr Speaker, because the clear indication is that it is not going to be financed in this financial year. It is likely going to be financed in the next financial year and we will have that debate in June when we have the Estimates put for 2022-23.

Hon. D J Bossino: Do I take it from that that it is the Government that intends to finance this project?

1200 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the Government is answering a question that has been put to it, which therefore the Government considers it is responsible for, and therefore the Government would be financing it.

Hon. D J Bossino: Just one final question, Mr Speaker. Just so that we have clarity, is the project going to be as outlined on page 55 of the manifesto under the title 'A new connection between Queensway and Rosia Road'? Is it that one?

1210 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, an announcement about the final stage of the project will be provided when the announcement about the final stage of the project is published.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I am not asking that question. I was unable to identify this project, which impacts on the dockyard area and dealing with road connections. Can he just be 1215 helpful and answer the question? Is it the one which is referred to on page 55 of the manifesto under the heading that I have just put to him across the floor of the House, or are we talking about another project?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it is not a question of being helpful or unhelpful. He is talking about a manifesto and the hon. Member should know – he has been in Parliament before, not just this time – that we are not answerable for the manifesto. The manifesto is a product of the Gibraltar Socialist Labour Party and the Liberals. We are the Government, and so we are here to implement that manifesto but not to comment on it. If I started to comment on it, you might tell me off for doing so. There is a manifesto commitment to do a particular thing. The Government then goes off and turns that into Government policy. When the Government makes the announcement about the policy, the exact details are provided for as the Government policy.

1225 It will be a road through Gibdock to the south, the exact details of which the Government will announce when it is the Government making the announcement, which will be inspired by the thing that the GSLP Liberals sought a mandate for, but the Government Technical Services may tell us, 'You might have put this in the manifesto as candidates, but there is a sewer here and therefore it has to go left here, not right here.' That is the point I am trying to make to the hon. Gentleman. I am not trying to be unhelpful, I am just trying to say that there is a difference.

1230 We had this debate, he will recall, in 2012, about the GSD manifesto for 2011. There is a difference between the things the party produces and the things that then the Government is able, with its technical advice, to do. We have not taken, as was the case in other instances, Government technical drawings and put them in our party political material. That is why it may be different.

1235 There is no attempt to be unhelpful. It is just a desire to see the hon. Gentleman directed toward what we publish as a Government, which is what we will do. Then he can do the exercise of comparing one and the other and telling us that we have failed to do what we promised, or praising us for improving even upon what we promised – I will not hold my proverbial, Mr Speaker.

Hon. D J Bossino: The information which I am seeking, Mr Speaker, I do not think the hon. Member has provided. I think we are getting there. I will just read a very short excerpt from the manifesto. Is this the section from which the Government is drawing inspiration in relation to the projects on which it will provide further details in the future? I quote:

We will also explore options for providing a connection between Queensway (south) and the promenade on Rosia Road, also known as 'La Bateria'. To the extent that such a connection may enable users to avoid Ragged Staff and the Trafalgar Interchange, it is envisaged that a connecting path would be limited to pedestrian/cycle traffic only.

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I think the hon. Gentleman is looking at the wrong thing completely. That has nothing to do with Gibdock. That is the area of the Walk the Wall where, if we are able to do what we want to do, there is a need to create a connection over the area of Ragged Staff. This is a project that requires the relocation of the mosque, which we have been working on with Members of the Moroccan Community Association etc. We have been working with AquaGib on their relocation. Then there is an issue of the area by Toc H and Bishop Fitzgerald, and then that area connection between Ragged Staff over on to Saluting Battery, also known as the Battery in Spanish.

1250 The road is the other one, through Gibdock – that is why the reference is to easements etc. through Gibdock and the new ownership of Gibdock – and that is connecting the south of Queensway through to the area, more or less, of New Mole House, which provides an alternative route to the south, but that is vehicular.

1260 Mr Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

1265 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, on the issue that they have answered originally – not this one, La Bateria and so on – where is the entry point? I assume the entry or the exit point might be where there is a barrier now at the southern end, opposite New Mole Police Station. Can the Minister assure the House that any part of this project will not have any breach of the historic city walls or fortifications?

1270 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, I can confirm that the project would, as you rightly say, come out opposite New Mole House, where the barrier is, so there would be no ramp over the wall. It would be along the dockyard road and behind the industrial park, and exit past the docks and up the hill towards New Mole House.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q14/2023

Watergardens Small Boats Marina – Refurbishment

1275 Clerk: Question 14/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: When does Government intend to refurbish Watergardens Small Boats Marina as signified during the 2022-23 Appropriation Bill?

1280 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business and Tourism.

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, as soon as possible. Costings as to pontoons etc. are being provided.

1285 Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

When the Minister says as soon as possible, does he expect those works to be completed within the lifespan of the current financial year, given that there are already sums allocated for the project, or will it take longer than that and, unfortunately, have to pass over? Does the Minister have any indication?

1290 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, we had some quotes done for this a while back, and of course the costs have gone up, so we have had to requote. We are working on that. We have had some quotes come back and we are waiting for some others. Especially at the time of the year we are in, with inclement weather, storms and all that, I think it is going to be quite difficult to be able to start and complete the project within this financial year.

Parcel post office – Relocation

1295 Clerk: Question 15/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: When and where is the parcel post office building moving to?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business and Tourism.

1300 Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, no decision has yet been made. There are a number of locations under consideration by the Government for the parcel post building. Once a final decision has been made, an announcement will follow.

1305 Hon. D J Bossino: Does he know when he expects to make that announcement?

Hon. V Daryanani: Not at this stage; if so, I would have done so.

Hon. D J Bossino: But is the announcement imminent? That is what I am trying to drive at.

1310 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, if it were imminent, I would have said it was imminent. We are going through the process and when we take a decision, we will let him know.

1315 Hon. D J Bossino: May I ask which locations the Government is considering? Just to assist the hon. Member, I have heard that one possible location – and in fact the information I had was that it was much more advanced than he is indicating across the floor of the House – is round about where the parking spaces are outside the Med and Calpe rowing clubs.

1320 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, that is one of the locations we are looking at. There are a number of locations, so he will have to wait until we take the decision.

1325 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can I ask what is the rationale for the consideration of moving the parcel post office? After all, it is relatively recent that it was located there, and I assume the Government spent quite a bit of money in setting it up in that location. So what would be the rationale of moving it so soon?

1330 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo) Mr Speaker, exactly the rationale that we set out when we moved it there, in a temporary building, and said so publicly. As part of the grant of the Rooke project, that is part of the plot that went out to tender, and we said that we would be moving the post office from there when the tender was granted. So, in order to be able to give vacant possession, we have to give effect to the thing that we have already said, and I am surprised the hon. Gentleman does not seem to recall.

1335 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, in view that it is tied up with the tender process – and I do recall that there was ... Obviously we have spoken about the tender process and the expressions of interest process in the House before. Is the Government in discussion with the preferred bidder in terms of the cost and sharing the cost or passing the cost on to the proposed developer?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the premium is inclusive of this cost.

Q16/2023
Transport infrastructure –
Proposals for improvement

Clerk: Question 16/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

1340 Hon. D J Bossino: What specific proposals does the Government have to improve Gibraltar's transport infrastructure, as has been recently identified by the Chamber of Commerce in connection with the cruise industry?

1345

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, when the hon. member says recently identified, I think he is referring to a press release issued by the Chamber of Commerce on 6th June 2022 titled 'Chamber welcomes the Minister's efforts to develop Gibraltar's cruise business'. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Chamber for recognising these efforts.

The Chamber and I meet regularly to discuss business matters in general. We understand that there are certain issues that need addressing regarding transport infrastructure. Since I have been Minister for Tourism for the last three years I have engaged with the transport sector on several occasions. We look forward to continuing with these meetings and I hope we can have specific proposals on what is a very complicated subject.

1355

Hon. D J Bossino: Just by way of clarification, Mr Speaker, I was not referring to that press release, I was referring to a foreword in the Chamber of Commerce magazine for the autumn/winter edition of 2022, which actually deals ... The main focus in relation to this issue ... Just by way of assistance to the House, I will quote one of the things it says:

1360

The main reason why fewer cruise ships are coming to Gibraltar

– which is a very worrying trend and concern –

compared to other ports is because of the current transport arrangements, which cannot cope with the increase in demand.

It goes on:

it is the strategic issues that need to be tackled head on.

There are other bits that are relevant, but I do not need to go into them.

In relation to that, he says there are certain issues that need to be looked at, which are very complex. Can he give some information to this House as to what those issues are and why they are so complex?

1370

Hon. V Daryanani: I think when we talk about issues we talk about all people's interests, all the different parties that are working in the sector. So the taxis have their issues and the bus and tour operators have their issues. These have been going on for a long time. The Chamber appreciates that. The Chamber appreciates that there is no simple solution to this, and we are working with all interested parties to see how we can come up with some sort of arrangement. We have had several meetings and we will continue to have these meetings. I wish we could solve this problem and I will keep on working on it.

1375

On the issue of fewer cruise ships, I think the reason why we have had a slight reduction in cruise ships is because of something called COVID, not only in Gibraltar but in all ports in the Mediterranean and around the world.

1380

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, one final question. He talks about fewer cruise ships and he highlights and cites the COVID issue, which has clearly been a major stumbling block in relation to this industry and others, but actually the concern here is that we have had increased activity in ports close to Gibraltar – Cadiz and Malaga – and that is a concern that certainly I have and many people in the industry have.

1385 One of the issues that has been highlighted – I have just read from the foreword in the magazine – by the Chamber of Commerce is the issue of transport. That is pretty much all they focus on, and can I ask him, therefore, to give this matter urgency, to thrash out, as soon as possible, a solution that is satisfactory to the cruise liner industry? Can I ask him when he expects to be in a position to announce something in this sphere?

1390 Hon. V Daryanani: Unfortunately, I cannot give him a date when I can announce anything on this matter. This has been going on for as long as I can remember – for the last 25 or 30 years – so I do not know how he expects me to come in here and just solve the problem. I can tell him that I am at it and I will not rest until I find a solution to this.

Q17-18/2023
Cruise visits –
Schedule for 2023 and 2024; Viking Cruises

Clerk: Question 17/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Please confirm that the Gibraltar Port cruise call schedules for 2023 and 2024 are accurate.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business and Tourism.

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 18.

Hon. D J Bossino: How many cruise visits have materialised from Viking following the Minister for Tourism's meeting with its Vice-President of Maritime Operations and the Chairman in May 2021?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business and Tourism.

1415 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, the figures are accurate and current. As with all bookings for future calls, there is always an element of uncertainty. There are some last-minute cancellations as well as additional bookings, which is the norm for the cruise industry, so I would say that the schedule for 2023 and 2024 is as accurate as can be at this moment in time.

1420 The meeting the hon. Member is referring to took place when COVID was rife and the cruise industry was at a complete standstill. This meeting took place on the company's newest ship, Viking Venus, which was in Gibraltar on an operational call. The Chairman of Viking Cruises flew in to meet the ship and requested a meeting with me, which was arranged. The news was carried by the International Cruise Press and was excellent positive publicity for Gibraltar. The Viking Sea made its inaugural call in Gibraltar on 3rd December 2021 and the Viking Star called at our port on 3rd March 2022.

1425 Hon. D J Bossino: I am glad that the hon. Member is confident about the information in relation to cruise line calls for 2023 and 2024, because actually there is a very worrying statistic and maybe he can enlighten this House why it is that for 2024 we have no visits expected from Royal Caribbean.

1430 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I think he will have to give me notice for that. He has asked me about Viking Cruises and now he is suddenly moving to 2024 and Royal Caribbean.

1435 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, with the greatest of respect to the hon. Member, my question is a supplementary to Question 17, which arises from the Gibraltar Port cruise schedules for 2023 and 2024, so I think it is relevant.

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I have told him that the schedule is as accurate as can be at this moment in time. That he has spotted that a certain cruise line is not coming in 2024 ... well, thank you for letting me know and I will look into it.

1440 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I am very surprised by that answer, that the hon. Member, as the Minister for Tourism, who has direct responsibility in relation to this area, is unable to give any comment as to why such an important cruise liner operator is having zero calls for 2024. I am very surprised by that.

1445 Can I just say that from the information we had when this was brought to my attention – and I checked it – confirmed not just by the 2024 calls but also by information which the Royal Caribbean itself is giving to those who enquire ... They are confirming that they do not have any itineraries featuring Gibraltar as a destination in 2024. Can I ask him to comment in relation to this? I give him a further opportunity.

1450 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo) Yes, Mr Speaker, it is January 2023. In my experience the way certain companies work is to book later rather than earlier, especially itineraries for the year ahead. You can book with a cruise company a year or two ahead, but they position and reposition their ships at different times. That is what our comment is in respect of that particular cruise company and we will see, when we get closer to 2024, whether we have calls from Royal Caribbean or not. We have a very strong relationship with Royal Caribbean and with the chief executives and we do not believe that 2024 will be a year when there will be no calls from Royal Caribbean in Gibraltar, even though there are no calls booked yet.

1460 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, in relation to the other question, which relates to Viking Cruises, Question 18, just one supplementary. Does he have any comment as to why, despite the inaugural calls that he referred to – and he is right, the Viking Star did come in 2022 – the expectation is that there will be no further visits, despite his meeting, in 2023 and 2024?

1465 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I am meeting Viking Cruises tomorrow morning and I will ask them what is going on.

JUSTICE, EQUALITY AND PUBLIC STANDARDS AND REGULATIONS

Q19/2023 Online Safety Bill – Progress

Clerk: Question 19/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, when will the Government bring an Online Safety Bill to this House?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Standards.

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, a first draft of the Bill, based on the current UK version, has been prepared by drafters at the Government Law Offices and is undergoing internal consultation, which itself will take a few weeks, and will be published as soon as possible.

The UK Bill is likely to be amended in the House of Lords in the coming weeks. We will reflect on any such amendments before publishing our Bill, which we want to make as comprehensive as the final UK Act.

1480

Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful for the answer and I am pleased to hear that the hon. Lady is going to promote a Bill to ensure that social media companies take responsibility, Mr Speaker, for keeping our children and young persons safe whilst moving across the internet. I think that is something we would welcome and we look forward to seeing the Bill when it is published.

Has the Minister, in the process of reviewing the position in the United Kingdom in comparison with our jurisdiction, because clearly we need to make sure that it fits and ticks all the right boxes for us as a community ...? Will there be any significant differences, in terms of the approach, that the Minister has discovered, given the drafting process is under way?

1490

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I will, of course, ensure that, whereas we will try to follow the UK position, if there are amendments that need to be made to accommodate the position in Gibraltar, they will be made. When I have a more comprehensive draft of the Bill at the appropriate time – because I am obviously waiting for the anticipated amendments in the UK – I am happy to have the discussion with the hon. Gentleman.

1495

I thank the hon. Gentleman for his comments in regard to this. He will know, because I mentioned it in my Budget speech in June, that this is something we were working on in the Ministry for Justice. In relation to this particular one, it is not yet ready because we are waiting on developments, but I would very much like to see this one through as soon as possible.

1500

Hon. E J Phillips: Just one further question: would the Minister be willing to constructively engage with us on this side of the House? This involves the online safety of children, an important issue for our community, and if the hon. Lady might be able to spare the time and give us an opportunity to sit down with her and look through the Bill, it might be a way in which we can accommodate full and unanimous support in this House for an important piece of legislation moving into the future.

Thank you.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I think the hon. Lady has just said exactly that, but I am very pleased to accept the hon. Gentleman's proposal.

The hon. Lady and I have been working on this for some considerable time, over a year and a half.

The Bill in the United Kingdom has hit a number of political hurdles, as he may be aware. There is now an Act in Ireland. The Bill is going to be amended in the Lords, as a result of an agreement reached late last night in the Commons, with a provision for the incarceration of the chief executives of internet companies in the event that they fail to act upon recommendations or requirements of Ofcom, in keeping with the provisions set out in the Irish Act, which is the agreement between a group of rebels on the Conservative benches led by Sir Bill Cash with the support of the Labour Party, and Michelle O'Donovan, who is the relevant Minister for Culture. It

1520 is a Bill which is a little different to the Bill that was being promoted by Nadine Dorries as Minister for Culture under the leadership of Boris Johnson, but we think it probably still does the job.

We think there are issues to bear in mind about the provenance of the Bill and that there may be aspects of the Irish Bill which we may want to bear in consideration as we bring a Bill to Gibraltar, but as the hon. Lady can give testament to because I have been a bugbear on this, this is something we want to move on very quickly.

1525 This not just about protecting children. It is principally about protecting children, but it is about protecting everybody who uses online services, in particular social media, and trying to bring to social media an element of regulation of the space and how people act there, by creating a national law that addresses these issues, because otherwise people will find that they are very often at the mercy of the law of the place of incorporation of the entity that provides the service.
1530 We are all subjecting ourselves, every day, to the laws of California and the United States by going online with any of the many social media platforms that we use. This repatriates the place of use of the social media platform, the regulatory landscape affecting individuals who are using that platform in Gibraltar, the United Kingdom and Ireland, to use the examples that I have given. It is hugely important. Gibraltar cannot pretend to act in a way that would create a different type of 1535 jurisdiction. We need a jurisprudence to build up around this, and we need a regulatory space which is more or less looking the same between at least the common law jurisdictions of Europe – not the European Union, but of Europe – and that is the exercise that the hon. Lady has been embarked upon for some time with my full support, and I look forward to also working with them on the subject.

1540

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q20/2023
Public events –
Policing

Clerk: Question 20/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1545 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, does the Government agree that the Police should not provide security for events such as the Cavalcade and other public events?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Standards.

1550 Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, there is no suggestion that the RGP will not provide security at public events. The security of Gibraltar and events in Gibraltar is, of course, a matter for the Royal Gibraltar Police. This was very clearly explained by the Commissioner of Police in a GBC interview on 5th January. He also explained that a private company was engaged for the marshalling of that event, to ensure that the public remained within the cordons and stipulated areas. There is a 1555 difference between marshalling and policing.

We will all agree with the Commissioner that we must use police resources efficiently and not have police officers deployed to do the jobs of civilians. Indeed, in the case of this year's Cavalcade, there was a significant police engagement for what are policing functions prior to and during the event, which included traffic planning, safety inspections of the floats, security searches and a 1560 physical deployment throughout.

1565 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, we do agree that the police resources should be used efficiently, and indeed we welcome the clarification of the Minister listing the duties in relation to security that the Police carried out in respect of the Cavalcade. But she will also be aware that not only were there public comments by the Commissioner but there were also public comments by the organisers, who made the point that what had been the traditional services given by the Police were no longer being provided this year, which had caused a financial outlay to organisers in respect of which they had had to seek a Government contribution. So clearly the role has altered.

1570 Can I ask the Minister, was the Government consulted by the Police, or indeed did they have discussions with the organisers once the organisers found out that the Police were not going to provide those services that traditionally they had provided in the context, presumably, of a reassignment of resources on the basis that they consider that this is more effective?

1575 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, there is another question on the Order Paper, to the Minister for Culture, which I think is the right place to address that because he will refer to his discussions with the members of the Cavalcade committee, costs etc. which were involved.

1580 The issue is one which has been ventilated across the Government. There is an HMIC report about how the Police should be doing certain things, which they have to comply with, of course – it is a recommendation, but ... I think all of those issues are addressed in the later question, which the Hon. Minister for Culture deals with because his was the engagement at the front line.

Governor's Lookout campsite – Improvement in security to curtail vandalism

Clerk: Question 21/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

1585 Hon. E J Reyes: Will Government be assisting the Scout Association to improve security measures at Governor's Lookout campsite in order to curtail recurrences of recent vandalism?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1590 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, yes, sir.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I am sorry, I did not realise that was the changeover between Members answering questions.

1595 I wondered whether this was a convenient time to break. Instead of continuing for three hours and stopping for one, I wonder whether this is a convenient time to break and return at quarter to six.

Mr Speaker: The House will now recess and return at quarter to six.

The House recessed at 5.30 p.m. and resumed at 5.47 p.m.

Q21/2023

Governor's Lookout campsite – Improvement in security to curtail vandalism –
Supplementary questions

Clerk: We resume with Answers to Oral Questions.

1600

Mr Speaker: Did we complete Question 21? Let's restart at Question 21.

Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I am grateful for the Minister's confirmation that his support will be forthcoming.

I know – if I may, with your leave, refer to it, Mr Speaker – that last month I asked the Minister if there had been any expenditure yet undertaken under a particular head which to my understanding was going to contribute towards refurbishments and so on. Can the Minister confirm that if last month no expenditure had yet been incurred, that rather useful sum of money, £50,000, is then available and, obviously in consultation with the Scout Association for what is left of this financial year, quite substantial use of it will be made towards the improvement of security measures, not only, as I said in my question, to curtail the recurrence of the vandalism, but also, whilst scouts, especially the younger ones, are camping there, it is a certain reassurance to the parents that there is as good as possible perimeter fencing adequate to help as a deterrent to ingress for those who are non-authorized personnel?

1615

1620

Specifically in relation today's question, the kind of assistance need not necessarily be financial. The Scout Association contacted me probably on the day after the vandalism had occurred, and my office is in the process of setting up a meeting very early within the next week or so to discuss how assistance could be given. Assistance could be by way of advice on security systems; it may be in relation to security fencing, although a lot of the fencing there I know is relatively new; and because of the amount of goodwill there is in the community towards the Scouts, it may be that there will be entities willing to provide these measures or support these measures without having to be a cost incurred other than to the entities that are supplying them.

But the discussion has to be had. I have not yet had the discussion of the detail of what caused the vandalism. As the hon. Member is well aware from our own days in scouting, it is not new that there should be vandalism – Angelo, my late father, was Commissioner of Scouts and I remember from a very early age he was dealing with this sort of issue – but clearly we have to do what we can to reduce this happening in the future.

1630

Indeed, at least two former scouts who are present in this House – the Hon. Mr Clinton and myself – are actually looking with other former scouts as to whether we can assist by way of a fund-raising event. Maybe I will have to get my old campfire blanket out of mothballs in order to go and perform there again. So there is a wide range of possibilities, but the meeting is pending for me to have the details and see what form of assistance this could take.

1635

Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I am glad to note the tone and the co-operation that the Minister is implying in his answers.

1640

Because it is a matter of great interest to the community and because the Minister has said that he still has to hold those meetings and so on, perhaps, with your leave, in a couple of months' time I could request some sort of update so we can further exchange views. I am truly grateful for that, Mr Speaker.

1645

Mr Speaker: I agree.

Hon. E J Reyes: I think my hon. Friend would like to ask a small question as well.

1650 Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

I think I join the Hon. Minister in his sentiments in terms of the goodwill that exists in the community for the scouting movement in Gibraltar. As an old scout, as the Minister is himself, I think we can both say that we were obviously appalled at the vandalism that occurred, as most scouts will have fond memories of their days as youngsters up at Governor's Lookout.

1655 Of course I identify myself with the comments the Minister made in terms of perhaps getting veterans together to do fund raising to repair the damage done, but if I may ask, has the Minister yet had an indication from the Scout Association of the cost of the damage that has been done?

1660 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: No, Mr Speaker, I have not. I am expecting that to come when I sit with them.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q22/2023
Academic calendar for schools –
Publication of early draft

Clerk: Question 22/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

1665 Hon. E J Reyes: Will Government consider publishing an early draft of the schools' academic calendar for 2023-24 in order to allow parents and guardians to plan ahead in respect of their annual leave requirements with their employers?

1670 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I am a little surprised by the question, as it seeks information that is already in the public domain. Without offending the Rules, which do not permit such questions, and in order to assist the hon. Gentleman, I can confirm that the academic calendar has been available on the Government Education website www.education.gov.gi for over a year.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, from feedback I was getting we are talking of the academic year that starts in September 2023, moving forward. Is that the one that is publicly available?

1680 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, indeed, Mr Speaker, and the draft for the following year, 2024-25, if it is not there already, will be within days or weeks.

1685 It is important that the calendar should be published as early as possible, obviously subject to change. For example, this year we have had to change it at the last minute because of His Majesty's coronation, but it is important because teachers and parents need to plan their own activities, and therefore the policy now is to publish this on the website as soon as possible. The next one after that particular year will be on very soon, if it is not on already.

Student suspensions from school –
Number and alternatives offered

Clerk: Question 23/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

1690 Hon. E J Reyes: Can Government provide details in respect of the number of pupils who have been suspended from school so far in this academic year, indicating the school sector where the pupil is enrolled, together with details of alternative learning programmes offered to them?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Sixty-nine suspensions, but the Minister has clarified it refers to 23 students, therefore one, I think, could assume that – (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Forty-three.) Forty-three, thank you. So one can assume that there are certain reoffenders, if one is allowed to use that type of word. Can the 1705 Minister then confirm that, together with the alternative learning programmes, somewhere along the system other agencies and bodies are brought in to help in the character and rehabilitation of these individuals?

1710 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, clearly, Mr Speaker, and there is a range. In some cases it will be therapists, in other cases it will be the Care Agency, and in other cases there may have to be police involvement if there has been some activity of a nature that at least needs a conversation between the Police and the parents. But, yes, clearly this a multidisciplinary approach that has to be had, tailored to the individual needs of the child, absolutely.

1715 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q24/2023

Unightly bin sheds – Replacement

Clerk: Question 24/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1720 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state when unsightly bin sheds will be replaced?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1725 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, unsightly bin sheds are replaced as and when needed as part of the ongoing programme of bin cubicle replacements, which we have had in place for the past 10 years. Two bin areas are due to be replaced in the coming months as works on new bin areas are completed.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the answer.

1730 This question comes up a lot with me from members of the community – I am sure the hon. Gentleman probably gets them as well – and there are a number that are presented to me where it appears that they have been in a derelict state for some significant time, boarded up with temporary measures, if I can call it that with the greatest respect to him. I wonder whether there is a programme that literally replaces them, because it appears that there are touch-up jobs being done on these bin sheds and they are very unsightly in terms of tourism and members of the public more generally, of course.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker. The bin stores are not very well treated. Sometimes, sadly, they are not even well used, because, as we have said here before, people will go up to the bins shed and put the rubbish outside or put bits of furniture against them so it does damage. It is very difficult and it is sometimes a question of playing catch-up almost. We do try to replace as much as possible, but certainly there are two areas in particular. One of them is the public bin store opposite the Garrison Library, which is in dire need of replacement. Yes, there is a need to carry out these ... and there are two particularly that I know of that are going to be done very soon.

1740

1745 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q25/2023

Governor's Lane air quality monitor – Readings obtained and conclusions drawn

Clerk: Question 25/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state what readings it has managed to obtain from the Governor's Lane AQ monitor and what conclusions have been drawn?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, data collected using the AQMesh between 8th September and 31st December show the following average concentration: nitrogen-dioxide, 32 g/m³; PM10 – that is a larger particulate – 20 µg/m³; PM2.5 – which is a smaller particulate – 10 µg/m³.

1760 These levels are all below current EU levels, although the nitrogen-dioxide level is above the proposed EU levels, and all are above the new WHO levels. However, the data are provisional and not yet ratified. The conclusion, as if we did not know it, is that we must reduce the use of petrol and diesel vehicles further.

Hon. E J Phillips: I think, Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman has been fairly prolific of late in relation to air quality. The purpose of this question was to draw down on what conclusions can be arrived at, and I think it is right that we need to continue to do that, as he says.

1770 These are obviously average takings from 8th September until 30th December. Clearly the data will reveal spikes at certain times during the day, and in reality when people are walking around and being exposed to this level of pollutants, as he suggests. So I think he would agree with me, would he not, that if the average indication, particularly in relation to NO₂, is at 32 g/m³ as he says, we need to be looking at a more radical way of dealing with these types of pollutants? Does he not agree with that?

1775 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, the goal posts are moving all the time. Clearly, the ultimate goal post is pollution free. The EU set a standard which we did not meet until very recently and which we currently meet in all of those. They are now upping the standards by reducing the acceptable level and we will meet the particulate one ... Sorry, if we had those standards now, we would have met the particulate one. We would not have met the nitrogen-dioxide. The World Health Organization is much more strict now. A couple of years ago it changed its levels. As we have said here before, we need to do more. The data are recent, so they will be ratified by Ricardo's, the consultant, and they will then provide a graph with all the spikes and so on.

1780 To tell you the truth, for an area which is quite busy for traffic I would have expected higher levels, so even though I am not satisfied, I am almost pleasantly surprised. This is something that clearly came across in my hon. Friend the Hon. Paul Balban's presentation yesterday on that strategy. It is something that we all have to work towards, reducing vehicular use, because clearly in this particular location that is probably going to account for almost all these levels. We are not talking about near the Port or near the Airport, where there could be other aspects, or near a building site where some of the particulates ... This seems to be purely from traffic and it is a good indication and confirmation of what we are trying to do, which is to reduce the use of vehicles.

Vaping products –
Disposal and recycling

Clerk: Question 26/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1790 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, in relation to vapes, what measures are being considered, including taxing these items, given the difficulties around indiscriminate disposal and difficulties around their recycling?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1800 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I would be grateful to learn what other measures the Minister is currently considering, because clearly people who dispose indiscriminately of these objects are causing an impact to our environment. In this House he and I have exchanged views on cigarette butts, for example, but this is significantly polluting in terms of life cycle, and I wonder whether he might be able to set out more those other measures.

1810 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, a wide range of possible actions, including the possibility of taxing and even the possibility of banning as single-use plastic items. These are all being considered and we are doing a little bit of research as to whether one or the other, or somewhere in between, should happen.

Q27/2023
Upper Rock CCTV cameras –
Reason for removal

Clerk: Question 27/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1815 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state why CCTV cameras on the Upper Rock at Queens Balcony and the bottom of the hill leading up to O'Haras have been removed?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1820 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the mobile solar cameras in question were temporarily relocated by the Department of the Environment, for operational reasons, to areas where they were urgently required. New cameras have, nevertheless, been procured and are being installed. I know that one was definitely back earlier this week, and possibly the second one sometime during this week.

Hon. E J Phillips: I do not want to delve into the operational reasons because they are probably sensitive, so we are not going to go there. Is there a cost to that process? I assume the Minister might not be sighted on that point.

1830

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: There will have been a cost. I am not aware of the cost, but these cameras are getting less and less expensive nowadays, so I do not think it is a large cost. I am happy to seek the information and share it behind your Chair, Mr Speaker.

Q28-32/2023
Fireworks and petardos –
Cancellation of New Year display; risk assessment re private displays; illegal fireworks confiscated at Frontier; assessment of nuisance and danger;
plans to control use

Clerk: Question 28/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1835 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state how it came by its decision to cancel New Year's fireworks?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1840 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 29 to 32.

Clerk: Question 29/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1845 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state what risk assessment it carried out and what steps it has taken in relation to privately held firework displays in our community?

Clerk: Question 30/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1850 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state how many illegal fireworks were confiscated at our land border with Spain?

Clerk: Question 31/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

1855 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, does the Government accept that fireworks and petardos can be a huge nuisance and a danger to people and animals?

Clerk: Question 32/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

1860 Hon. D J Bossino: What plans, if any, does Government have to control the use of fireworks, particularly during New Year's Eve?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1865 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, in relation to Question 28, this has already been stated publicly following press questions on 4th November last year when it was confirmed that this was in order to save costs. Given the deficit reported to Parliament this year in the Estimates, we did not consider this a justifiable expense.

1870 Fireworks displays per se require an entertainment licence and these permits need to be requested via the Ministry of Culture and approved by the Safety Advisory Group. The application needs to be supported with appropriate risk assessments, method statements and health and safety plans prior to the display being approved.

1875 No illegal fireworks have been detected at the Frontier this year – meaning last year, clearly. Notwithstanding, the following statistics are for searches conducted at Four Corners Station during the month of December 2022: 72 persons, 1,933 vehicles. People should, however, not be surprised by this, given that, as a leftover from our period of membership of the EU, most if not all fireworks available for retail sale in Spain – that is to say in the single market of the EU – are legal in Gibraltar, even the loudest firecrackers, which I will address in a moment. This year, there was a large commercial importation of fireworks by a local company. This business specialises in these goods and obtains the pertinent import licences from the Gibraltar Fire and Rescue Service.

1880 The Government agrees that fireworks and petardos are a nuisance for people and animals. It absolutely does not condone their use. The legality of these is a different issue and work is going to be undertaken on that.

1885 I have convened a meeting for 20th January – in two days' time ... yes, I think so; today is the 18th, yes? – with various departmental stakeholders and lawyers, to study amendments to the legislation that will set out limits to dates, times and locations for private fireworks to be set off, as well as limiting the type of fireworks that can be used.

1890 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, in relation to Question 28 it is obviously appreciated on this side of the House that there are restraints on the public purse. Likewise, of course, we all have to understand on this side of the House that it is been a tough few years for our community insofar as its response to COVID and the challenges that have been mentioned in this House in relation to Brexit, which the Chief Minister has discussed at length with the community and, indeed, Members of this House.

1895 Given the fact that numerous benefactors in our community have contributed to our way of life and have made contributions, financial or otherwise, to the way in which we celebrate our community and the unity that is expressed by all of us, particularly at the time of New Year's Eve, I wonder whether approaches have been made to conduct a more organised display of seeing in the New Year. Clearly the displays that we saw, as beautiful as they were, on social media presented to many people risks not only to humans but also to animals, as has been said in one of the other questions. I just wondered whether for that amount of money – it is a defined amount of money – we could have made an approach to those people who are passionate about our community and make those contributions, as to whether they might do that. I wonder whether you explored that as an alternative.

1905 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, absolutely. Mr Speaker, a couple of points here. I think there is an implication, almost, here that the fact that we did not have official fireworks led to the fireworks that people had, but I can tell you that from my experience – as, I am certain, others here – we have that every year, almost in competition with the formal fireworks, and sometimes some of these displays are more lush even than the formal ones. I do not know where they get them. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) Yes, exactly. And the formal one, as the Hon. Chief Minister is very helpfully reminding me, is only visible from a defined area.

1910 There are people who enjoy fireworks, there are people who are adamantly against fireworks for environmental and other reasons, so there is leeway for all of that, but I think we are satisfied that this year it was the right decision; next year, maybe there will be another one. This is something that was considered, a decision taken, and I think we need to stand by it and concentrate – in my answer to the other questions – on how we can try, difficult as it is, to control the setting off of fireworks in private areas and on private estates.

1920 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, just one further question. As the Hon. Minister may have seen from his television box – or LCD platform, or whatever you call them now, TVs – the rest of the world celebrated in the technicolour that we are all used to in terms of New Year’s Eve, and everyone saw in New Year’s Eve in a particular style. I appreciate very much, and I am not seeking to argue otherwise, that it was a decision because of the budgetary constraints that he has spoken about, but the point I am trying to make here is that insofar as safety is concerned, I think it is right that the Government manage it, and I think he will agree with that, but also, even if it is sponsored by someone else – and what I mean by that is if it is paid for by someone else – of course it should be the Government that provides that assurance to the public that it is controlled in a secure and safe way for members of the public.

1930 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I am afraid I cannot agree with the hon. Gentleman’s logic, and perhaps when I respond he will agree with me that he does not agree with himself.

1935 What the hon. Gentleman has seen on television when he sees the display first in Auckland, then in Sydney, then in Moscow if cameras are allowed, then in Berlin and then in London are the official organised displays there. That does not mean that in the rest of Auckland, and indeed the rest of New Zealand, they are not setting off fireworks wherever they want, or indeed anywhere else.

1940 The hon. Gentleman has set up the question for the Hon. Minister by saying, ‘Everywhere else, you saw this; here, you had unregulated fireworks,’ and that, Mr Speaker – if he will agree with me and we do not fall into the trap of political exchanges – just by way of logic is not correct. I think he will accept that although we see on our television screens the news of those official fireworks displays, that does not mean that we do not suffer from, in all of those areas potentially, also the same thing that he is suggesting we suffer from, which is what we are calling, for the purposes of the debate, unregulated use of fireworks by private individuals in private spaces.

1945 In Auckland they may have had World War IV, as we had here, and in Madrid they might have had a lovely display at the Plaza del Sol and 1704 and the Batteries of Elliott at the same time, as they had in London, where they had a lovely display on the Thames but in Peckham you might have been going good luck to Del Boy and his cousin.

1950 So I am afraid, Mr Speaker, I would say that the question is unfairly put. The only point I would make, other than reinforcing all the things that the Hon. Minister has said, is that what I found quite remarkable this year with the run up to Christmas and New Year, in which had been the discussion about the cost of living crisis etc., was that the display went on for as long as ever. Obviously many people who tell us that they cannot make ends meet manage to make enough to make the end of the flame meet the end of the firework for half an hour in all our estates, outside of our estates and elsewhere.

1955 I was struck by a comparison that we often do, which is unscientific but is relatively meaningful. I was at a vantage where I could see the bay, and the display here went on ... At quarter to one in the morning I was still seeing fireworks and hearing them. I love fireworks when I see them; I hate it when I hear them, perhaps like most. Across the bay, by quarter past it had settled down. How lucky we are to be born Gibraltarians.

1960 Hon. D J Bossino: It was very humorous when he referred to World War IV, and I could not agree with him more. It was quite incredible – (Interjection) I suppose! – and it was really bad, although I am not sure it was as bad as in previous years, I must say. (A Member: Worse!) Worse, you reckon? Okay. As in last year, I mean.

1965 Just by way of preamble, I wrote a letter in the Chronicle because it is an issue which has been bugging me now for some time. People mention to me – and, I am sure, to many of us across the floor of this House – that this is an issue for special needs children in particular, especially those within the autistic spectrum. Many of them have to be drugged. Many of us drug our dogs, but to drug a human being because they have to go through this is, quite frankly, shameful ... and infirm people and people with Alzheimer’s etc.

1970 Can I just also, by way of slight preamble, welcome what the hon. Member has said, that he is looking at legislation, I think he said? In respect of that, if I may, Mr Speaker, two supplementary questions, just to bundle them together because I think it is going to be easier for him. May I ask which stakeholders he says he is going to be meeting the day after tomorrow? When does he expect the legislation to be up and running and put in place, and does he expect it to be there before the celebrations next year when we are welcoming 2024, when hopefully we will be on that side of the House?

1980 Hon. Chief Minister: Sorry, can I just do a footnote, Mr Speaker, before the Hon. Minister answers, because on this I have to hold my breath. I think I agree entirely with the Hon. Mr Feetham, and I am just going to say this by way of footnote before we start.

1985 The hon. Gentleman has prefaced his question to the hon. Member about fireworks. Actually, I think what we all hate are petardos, right? We have to understand that the display, the fireworks, the ones that go up and create a beautiful ... they do not actually create as much of a bang. Some of them create a bigger bang, some of them create less of a bang, but the ones we all hate, the ones that create the bang where, whoever you are, you jump out of your skin, that require those who we want to look after ... We are civilised because we look after animals and, in particular, our children – special needs children and non-special needs children. Some are worse than others, but it is quite dreadful. I do not know what possesses somebody to want to set off one of those bangs like that. Those are the petardos, not the fireworks. Perhaps we can graduate our debate in respect of fireworks in some way, so that what we are dealing with is the bang. It is the noise that is the problem here, it is not the display, and most of those that create the display do not create a bang in a way that is potentially problematic.

1995 I am saying this by way of footnote to the answer because there are, of course, issues also of personal liberty here and the ability to be able to enjoy displays etc., so the balance, but I do that by my deep agreement with Mr Feetham on this, just by way of footnote on this subject.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Thank you, Chief Minister.

2000 Mr Speaker, by way of my own preamble, I can confirm, as the Chief Minister suspects, that despite the fireworks display in London there were other areas of the United Kingdom where there were private fireworks. My daughter, who is a student, sadly could not be here for New Year but she was a victim of a lot of noise in her own area of Bristol, too, and from the danger point of view, my granddaughter was narrowly missed by a firework this last New Year’s Eve. So this something that is very close to all of us and the potential danger I do remember when I was Minister for Health – no, earlier than that, when I was manager of the Health Service back in the early 1990s, being there on New Year's Eve and seeing the damage that one particular firework had done to one particular person. So I think we are all on the same side on this one.

2010 Regarding the meeting, there will be representatives from the Law Offices – of course, because it is a drafting issue – the Royal Gibraltar Police, the Fire and Rescue Service, HM Customs, the Environment Department and the Ministry of Culture and the cultural team, for two reasons: one is that they would be the ones to organise the formal official display, and also because the entertainment licence is issued by the Ministry. So it would be all those entities. I may be forgetting one, but those are the main ones that I can recall.

2015 Hon. D J Bossino: Has he answered the point in relation to timing?

2020 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: On timing, I think we have a pretty good idea. We had met before this last New Year and already discussed possibilities. We already have a draft, which I am not altogether happy with but I think we should be able to have quite a robust draft within the next ... I would like to say one month, but to be realistic I would say two months, so clearly before this Government once again considers what it does at New Year.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

2025 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much. As the Chief Minister was agreeing with me, I had a nervous glance behind my chair to see whether the assassin lurked in the shadows, so to speak.

2030 May I ask the Minister whether he agrees with me that there are two issues that we need to look at in relation to this? One is enforcement. I say that from this perspective: that I know from the Upper Rock, where I live, for example Genoese Battery and Devil's Gap are two areas where there are unlawful fireworks and petardos that go off during Christmas and New Year, and at other times as well during the year, and therefore if police officers or other enforcement officers are not present, it becomes very difficult to actually prevent that. That is one issue, as to whether the Minister is going to be looking at that.

2035 The second is, of course, the period as well. You can say that you are going to cater for official fireworks displays, for example, outside Casemates. I think it would be helpful as well if that were confined to specific periods of time, because although I know that logically perhaps they are not connected, that sends a message, to others within the community who want to set off fireworks and petardos, that that is the period of time. Of course, the obvious retort to that is if it is going to be during an official period and at an official place, it should not be taking place somewhere else. I accept that as an argument, as a retort against, but it is also very difficult to actually prevent people, for all the reasons that the Minister has developed in his answer, from importing into Gibraltar and then setting off in Gibraltar. Perhaps actually saying, 'It is this area but this period and no other period outside it' ... Does he agree with me in relation to that?

2045 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, let me start by saying that the hon. Gentleman has been in politics for long enough to know that the rule is that the enemy is usually behind you, not in front of you. That is in the United Kingdom.

2050 Hon. D A Feetham: I know that from experience.

Hon. Chief Minister: Of course, absolutely.

2055 Hon. D A Feetham: He is a very skilful.

Hon. Chief Minister: That is in the United Kingdom, Mr Speaker. Here, the enemy is usually beside you, not in front of you. And I do not mean her, Mr Speaker, but – (Interjection) Exactly. It is not about you. Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman makes an important – (Interjections by Hon. D A Feetham and Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon and laughter) I have never seen such looks of sweetness and light to his right, Mr Speaker.

Speaking about more heat than light, the issue that the hon. Gentleman is raising is one on which we agree. Unfortunately, I do not think the proposal that he makes will resolve matters because we have had official fireworks displays on New Year's Day and people have not thought that this is the period upon which I should be even doing my private display to go with the public display.

I think what is emerging is common positioning between all parties here, and what we need to do, perhaps, is inform people of that agreement between all sides of the House, which I think is the agreement not just between all sides of the House but between all right-thinking people generally, that there is nothing to be gained by obtaining – and this is, I think, the different nomenclature that we have to use – a firecracker, because we are not talking about a firework, and setting it off to the great annoyance of everyone except the person setting it off, who must be the worst sort of fool that wants to inflict upon themselves and others the sort of explosion that, if you are close enough to it, can burst your eardrums, let alone scare you.

2070

I have nothing that annoys me more, outside of politics, than a firecracker on New Year's Eve at seven o'clock in the evening, when you are cutting the potatoes or putting on the bow tie, and – bada bing – out of nowhere ... especially when I used to live in the Upper Town and the resonance in a patio was enough to make you think you were literally in the middle of a war zone. You did not know what the hell it was, except you knew, of course, it was that bloody fool again with a firecracker at seven o'clock on 31st December – let alone when they are all going off between midnight and two or three in the morning, because the firecrackers go on for longer than the fireworks.

So it is important that we send the message that we are all agreed about this. We can do a law and we will do a law, we can make a provision for enforcement and we will make provision for enforcement, but here the issue is education. It is about the value of things. What value to the individual, to the community, to one's own family, of a non-beautiful firework that is a firecracker, that causes huge annoyance? I think that is where we all need to converge and send a unified signal that this is worthless to our community, it annoys most of us, it affects the most vulnerable, it affects pets, it affects people who we should all, as a community, be wishing to work together to protect in any circumstance, whether it is between midnight and one in the morning on New Year's Day or at any other time. At seven o'clock on New Year's Eve now one has become used to the fact that at any time there could be a firecracker, but there are times during the rest of the year when some bod will think it makes sense to set off a bleeding firecracker. To what effect? Scare the bejesus out of one's neighbours? Is this really what people find value in?

I put it to hon. Members that we agree that anybody who is engaged in just setting off a firecracker is stretching the limits of credulity of why humanity is civilised, and that that is the message we should send together from this place. We should send it without any difference between us. That does not affect individuals' personal liberties to do firework displays in a responsible manner by buying a box that is approved for use, which is more light than heat, to put it that way – in other words, is a beautiful display, is not a loud display – and that the legislation should assist that. I think the people who retail fireworks in Gibraltar have all demonstrated that they are responsible. They provide things that are attractive, that are safe for children, that are safe for those seeing them – of course, in the hands of a person who is responsible in setting them off.

I read an excellent piece in the The Times two days ago about fireworks displays and about displays where individuals try to set off the firework in a way that aims at the grandmother walking nearest your house and in order to maim, as if that were fun. This is the point I was making to the Hon. Mr Phillips before. This is not a national problem in Gibraltar. This is obviously a problem of a particular type of pyromania that needs to be controlled and needs to receive a very clear message from this place in legislation, in regulation and in guidelines, but also in positioning of all

2110 of us here, respecting personal liberty in other situations but also sending more than just the message, also legislating to ensure that people know that there are certain behaviours which are not going to be tolerated.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I do not think I will be speaking out of turn if I say on behalf of my colleagues that we probably would agree with what he has just said in respect of illegal fireworks.

2120 It may be that we perhaps do not even need legislation and the existing legislation will cover the required needs. It seems to me that once a year we take great joy in going back to the days of the Great Siege and smelling the gunpowder and the sounds of what it must have been like at that time, and perhaps we should record it for posterity, but if I can go back to my hon. colleague Mr Phillips' Question 29 about entertainment licences – and the Minister has made reference that within the entertainment licence there will be requirements for a risk assessment and such like things, which ... What I want to get to, Mr Speaker, is the legal fireworks and how the legal fireworks are being controlled in a way as to minimise risk to the public. I can say I actually saw people setting off not just one, two or three, but six, seven or eight fireworks from the roadside, which cannot be right. I was wondering if the Minister had any information as to how many entertainment licences were actually applied for during the period, and if there were none, 2125 whether perhaps the answer might be some kind of public awareness campaign leading up to New Year, saying 'Please apply for a licence because then we can check as to safety etc.'

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, indeed. Mr Speaker, I did qualify by saying fireworks displays per se, in the sense that if somebody is organising a fireworks display to entertain, they would need it. Technically, one could say that if you are on your terrace with a fireworks display, you need an entertainment licence, but then we come into your own personal liberties and I think we will all agree there are certain fireworks, like the small snow fountains – the only ones that were around when I was a child – and sparklers and so on ... It might be ridiculous, it might be argued that it may be a step too far, and this is why I said that what we are looking at is to set out limits to dates, times and locations for private fireworks to be set off, as well as limiting the type of fireworks that can be used, because a couple of sparklers and a couple of snow fountains on somebody's terrace are not going to be an issue, certainly from the noise point of view, and minimal danger. As soon as you light a match, technically you are in danger, but it is not much more than that, and that is not in the same category at all as the firecrackers that the Hon. Chief Minister has been talking about. 2145

2140

So we need to find a way round it. It is not easy because enforcement clearly will be difficult. At one extreme you could have the whole of the Police Force out on New Year's Eve instead of at home with their families and you are going to arrest half of Gibraltar. So there is, as the Hon. Chief Minister has said, a certain amount of common sense, education and spreading the message in order to ensure that that is the case. There is a public health element as well, I must say, and I did forget to mention that the Public Health promotion persons are also invited to that meeting because they can also contribute to some of the dangers and spreading the message, but spreading the message is actually critical in this. 2150

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, can I ask the Minister for the Environment if he or his Government have considered alternative proposals that would help to wean us all off the fireworks – like drone displays, for example, which are cleaner environmentally and are a quieter option and would help slowly to move people's expectation, in a way, on fireworks? 2160

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, yes, we have looked at this. We have even looked at so-called silent fireworks, which do not really exist. They are low-noise fireworks. They make less noise, but nevertheless they do make a noise.

2165 Drone displays are hugely expensive. We did have a proposal, for the year when COVID hit, that we were looking at – it had not been agreed – and I seem to remember it cost about £¼ million, which clearly is preposterous. You cannot decide to go ahead with a display until the last minute, depending on weather. If we have what we would all call un levantasos, that is money clearly out the window. So we have looked at these options and they do not seem to be realistic for Gibraltar. (A Member: Yet.) Yes, yet.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q33/2023

Devil's Tower Road –

Provision of green spaces and recreational parks for residents

Clerk: Question 33/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

2175 Hon. D J Bossino: The Eastside development will have green areas for residents. What plans does the Government have to provide residents of Devil's Tower Road with green spaces and recreational parks for families?

2180

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, these green areas will be literally round the corner for residents of Devil's Tower Road. In addition, several of the private development proposals for Devil's Tower Road include open green spaces, and the Development and Planning Commission is likely to make these a planning condition.

Hon. D J Bossino: Which are the developments he is referring to? He mentioned several. Does he have that information?

2190 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Not in detail. I do not want to risk giving the wrong name. At least one development I think already has outline planning, but there are perhaps two or three others, and I know of two that I have seen that do provide open courtyard areas and green spaces.

I cannot speak for the Development and Planning Commission in this place, but I have enough experience in the Development and Planning Commission to believe that these will become requirements.

Q34/2023

Review of entertainment legislation –

Update

Clerk: Question 34/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Please provide an update regarding the promised review of entertainment legislation.

2200 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, entertainment legislation is currently in the final stages of redrafting. It is intended to de-conflict the current Entertainment Act and Leisure Areas Act to make the requirements clearer and able to be more effectively enforced. This, together with the new Culture Act which I have announced in past Budget speeches, will greatly enhance the community's ability to enjoy leisure and cultural activities with the least possible negative impact on others. I am intending to publish both Bills in coming weeks.

2210 Hon. D J Bossino: Is he able to give us a taster of the type of things that they – I think he has mentioned two pieces of legislation – are likely to cover? And in respect of those two where I think he mentioned decoupling them, are they going to be repealed, and is this a new Act that is going in their place?

2215 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: The form that this will take is yet to be determined. There are different provisions and sometimes almost conflicting provisions between the Leisure Areas Act, which refers to some particular areas, and the Entertainment Act, and there are different authorities responsible. This gives rise to inconsistencies, which can be confusing. We are trying to de-conflict that and merge them into one. So it is likely that one of them, probably the Leisure Areas Act, will be repealed, but all the positive things in there will be incorporated into the Entertainment Act.

2220 I have had a number of meetings with the industry, the entertainment industry and the catering industry – on which there is an impact in areas such as Chatham, Casemates and so on – and I have undertaken to discuss the near-final drafts with them. We were going to have a meeting on that yesterday, but unfortunately, for logistical reasons, it did not take place. It is down in my diary for the next few working days and I will be happy to update the hon. Member directly if he wants to ask me in a couple of weeks' time.

2225 Hon. D J Bossino: And in respect of the question I asked about a taster of the measures he thinks those pieces of legislation are likely to cover, is he able to give us some information in relation to that? I would have thought there would be an element of control as to timings, because clearly it is a very difficult balance that needs to be struck here between those who are bothered by the music noise and those who want to express themselves through music.

2230 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: It is almost a little bit worse than that because there are certain provisions in the Public Health Act and then are provisions in the Crimes Act, and they do not always ... they have different authorities – the Police do one, the Environmental Agency do one – and it is confusing for a restaurateur or an event organiser to have to deal with all these different ... We try to do it administratively. Certainly we are all talking together a lot more, but it is difficult to go into details without just saying that yes, it will deal with things like times, decibel levels and that sort of thing, so that people have a clear indication of what is and what is not allowed. It might also be that on particularly special days – say, for example, National Day – there would be more ability to be open longer and that sort of thing. That is what we are talking about, so that people can enjoy leisure activities with the least possible negative effect on, very often, residents who live nearby.

Cavalcade –
Cost of private security

2245 Clerk: Question 35/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, what financial contribution did the Government make for the payment of private security for the Cavalcade?

2250 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I will just ask the question I asked before, which is obviously ... It became clear during interviews on the subject that this was a contribution that the organisers had to seek from Government because the Police had decided, on this occasion, not to provide duties that presumably in previous Cavalcades had been provided. To what extent was there any discussion between the organisers and the Government, or consultation with the Government, before that decision was taken by the Police?

2260

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, there had not been a Cavalcade for a number of years, as we know. Certainly it is true the Cavalcade is organised by the Independent Cavalcade Committee, as we know, and they did express this view – I believe it was in an interview in the Gibraltar Chronicle – saying that they had had to cover aspects. The Hon. Minister for Justice has explained all the things that the Police did do, but there were some things that the Police used to do, like marshalling for example, which they are no longer doing. This was communicated through meetings of the Safety Advisory Group, at which the Police are represented. Then I held meetings directly with the Police, the Cavalcade Committee, my team at the Ministry of Culture and with Gibraltar Cultural Services, who assist the Cavalcade Committee in the organisation, to discuss how we were to be absolutely certain that there would be no gaps because of the changes in the Police emphasis on what their duties are. The meeting was successful and the Police did provide substantial support – for example, in dealing with traffic, in dealing with the movement of the carrozas, the trailers, and so on – and the gap that it was felt was left in the marshalling and perhaps frontline security was covered by the Cavalcade Committee through engagement of a security company that, as I have referred to, cost £4,500.

2275

Hon. K Azopardi: And did the Police share with the Government, in the discussions, why on that day they could not provide the services they had on previous occasions?

2280

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: This was not specifically on that day. The Police explained that they have reassessed their role in certain areas following a review and that they felt they had to concentrate on things which only the Police can do and that other things needed to be covered more directly by event organisers, but this is not exclusively for the Cavalcade.

2285

Hon. K Azopardi: And of course this not a one-off, precisely because of what the hon. Member has just said, that it is not about the Cavalcade. As I understood the Police explanation in the public domain, it is about public events and similar handling of events, the Police taking a view that they will do certain things but not others because of that principle, that they should be dedicated to other things. That will have a knock-on effect on the cost of other public events, and organisers may also seek contributions from the Government. And so it may not be £4,500 – £4,500 may be 2295 the Cavalcade, but if there are a number of events, the annual cost of the Police decision in this case might actually be much more significant than that. Does the hon. Member agree? And if so, has that been discussed with the Police to get a finer understanding of why, in respect of these matters, the Police cannot still do the traditional services that they were doing?

2300 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I cannot speak for the Police. Clearly the decision of the Police is not for me, it is for the Police, but the implication that there will be other areas in which event organisers, be it the Government or others, may need to spend some more money on separate security is a correct assessment.

2305 Hon. K Azopardi: I was just trying to probe whether the Government has had a discussion with the Police, given that the Police are making an assessment on effective policing and as to its role, but it is against the backdrop of a wider public finances situation, whether the Government has engaged with the Police in relation to this issue on a value-for-money basis given the current situation.

2310 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the hon. Member is asking the Minister for Culture a question about value for money for the Police across the board. (Interjection by Hon. K A Azopardi) Well, it would not come up in the discussion because the Hon. Minister for Culture would not be discussing with the Police value for money across the public finances and everything that it does. I referred him to this question when he was asking the Minister for Justice about the Cavalcade, but now he is asking the Minister whose responsibilities include the Cavalcade as a cultural event about the responsibilities of the Minister for Justice and, indeed, my own.

2315 The HMIC report, which is the relevant determining factor for the Police, arrived, I believe, sometime in the early autumn. The next spending round, as it would be known in the UK – the next Budget – will be fixed by the end of the first quarter of this calendar year. We will have the negotiations and discussions across all the Departments for spending, and of course this will be an issue that will be raised in the context of the Ministry for Justice’s budget and the Police budget and something that will be raised by Sports and Culture Ministries in respect of their respective events also, I am sure.

2320 The HMIC report, which is the relevant determining factor for the Police, arrived, I believe, sometime in the early autumn. The next spending round, as it would be known in the UK – the next Budget – will be fixed by the end of the first quarter of this calendar year. We will have the negotiations and discussions across all the Departments for spending, and of course this will be an issue that will be raised in the context of the Ministry for Justice’s budget and the Police budget and something that will be raised by Sports and Culture Ministries in respect of their respective events also, I am sure.

2325 So it will have an effect. It requires a discussion. We completely respect the independence of the Police to determine what they should and should not do with the resources that are allocated to them by the Parliament and we do recognise that policing has changed and that policing the modern world is not the same as policing the world in which we might all remember the Cavalcade etc. I certainly agree that a police officer paid as a police officer is not the sort of individual we would consider it is value for money to see marshalling in the Cavalcade, but as I think the hon. Member was told in the first answer by the Minister for Justice, the Police were doing all the things we would expect the Police to be doing – traffic issues etc. and also plain-clothes policing, ensuring that they were making us safe and noting that there was no threat during the course of the Cavalcade for those of us who attended the Cavalcade.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q36/2023
Outdoor cleaning –
Satisfaction level re contractors

2335 Clerk: Question 36/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What is Government's current level of satisfaction with its outdoor cleaning contractors?

2340 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, our level of satisfaction is 'fair'. I believe there have been clear improvements in cleaning in recent months, but there is always room for more improvement and the Environment Department will continue to monitor and work with the contractor to improve further.

2345 I must add, as the Chief Minister stated last time we discussed this in the House, that the issue of cleanliness starts with those anti-social individuals who deposit litter and rubbish in the first place.

2350 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for his answer. I understand when he says that the issue of cleanliness starts with all of us, but it is a fact that everywhere one looks in Gibraltar, streets, pavements and corners are dirty. This is not 'rumourology'; this is clear evidence. Nowadays, with social media, people post things which are, some of them, down to our own responsibility, but other cases – most cases, from what we see – are a basic, fundamental lack of maintenance and cleaning. So when the Minister says he is fairly happy and he is continuing to monitor, can I ask in what way does he maintain the line of communication or accountability of these cleaning contractors, to make sure that they keep up or improve the level of cleanliness we currently have?

2360 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I repeat that I believe cleaning has improved in recent months, and it is also a fact that I have countless examples of an area having been cleaned and within the hour you can take photographs again and there has been dumping of waste etc.

2365 I believe there has been an improvement. The Department of the Environment has a Cleansing section and they are in regular daily contact with the contractors, chasing and trying to ensure that the contractual areas are cleaned routinely, and wherever we identify, as we do, a particular area where there has been excess litter or rubbish deposited and so on, they are sent out to clean. I repeat: I think that the situation is improved and improving.

2370 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you, Mr Speaker, for that. Can I just ask the Minister if into the future this Government, if it remains in office, will continue to look at renewing, on expiration of contract, these cleaning contractors – if they will continue to look to work with them and renew their contracts?

2375 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, this a contractual matter that needs to be discussed at the time. I do not think this is a supplementary that necessarily follows on from the question, but in any case it is a contractual matter that would have to be discussed at the time with the appropriate people.

2380 Clerk: Question 37 –

Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful, Mr Speaker – just one hopefully short question in relation to the cleanliness of our streets.

2385 I think the hon. Lady puts a very important question to the Minister. This is a complaint that many of us on this side of the House receive, and for the Minister to say that the level of satisfaction is fair ... I think we should do better than fair. We have thousands of people coming to visit us in this community and we rely on that level of income in terms of tourism. I think it is important that we try to get the best possible value out of those who are performing that service.

2390 We have endless complaints in the community about the cleanliness of our streets. Something has to be done about that. I do not think we are getting the best value from the service that we are paying for, and this is reflected by the comments that Members of this House receive on a daily basis. I think more needs to be done. Does he not agree with that?

2400 We had a situation where we had a huge number of complaints. We worked with that contractor to try to fix those complaints. We could not fix them, we were not making progress, so we changed the contractor. In keeping with the rules of the contract and the tender rules, we went out to tender, we selected a new contractor, we got very positive comments as a result of the new contract and things had turned the corner. I am sorry to say, and it is not an excuse, 2405 COVID happened, Brexit happened – COVID in particular, here, seems to have put a bit of a spanner in the works – and things got worse. They are now getting better. We are very much on top of it. We want it to be perfect. I would like to be able to eat a fried egg from the street, when it gets hot enough to fry one, just by laying it on the tarmac, but you cannot even do that in Switzerland, to use the notional cleanest place in the world. You might be able to do it in North 2410 Korea, but we are not proposing that regime. We will stay on top of it.

I must say I also think it is important to reflect that, as hon. Members have heard me say before, the Hon. Minister and I live this. This is so important that it has come to my office. The Hon. Minister has usually run this, but he has asked me for help on particular aspects and, in particular, the finance aspects. We see what the contractor also sees, an area cleaned spotless at 10 o'clock 2415 in the morning – and I will tell the hon. Gentleman the area: it is the area from Waterport Terraces up to the North Mole where the cruise liner terminal is – a cruise ship arrives and people start to come ... A photograph from a citizen on social media, 'Disgraceful – people coming from the cruise ships and this area is dirty with dog doo-doo and all the rest of it all over the place; the contractor really needs to get its act together.' The contractor comes and says, 'I cannot believe this. Here is my photograph of 10 o'clock in the morning. This photograph is 11 o'clock in the morning. There 2420 was no dog doo-doo there.'

One of the things we are hoping to introduce is that the contractor, when they leave the place spic and span, will photograph it and put it on social media: 'Waterport Road, spic and span, 10 o'clock in the morning – Yours, the contractor,' so that when the next photograph comes up – 2425 'Disgraceful, Waterport Road, dog doo-doo and tourists there, 11 o'clock in the morning' ... It is the dog's fault, unless somebody is moving the doo-doo there. (Interjection) Well, exactly, it is the owner's fault. I was obviously speaking in jest. The poor animal needs to do it somewhere. I am sure it is our fault. Mr Speaker, the modern Gibraltarian rightly cares about the cleanliness of the street, but should also rightly not allow his dog to do the thing there when the area was spick and span at 10 o'clock in the morning. 2430

We had the same issue in the estates. In the estates: 'It's disgraceful – look at how dirty this area is.' Then you see the photographs. It was perfect at nine o'clock in the morning when they left, or it was perfect at 11 o'clock when they left – they do different places at different hours – and then it is not the 500 people living in the estates, it is the five g-u-a-r-r-o-s in the estate who do what they do in that period who create the problem. We had it – you are never off when you are a Minister, Mr Speaker – over Christmas. A refuse dump in an estate ready to receive all of the rubbish that the households were going to generate – perfect. What does one clever bloke do? 'I cannot be bothered opening the door and going in.' We discussed this in the last House. It happened again. Boom! His pile of rubbish at the entrance. What happens? The next guy comes 2435 along and says, 'Oh, there is rubbish there. It must be full inside. I am not going to open it.' Boom! 2440

I have the photographs of the pile of rubbish inside and the spotless refuse area inside with the door working perfectly. It is not that the door did not work or it required a weightlifter to open it, because the door had also been fixed. Perfect. Come on! There are limits to what we can require Government to do for us. Otherwise, we have not got enough Ministers, even if I went off my 2445 senses, went to the Governor and made them all Ministers too, we posted each other outside each refuse area in every estate, waiting for people to come, and took the rubbish from them as they arrive at the refuse collection point. Again, it is not the 900 families living in an estate, it is the nine that create the problem for all the others on the roads and the estates etc.

There must be a solution. Civic pride is part of it, responsibility is part of it, the contractor is 2450 part of it, the Government is part of it, but none of it does it all. It requires the same level of input from all of us, the conviction from all of us that we want a cleaner Gibraltar, that we will do our bit. If we do our bit as individual citizens, then we may find that the contractor is doing his bit, that the Government is funding it to do sufficient work and that what is missing is the guy who 2455 owns the dog that does its doo-doo and its pee in the corner, which then goes black. That is not 'rumourology', the corners are black, but after dogs doing it and doing it you would have to get on your knees and scrub every day, and it is just impossible to fund that, even when we had a surplus of £80 million. We cannot fund somebody to get down on their knees with Vim and a wire brush on every corner in Gibraltar to get rid of the dog pee. We have to recognise that this is a 2460 problem of our making and only we can unmake it – there is no contractor out there, there is no money that we can give, there is nothing more than civic pride – and that those few who are spoiling it for everyone should wake up and smell the dog doo-doo that all the rest of us have to smell, which they leave there, and understand the consequences of what they do.

Forget the tourists, forget us. What about one of our children falling down and scraping a knee 2465 in that area and getting an infection? That is the sort of thing that matters. Do you know how soul destroying it is for the Chief Minister of Gibraltar to take his children to school every day, to have funded to be cleaned the areas around every school in Gibraltar, for them to be clean at seven o'clock in the morning and covered in dog ... I want to say the word ... doo-doo, so that our children, all of our children, have to walk over it or stumble over it or step on it and take it into 2470 the classroom? Come on! Who is being this irresponsible? Don't blame the contractor at eight o'clock in the morning when it is being cleaned. We have to have that civic pride. We have to turn a corner. I do not know what has happened, but those few who have turned the wrong corner need to turn back.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the Hon. Chief Minister for his answer and I 2475 think I can get on board with a lot of what he is saying – I agree – but when he talks about doo-doo, and quite often, which is an issue, that brings me to have to ask what is going on with the enforcement of the dog DNA. We invested in that. Why are we constantly asking ourselves who these people are? Don't we have the infrastructure to catch these perpetrators out through the DNA system?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I gave figures recently, but the Hon. Chief Minister has suggested that all of us be tasked with the job of preventing the depositing of litter. If all of us were tasked with collecting samples of DNA, we still would not be able to cope. We do enforce, we do chase up, there have been fines and prosecutions, but we do need, as the Chief Minister 2485 has said, the support of the public in general in order to prevent this happening.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, thank you so much, I am really grateful.
I think a lot of it is down to education. I have seen some awareness come out on TV and media, but what about if we took it a little bit further and made sure that, like other countries, we provide 2490 little bins, little bin liners and little tools in order to help people be more responsible and aware of what they need to do?

2495 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, (Interjections by Hon. Chief Minister and Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon) you do not need to hand people bags and you do not need to provide special bins. I am a recent dog owner. You take your little bags, you pick it up, seal it and put it in a normal bin, like people do, and then you make sure that you – and we legislated to ensure that you have to – pour liquid, usually with soap in it, which does help. So there are ways to prevent all this ‘doo-doo’, for want of a better word, remaining there and becoming a problem.

2500 As the Chief Minister was saying, we cannot exonerate those who are responsible, and no matter how much we spoon feed them with bags and special bins and so on, if they are not going to be responsible they are not going to be responsible. It is a question of education and enforcement, and we are trying very hard.

2505 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, with your leave, I am not going to ask about dogs, because as a dog owner I agree that it is about responsibility of the dog owner. There are a lot of responsible dog owners out there and I am sure there is an irresponsible minority, of course, like everything.

2510 A lot of this debate has now veered into the deposit of litter, or whether certain dog owners are responsible or not. But that only deals with one aspect of the debate. Does the Minister agree that on the wider issue of adequacy of the cleaning – not the removal of litter or refuse or dog poo, but rather the adequacy of the cleaning, the scrubbing of the streets ...? Is the Minister satisfied with that? A lot of the complaints that we get are more about the adequacy of the cleaning.

2515 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, our level of satisfaction is fair. Is that satisfactory? But it is absolutely the same thing. You clean the street by removing the litter, removing the rubbish that has been deposited, then you come in and scrub it with the equipment or whatever and it is spotless at seven in the morning – and then at nine o'clock it may well not be. It is part of the same thing.

2520 Hon. Chief Minister: The hon. Gentleman says it is not spotless. In some areas it is absolutely spotless, in some areas it is not. That is why our level of satisfaction is fair rather than excellent. If we had said it was excellent, the hon. Member would say, ‘Well, look, it is not excellent.’ (Hon. K Azopardi: It is not.) But I think we are agreeing that it is fair. Although they are pressing us, I think we are agreeing that it is fair. That is to say fair is below good (Hon. K Azopardi: Yes.) and it is well below excellent, (Hon. K Azopardi: Yes.) but it is not terrible, because terrible, at least judging by the number of complaints we had, is where we were when we had the contractor we inherited.

2530 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q37/2023
Smoking and vaping –
Public Health plans re awareness campaigns

Clerk: Question 37/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

2535 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Has Gibraltar Public Health Department got any plans to spread awareness or launch campaigns on the effects of smoking and vaping and on laws relating to smoking and vaping for under-18s?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, awareness of the effects of smoking and vaping is a top priority for Public Health and for the Government. As a result, we made it an offence to sell or provide vaping products to the under-18s. This was very widely publicised at the time, in November last year. Additionally, we have required that every business with a licence to sell vapes has to display a notice saying it is illegal to supply them to any under-18s.

As explained in Our Nation's Health 2021, the current prevalence of smoking in the population of Gibraltar is estimated to be about 24% from the 2021 Lifestyle Survey, a figure still significantly higher than in the UK. The survey results also show that 51.9% of current and ex-smokers started smoking when younger than 17, and 75.1% when younger than 19. At present, we have no data on vaping and we will be seeking to obtain data.

We are concerned that the health impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic have resulted in increased smoking prevalence rates. Therefore, a clinical coalition was established during 2022, including the Director of Public Health, consultants in oncology, critical care and GPs to co-ordinate and improve GHA activity on the tobacco control agenda against the MPOWER framework. This framework assesses a country's approach to delivering the World Health Organization Global Framework Convention on Tobacco Control (FCTC). In December 2022 the Director of Public Health was invited to attend a WHO-hosted global online seminar to explore different countries' approaches to implementing article 5.3 of the WHO FCTC.

Public Health Gibraltar has supported and created campaigns where current smokers are supported to quit smoking. This has included STOPtober and World No Tobacco Day. It is currently running a confidential survey in secondary schools with the aim of assessing how many children are vaping. This survey has been supported by educational talks in the schools for both children and their parents and it has been well received by the Department of Education, parents and the general public. The smoking cessation clinic continues to be up and running in the Primary Care Centre. Public Health Gibraltar will continue to actively campaign in these areas.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for his exhaustive answer. Can I ask him, firstly, how many schools so far have been engaged and visited by these professionals in order to hear of the dangers and be made aware of the effects of smoking and vaping?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I cannot confirm that. I am making a note and I will obtain the information and make it available to the hon. Lady. I suspect it will largely be in the secondary sector, which is clearly the age when, even from the statistics, most of the young people start smoking. But I will confirm that and send this to the hon. Lady. As I usually do, I will copy the Clerk so that he is aware that that has happened.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Member once again. I would like to say that I currently have one child in each of the two secondary state schools here, and I know that they have not been spoken to, so that really leaves very little by way of this campaign having been launched.

I know we say it a lot, but it is a fact: this is election year. I think there are concerns by many parents especially on the vaping front, with their children, and I would ask him if they will commit to ensure that secondary schools are seen to as a matter of priority with a holistic team of professionals who will actually try to make a difference in terms of awareness campaign?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, as I have already said, we have legislated against vaping. The schools are very aware. The hon. Lady is privileged in having a child in each of the two schools, but the fact that her particular children may not have had the sessions does not necessarily mean that in such large schools they have not happened. But I will, obviously, obtain the information.

2590 Clearly this a priority, this a concern. As a grandparent now of a child in the first year of one of the secondary schools, it is a concern to me and my family, as well as to her and her family.

I am confident that the new team of health promotion officers in Public Health who have come in recently with a great deal of energy are well on top of this matter and I will certainly discuss it with them again and with the Director of Public Health to ensure that we do as much as we can to discourage vaping.

2595 I also mentioned before the possibility of other measures in relation to the disposable ones, which will be relevant because I suspect that the majority of young vapers will be using these colourful disposable ones, rather than the bigger ones.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

2600 Just one more point, and if he has already covered it in his long answer I apologise – maybe I did not catch it. Can I ask the Minister, if he has not already said, whether they will be upping their media campaigns on TV and on social media, which really is where the youth are mostly engaged? Do they have plans or do they have a budget to increase the exposure on social media and TV primarily?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, that is the intention.

Q38/2023
National Theatre –
Funds raised and target budget cost

Clerk: Question 38/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

2610 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Since its calls for funding for a National Theatre, how much has the Ministry for Culture raised and what is the target budget cost in terms of funds required to execute the build and delivery of the theatre?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

2615 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, funds have been contributed or pledged via the National Theatre Foundation, which is independent of the Government and so it would not be appropriate for me to give the details of its fundraising activities and plans here. A number of donations, however, are already in the public domain and further sizeable contributions from sponsors are expected to be announced soon by the Foundation, together with details of further fundraising activities.

The project does not only include a 1,000-seat National Theatre, it also includes a new cultural hub with a 200-plus-seats studio theatre, an expanded exhibition centre and library, as well as catering and bar facilities. The estimates are currently being reviewed by cost consultants and once again it will be the Foundation that will place the information in the public domain.

2630 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the Minister again for his answer and the information he has provided. Considering that I think it is in two manifestos already from the GSLP that they talk about theatre land ... I know they bought the Queen's with the intention of that being the beginning of the theatre district. All this in a manifesto to now the Government not contributing at all and the Ministry for Culture having to find donations, yet the Government helps by way of £100 million to the sporting fraternity. How do we go from two manifestos of the arts and culture and promising to provide a great big National Theatre – which I think would be fantastic – to the Ministry for Culture having to raise everything itself through donations and £100 million being poured into football?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, the Government has not contributed £100 million. This is not an area that I am an expert on, but I think it is well clear and it has been publicly stated that it is not a Government allocation.

2640

We are in the reality of a post-COVID financial situation. I am very confident that had we not gone into lockdown in March 2020 we would already have had the first performance in the new Gibraltar National Theatre. I am absolutely convinced of that, but we have to face reality. I am confident that the Foundation is making progress and that this will become a reality sooner rather than later. But the reality is that whereas COVID was not even on the horizon when we, for example, built our fantastic sporting facilities, it clearly was very much around the corner when we started this latest project. But I am still confident. I cannot give details on behalf of the Foundation, who are aware of my answer and are comfortable with the answer I have given, but they will be announcing things very soon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for his answer, but with respect he has not actually answered my question. The Government has not answered the question. We already had a stadium. The Government has not contributed £100 million, it has facilitated £100 million through its own National Savings Bank, effectively. So how can we square extra help – funding facility, however you want to put it – for a stadium for the sporting fraternity, which of course is important, yet nothing but relying on donations for us to expand our arts and culture?

2655

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, arts and culture are funded around the world from donations in many respects. There is lottery money in the United Kingdom, which goes to sport and to art and culture.

2660

The hon. Lady says that she has not heard the answer from the hon. Gentleman to the question she asked. Well, first of all, the hon. Gentleman specifically said that there is not going to be £100 million provided by the Government for a national stadium, because there is not going to be ... Even the work that is going to be done under the auspices of the Savings Bank provides a development project in that amount to fund a stadium that costs less, but the development costs that, subject to the final costings etc., which Joe Bossano is dealing with.

The hon. Member also told her the projects that we were designing as Government projects when we were looking at this as a political party and preparing manifestos were designed in the context of a pre-COVID world. Let's just try to understand that, so hon. Members can see what we are talking about. The last surplus we had was £80 million. Four years down the line we would have had £320 million of surplus, which we have demonstrated we would have been investing back into the community. The theatre needs £15 million to £20 million. We would have been able to build the theatre from the surpluses we would have had if our economy had continued to perform as it was performing before COVID hit.

We cannot be more honest with the hon. Lady. Once she gets the truth, there is no more honesty we can provide. That is not a lack of transparency, that is just the sum total of the reality that we are dealing with and every part of the world is dealing with – us in particular because we are small.

Our commitment to the arts and culture is not diminished. Quite the opposite, we have gone out of our way to find a way to finance and deliver this for the people who are involved in culture in Gibraltar, who are as important to us, as a Government, as the people who are involved in sports. Many of them are the same people. There is no degree of commitment from the Government which is different when it comes to sport than when it comes to culture. We have done so much for culture in the 11 years we have been here, we just have not been able to deliver 2685 this theatre. That is true, we have not been able to deliver this theatre. We are not running away from it. We are running towards trying to deliver it in a different way. What more can be asked?

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, why didn't the Savings Bank then fund any part of the National Theatre?

2690 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, perhaps she should ask the Minister with responsibility for the Savings Bank, (Interjection by Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon) but the Savings Bank is not funding things. The Savings Bank is investing in things, and so it needs a return from the things that it invests in so that it can be made whole as to its capital and the returns that it needs. If the hon. Lady is saying seriously 'Why is the Savings Bank not involved in this project?' then what she is saying is, 'John Cortes, build a theatre,' – and you could do this, it is perfectly legitimate – 'and ensure that you build it New York style, that you have eight stories of luxury housing on top.' Then you have the theatre, and the Savings Bank gets its return and its capital back. In New York, all the theatres are in the basements of skyscrapers. Here, we seem to have an aversion to the development of housing around something in order to finance it. Even when you build flats around the stadium, people are saying, 'Claro now flats ,claro para los mismos, claro' Well, this the way that you fund things.

2700 Hon. Members sometimes try to lead our community by the nose into believing a reality that is not extant anywhere else in the world, and perhaps if we were an oil-producing state we could do it, but we are not an oil-producing state yet.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q39/2023

Music Festival –

Whether to be hosted by Government this year

Clerk: Question 39/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

2710 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Will Government be hosting the traditional Music Festival this summer?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

2720 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I apologise if I did not look at that. I think I missed that session due to an injury. Can I ask the Minister if this purely down to a cost factor?

2725 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: I think I said in my previous question that if a private entity wants to organise a festival of this nature at their own expense, we the Government, and my team in Culture, would be very happy to support it, but yes, the decision was taken in order to prevent costs at the time we are facing at the moment, as has been discussed today in answer to several questions.

DIGITAL, FINANCIAL SERVICES, HEALTH AUTHORITY AND PUBLIC UTILITIES

Q40/2023

School intranet problems –
Update

Clerk: Question 40/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

2730 Hon. E J Reyes: Has Government been able to solve the intranet problems recently experienced in some schools, which at times give problems in updating attendance registers and communications between staff etc?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

2735 Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, ITLD identified the root cause of the issue and this has now been resolved. The schools' intranet and internet services are once again operating with normality.

2740 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, if the information I have is correct, these problems seem to have been there since the very start of the current academic year. If it has now been fixed, why has it taken more than a term to identify and be able to solve this problem?

2745 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the information I have is that there was an anomaly in the performance of a distribution switch. I am not sure how long it has taken for that to be established and then repaired. The corrupt file has been restored to a normal working version. I do not know how long it has been down or up for. That was not in the question, so I do not have the information here, but I am very happy to get back to him with that information as and when I am able to engage with the relevant team.

2750 Hon. E J Reyes: I appreciate, Mr Speaker, that the Minister obviously in his answer can only reply based on information given. Whilst I take up his offer and I will wait for him to be able to look further and come back to us, please can I ask the Minister to look into ...? The wording in my question is 'in some schools', so I am not referring to only one school. I know definitely one of the secondary schools is far more affected than the other, but it does affect both secondary schools and other schools. Some issues, as the Minister can imagine, are of extreme importance. Should 2755 an unfortunate emergency happen and we have to evacuate the building, unless we have an updated register, fire and rescue services could waste a lot of time searching for children who may or may not be in the building. Also, the morale of the staff – the way things work nowadays, you have this internal communication system, where one needs learning resources and so on. So I accept what the Minister saying, but I want him to look at the wider picture of all of the services
2760 that the intranet helps to facilitate when it is working properly.

2765 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, ITLD have dedicated individuals working in the schools, so all the issues that the hon. Member refers to are very much within their knowledge and care. It is precisely for the reasons the hon. Member has detailed – the importance of technology to schools – that we have people permanently based at the schools to ensure that these issues are dealt with and resolved as quickly as they possibly can be. That is why it was news to me that the hon. Member referred to the length of time. That is not the information I have, but I will go back and check. But yes, I can tell the hon. Member that ITLD treat the importance of technology in schools as a first priority and deal with it accordingly.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q41/2023
COVID and winter flu –
Measures in place to prepare

Clerk: Question 41/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

2775 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state what measures and resources were put in place to prepare for the double effect of COVID and winter flu on the Health Service?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

2780 Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, to prepare for the double effect of COVID and winter flu on the Health Service, the Government of Gibraltar, in conjunction with the GHA, have again afforded the community of Gibraltar the uptake of COVID and influenza vaccines, commencing with vulnerable and high-risk groups, followed by the wider population. Other measures put in place are strengthened
2785 segregated primary care clinics for those patients with COVID or flu symptoms, which run simultaneously with general GP clinics to help avoid cross-infections or spread. A&E have implemented a 24-hour, two-bedded short-stay unit to accommodate patients who require medical review and are expected to be discharged within less than 24 hours of their arrival to the department, subject to set medical criteria. The introduction of an eight-armchair rapid-care unit has been put in place, creating a new pathway of care for patients with lower acuity presentations.
2790 The re-introduction of mask wearing in all GHA premises commenced in December to protect and reduce exposure of staff and patients visiting GHA premises or attending appointments. In respect of in-patient areas, the GHA carefully manage and monitor patients in line with infection-control best practice and care for patients in isolation, where necessary. These measures are not affected by resource restraints but are implemented in line with best clinical practice whilst always aiming 2795 to achieve best value for money.

Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful for that very full answer by the Minister, Mr Speaker.

I was just wondering, insofar as the projection for the future, is it the case that these measures will simply be put in place at this time of the year where COVID, influenza A or other flu diseases
2800 occur? Will we simply just install those particular measures? And when will the GHA start ramping down on those particular measures that were implemented in response to the double effect of COVID and influenza?

2805 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, anybody who has switched on their television in the past three months and seen the quite horrific scenes in the United Kingdom will know just how much strain is put on our Health Services during this particular time of the year. What I am very pleased to see is that during this particular time we have managed to cope not well but extremely well, not just as a result of the infrastructure we have in the GHA but with the extra areas that I have just mentioned to the hon. Member to specifically help us deal with COVID and influenza at the same 2810 time. How long these will be going on for is an operational decision for the GHA to deal with it and is certainly not for me to engage in seeking to influence. It is entirely their call as to what they consider to be in the best interests of our community.

2815 What I can tell the hon. Member is that a number of the areas I have mentioned we are looking at continuing with because they have worked extremely well in respect of, particularly, A&E in terms of some of the facilities we have made available to them. We think that could work more longer term. So there are things that we are learning from the extra work that we put into this particular winter season and we will be seeing if any of these can be utilised on a more permanent basis. As and when that decision is taken I will, of course, communicate it to the hon. Member.

2820 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q42/2023
Knee operations –
Waiting time

Clerk: Question 42/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the waiting time for knee operations?

2825 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola):
Mr Speaker, the waiting time for a knee operation is currently nine months.

2830 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, that is consistent with some of the concerns that have been raised with Members on this side of the House about the obviously extraordinarily long time in obtaining surgical intervention in relation to knees in particular. We have been spoken to insofar as a particular number of incidences where those purported to perform the surgery on the knee are suggesting that those individuals should go private, as is the phrase being used, on the basis that they will find it very difficult to get that surgery done under the GHA. Obviously, those 2835 comments that were relayed to us were very concerning because it related to individuals who were performing those functions for the GHA, so I wondered whether the Minister had any information about that or any complaints received by him in relation to practitioners seeking to shunt individuals into the private sector to have these operations done – which will be done much 2840 more quickly, obviously, with a fee – rather than through the GHA, where these people, who have rightly paid their taxes and contributions all their lives, should receive that care within a reasonable amount of time.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, a number of points. The first point I would make is that I would ask 2845 the hon. Member to let me have any information he has that demonstrates that, because that would be extremely useful. It is totally unacceptable to Government and the GHA that that practice should happen. At the same time as I say that, I say that the waiting time of nine months is also totally unacceptable. As I mentioned to the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition when he asked some questions on the hon. Member's behalf in recent sessions, I hope by the end of this

To give the hon. Member an idea, in 2019 the waiting list for the operation was four months, in 2020 it was six months and in 2021 it was seven months. At the same time as I give you that 2855 information, I would tell you that during COVID 119 knee operations were cancelled through COVID. We did not operate. We stopped operating. So it was always obvious that, post-COVID, we had a lot of catching up to do. We did not have just the normal knee operations we were doing before COVID, in respect of which we had a four-month waiting time, or six months in 2020, just before COVID. So the nine months is actually quite logical but unacceptable.

I will revert before the end of this quarter with a strategy as to how we are going to deal with 2860 waiting lists to bring them back to what are acceptable levels, because I fully agree that the nine months is unacceptable. I hope that helps.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q43/2023
Excess deaths –
Number in last 10 years

Clerk: Question 43/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state the numbers of excess deaths for each year for the last 10 years?

I will now hand over to the hon. Member a schedule stating the number of registered deaths in the past 10 years, broken down by month. We are not in a position to provide information on the excess deaths for each year. In connection to the above, the GHA has confirmed that the total number of COVID deaths is 111, of which 93 deaths resulted from COVID and 18 deaths with COVID. Furthermore, I am informed that excess deaths is a complex calculation to measure the scale of a pandemic. The GHA has advised that once the 2022 census results are published, they will be in a better position to provide an accurate analysis. In conjunction with this, there are other clinical coding measures, which also need to be properly validated. Once this is provided to me, I will revert to the hon. Member.

2890 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I appreciate it is a complicated formula. In fact, in various countries across Europe and the United Kingdom they eventually end up with a percentage that then is broadcast to various news agencies that report this. Recently, there has been a very significant BBC report on excess deaths, the number of which obviously has been amplified as a direct result of COVID. Just for the hon. Gentleman's information, I think the figures were, from memory, Italy 3.5%, the UK 3.2%, Spain 1.8% and in France I think it was 1.4%. Whilst I understand that you have to understand how that figure is arrived at, as he has rightly said, I think it is interesting statistically for our community to understand what that figure might be. These are figures that are publicly available across the world, so whilst I understand the answer he has given me and I understand that a lot needs to be fed into that, I think, as with many statistics that the Government publishes, it is important to understand what that rate is in our community, so I would be grateful if he might be able to give us an indication at some point in the future when that would be publicly available.

Hon. A J Isola: Yes, Mr Speaker, I agree, as I know the Member will agree, it is important that when we deal with these numbers we get them right. So I would rather take a little longer in ensuring that we make the appropriate calculations before making anything public, but in the coming months I would hope to be able to give him the details that he has asked for.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am satisfied with that answer, of course, and I have no supplementary questions in relation to this.

Just going back to the addendum to the other question that we asked the Hon. Minister, I know in this House we like to compare ourselves to other jurisdictions in terms of performance and I think on occasion it is fair to do that when you are looking at jurisdictions with similar geographies and size and population etc., and I know we look at our closest neighbour insofar as the Health Service is concerned. I think it is fair to say that we always want to exceed expectations insofar as healthcare and that should be the marker for all of us in our community and for the GHA as well. So I think it was slightly unfair to suggest that we need to compare the nine month, to use his own words, entirely unacceptable delay to that of the United Kingdom, when we have seen, all of us in this House, and many in the public, the horrendous state that appears to be going on in the United Kingdom concerning healthcare and the provision of it, with people in ambulances outside the hospitals waiting for hours and hours on end to get into the hospital. I tend to agree with him on the nine months. I think it is unacceptable. It has been going up from four, as he said, in 2019, right up to nine months. I would be grateful if he would give that reassurance that he will provide us with that information as to how he is going to tackle, or at least the GHA is going to tackle driving down those waiting times across all the disciplines within the Health Service.

2925 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I understand the point he makes in respect of the comparisons, but I think the UK is the closest medical system and service that we can compare ourselves to. I think we have always looked up to the UK Health Service as being the panacea of Health Services, and it has been for much of the time. Indeed, that is why we send many of our patients there, because we believe it is the best we can do for our people. And so to compare ourselves in terms of how 2930 we are dealing with some of the services to them I think is perfectly legitimate, but the reason I do it is not to prove legitimacy, it is to demonstrate that the problems we are having are not just the same in the UK but very much worse in the UK. So when you measure the reality of life – the pandemic is real and the impact of the pandemic is real, not just here but there and everywhere else – I think we have to look more sensitively and actually appreciate that we have not done that 2935 badly. We are always very keen to knock ourselves, and in instances like this I think we need to look and say, ‘Okay, nine months is unacceptable, but actually, when you compare yourself to everyone else, we are doing pretty damn well.’

And so, to answer the last point the hon. Member made, yes, I will, within this quarter, come back with the strategy, something that the GHA and the senior management are actively working 2940 on to look at how we can reduce waiting lists across the entire spectrum of the GHA and what that will mean in terms of the cost, because there will be a cost in accelerating operations. Whether it is through more resources or subcontracting, outsourcing to other hospitals, for example, we will have to look at what all those are, but I will come back in the quarter with an idea.

2945 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q44-47/2023

GHA, Care Agency and Elderly Residential Services – Agency workers and workers with renewable contracts of 12 months or less

Clerk: Question 44/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, of the agency workers currently working within the GHA, how many of them have been working within that organisation for (a) less than a year, (b) more than 2950 one, two or three years?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola):
2955 Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 45 to 47.

Clerk: Question 45/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Of the workers currently working within the GHA with renewable contracts 2960 of 12 months or less, how many of them have been working within that organisation for (a) less than a year, (b) more than one, two or three years?

Clerk: Question 46/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

2965 Hon. D A Feetham: Of the workers currently working within the Care Agency and Elderly Residential Services with renewable contracts of 12 months or less, how many of them have been working within those organisations for (a) less than a year, (b) more than one, two or three years?

Hon. D A Feetham: Of the agency workers currently working within the Care Agency and Elderly Residential Services how many of them have been working within those organisations for (a) less than a year, (b) more than one, two or three years?

2975

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, in respect of Question 44, of the agency workers currently working within the GHA, 108 have been working for less than a year, 45 have been working for more than a year, 27 have been working for more than two years and 12 have been working for more than three years.

In respect of Question 45, of the workers currently working within the GHA with renewable contracts of 12 months or less, 17 staff have been working for less than a year, 17 staff have been working for more than a year, 18 staff have been working for more than two years and 17 staff have been working for more than three years.

2985

In respect of Question 46, of the workers currently working within the Care Agency with renewable contracts of 12 months or less, 33 staff have been working for less than a year, three staff have been working for more than a year, 22 staff have been working for more than two years and 19 staff have been working for more than three years. Of the workers currently working within the Elderly Residential Services with renewable contracts of 12 months or less, no staff have been working for less than a year, no staff have been working for more than a year, six staff have been working for more than two years and 26 staff have been working for more than three years.

2990

In respect of Question 47, within the Care Agency 137 agency workers have been working for less than a year, 88 for more than a year, 53 for more than two years and 39 for more than three years. (Interjection by Hon. D A Feetham) I am on Question 47 now. (Interjection by Hon. D A Feetham) Yes, the first part was in respect of the Care Agency, the second part was in respect of ERS, so now – (Interjection) ERS. No staff less than a year, no staff more than a year, six staff more than two years and 26 staff more than three years. Okay, Question 47, Care Agency? A hundred and thirty seven working for less than a year, 88 more than a year, 53 agency workers more than two years and 39 agency workers working more than three years. Care Agency. Within ERS, three agency workers have been working for less than a year, one agency worker has been working for more than a year, (Interjection) two agency workers have been working for more than two years, zero more than three years.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I thought that the answer – and everybody, all three of us, without discussing it, have actually come to the same ... We understood that in relation to the Elderly Residential Services, for Question 47 it was nought less than a year, nought more than one year, six more than two years, 26 more than three years. For the Care Agency I think it was 147 – I did not quite pick that one up – for less than a year, 88 for more than a year. I did not pick up more than two years ... 50-something and 39. Exactly. But he has now given an extra set of figures that I just ... We cannot rationalise it.

Can he provide us with perhaps a copy of his answer and then we can move on and come back? Unless, of course, the Leader of the Opposition wants to deal with it in a different way.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, Question 46 asks in respect of both the Care Agency and ERS, so there were two parts to answer Question 46. The first part is in respect of the Care Agency and the second part is in respect of Elderly Residential Services. That is the one with zero and zero. I then answered Question 47, (Interjection by Hon. D A Feetham) which asks also about the Care Agency and the Elderly Residential. So there are two bits to the answer to Question 46 and two bits to the answer to Question 47, which is exactly what I have given.

3020

Hon. K Azopardi: Sorry, I know I am cutting across my learned colleague's questions, but I think either he repeats the answers to Questions 46 and 47 or gives us a copy of the answer and then we can ask supplementaries when we have digested it. Whatever he prefers. We now understand what he has done, so either as a repetition or we can have a copy of the answer, whatever he prefers.

3025

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I am happy to give a copy of the answer, which is probably the easiest way, but all I have done is answer the questions. I have not sought to do anything that very clearly, in exactly the same way ... You will see that there is one part to Question 44, one part to Question 45, and then two parts to Question 46 and two parts to Question 47.

3030

Mr Speaker: Are we going to photocopy them, Mr Clerk, so we can issue two or three?

Q48-49/2023

Insolvency Act 2011 and Protected Cell Companies Act 2001 – Intention to amend

Q50-51/2023

Insolvency Rules 2014 and Notice of Specified Forms associated with Insolvency Act and Rules – Intention to review

Q48-49/2023

Legislation limiting liability of professional trustees –
Intention to introduce

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, does the Government intend to amend the Insolvency Act 2011?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

3040

Clerk: Question 49/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Does the Government intend to amend the Protected Cell Companies Act to bring it into line with the Insolvency Act 2011?

Clerk: Question 50/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Does the Government intend to conduct a review of the Insolvency Rules 2014?

Clerk: Question 51/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

3055 Hon. D A Feetham: Does the Government intend to review the Notice of Specified Forms associated with the Insolvency Act and Rules?

Clerk: Question 52/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

3060 Hon. D A Feetham: Does the Government intend to introduce legislation limiting the liability of professional trustees along the lines of the law in Jersey under Article 32 of the Trusts (Jersey) Law 1984?

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the Government understands that work is ongoing and that proposals may be made to Government in respect of these matters. Neither HMGOG nor the GFSC have received any such formal proposals as yet and will consider these if they are submitted. As the hon. Member knows, Government is always willing to give consideration to legislative proposals that are put forward by industry associations or professionals.

3070

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, he knows that I practise in this area, probably to a larger extent than most practitioners because about 80% of the work that I do is insolvency related, and of course I steered the Insolvency Act through Parliament and also had a hand in the drafting of the Act. Can I say to him that there are aspects of the Insolvency Act, which I steered through Parliament, that perhaps it is time, now, we ought to be re-examining?

3075

I will just give the hon. Gentleman one example, if I may, Mr Speaker, with your leave: the definition of insolvency. Under our Act, the definition of insolvency is balance sheet insolvency, cashflow insolvency – it is in the alternative, both. In England, the definition of insolvency is a company that cannot pay its debts, and then you test that overarching question by the balance sheet test and the cashflow test. What is the difference? Well, there are many companies that can pay their debts but be technically balance-sheet insolvent. In fact, a lot of start-ups, for example, start their lives as balance-sheet insolvent. There are very large companies that may carry contingent liabilities that may make them balance-sheet insolvent but they can still pay their debts. Under the UK Act, those companies would not be regarded as insolvent. Under our Act there is an argument that potentially they are insolvent because we do not look at the overarching question of whether the company can pay its debts, we look at the insolvency test in the alternative, and that potentially can give rise to difficulties. I am not going to go through all the other difficulties, but for example the forms are a complete mess, I have to tell you. I did not have a hand in the forms, but they are a complete mess and indeed we are now relying on forms from the UK and essentially using those forms for the purposes of any application that needs to be made.

3090

If, as an Opposition, we can make proposals to the Government in this area, is the Government willing to consider those proposals – acting constructively as an Opposition, we are prepared to do that – and potentially consider the amendments in this area, bearing in mind, of course, that at least two of us on this side of the House do practise in this area?

3095

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, as I said in my answer, Government is always willing to give consideration to legislative proposals that are put forward by industry associations or professionals, so the answer to the question is absolutely, without any difficulty. What I will say to him is whether they come politically from the Opposition or privately as a professional, I will always give whatever proposals we receive the seriousness they deserve.

The answer also said I am aware that industry professionals, the accountants who are consulting with other professionals in the industry, are going to be writing to us with some 3105 proposals. Whether those sit within what the hon. Member is thinking or not I do not know because I have not received those proposals yet, but I would certainly welcome his input and that of any of his colleagues who wish to make proposals to us, and we can consider them hand in hand with those we receive from the industries or through the Finance Centre Council, which is where I think it is going to come from because different associations within the Council are talking amongst themselves.

3110 So in short, yes, of course we will consider ... At the end of the day, we all want what is best for the jurisdiction in terms of our legislation and approach, and so I will happily welcome whatever representations he or any of his colleagues wish to make professionally or politically.

3115 Hon. D A Feetham: Would the Minister prefer that we make the proposals to him directly and then he can put them to the Finance Centre Council and other professionals, or would he prefer that we consult the Finance Centre Council before making any proposals to the Government in this area?

3120 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I think it is probably easier if they send what they believe to be the position and we can then deal with the necessary individuals. I think they will probably set up a small working group that we will liaise with and show them to, as we will, of course, with the regulator, whom we always consult with on any legislative proposals that we may receive in respect of financial services.

Q53/2023

Micro Business Systems Ltd – Employment of clerks at GHA

3125 Clerk: Question 53/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Further to the answer to Q586/2022, please confirm that MCB is indeed a reference to Micro Business Systems Ltd, and if not, which company it is; the date, duration and amount payable under the contract between the GHA and MCB; were the services supplied by MCB the subject of a tender process before the contract was secured by that company; and how many employees does MCB have or has had working at the GHA?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, he will identify many of these questions as the subject of an email that I sent to him after our exchange in the last session because he invited me to write to him – I think it was just before Christmas; he probably did not have a chance to attend to it – and I have repeated many of the questions I had in that email correspondence.

I think what he has provided by way of a snapshot is what the state of play was as at 11th January. In terms of the future, does he have information as to the duration? He has 3150 answered what the amount payable has been up until now under the contract, but does he have information as to the duration and the date of that contract?

Hon. A J Isola: In respect of the future, these arrangements will cease because if you understand the numbers that I have just given, you will see that what they are doing is providing support. They are not full-time employees, they come in to do specific things in different areas. 3155 So for nine of them this financial year £91,000 will tell you that they are not, obviously, full-time employees working at the GHA. To facilitate that, engagement has been made with the firm and they have agreed to come on to the bank system at the GHA, where they will be called as and when they are required and used from there, so these arrangements will shortly, by the end of this month, cease.

3160 It is almost impossible for me to tell him what the duration of the contract is. The reason for that is it is very uncertain as to when it started. The arrangement with MBS has been going on for rather a long time. It is not a system that we are happy with, which we have now addressed, working through the bank system for administrative support specifically in this area. The first arrangement entered into with Micro Business Systems was actually in 2009. There was no tender, 3165 there was no contract; there is an arrangement that has been continued since that time. Obviously, it is unacceptable for us to be in that position. Not that they have not been providing a service to us in the years we have been working with them, but we wish to regularise this arrangement because it is not acceptable, the manner in which we have been working up to date. So what we are doing in the manner that I have already described is to ensure that the new way 3170 of working will be far more transparent in accordance with our existing processes and procedures and we will rejig the manner in which we operate with them from now on.

So 2009 was the first interaction with MBS. There was not a tender. I have actually asked the Procurement department in what other areas have we sought tenders, and it is it is a bizarre list that I have received from Procurement, which is: tender for the supply of dental laboratory 3175 services, tender for the electronic modernisation of the Gibraltar Health Authority, tender for the appointment of a project manager, tender for the provision of orthodontics and prosthetic technical services, tender for the supply of security services at the GHA and tender for medical malpractice insurance 2010-11. All of those are between 2007 and 2009. The Procurement department have told me that everything since then has gone through a proper tender system, 3180 so I am hopeful that the next time he asks me a question, and anyone else, I will be able to confirm to him that yes, indeed, it has been done during our time and it has been by tender.

Hon. D J Bossino: Can I just press further in relation to one aspect, just so I am sure I have fully understood what he has said? When he talks about duration, if I put it to him how I understand 3185 the position, maybe he can confirm whether I have understood it or not. Is it an open-ended contract? Is that the current situation? He mentioned the period of a month within which I think a particular workstream he expects will be completed. Clearly I have not understood what he said and I would ask him to enlighten me.

3190 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, what I said was that in 2009 when the hon. Members were in Government, this work was contracted – I say ‘contracted’, taken on; there was no contract – there was no tender, so how long is that arrangement for? It does not really matter because the arrangement we have now entered into with them from the end of this month, from January, is 3195 that these nine who are currently working with us from time to time are going to be coming to us through the bank system, and that is a system that MBS are happy with. The employees will now be on the GHA bank and if they are needed they will be called in and come and work through that system.

Mr Speaker: Does the Hon. Daniel Feetham have any supplementaries on Questions 44 to 47? 3200

Hon. D A Feetham: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker.

In relation to the answers the hon. Gentleman has kindly provided to Questions 44 to 47, does he have a nationality breakdown? If he does not, I will ask the question again next time round, but does he have a nationality breakdown?

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I do, but not in a manner in which I can easily pass it over to him because, as you can imagine, there are many different nationalities that are providing different services to the GHA, Care Agency and ERS. What I will do is write to him and I will be happy for him to put any questions at the next session, if he wishes, in respect of that information. I do have it, but it is not in an order that I can easily either pass over or read to him.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I am happy with that. Is the Leader of the Opposition happy? Yes, the Leader of the Opposition is also happy.

In relation to Questions 45 and 46 there do appear to be quite a lot of workers who have been working on short-term contracts – in other words, on renewable contracts of 12 months or less – for more than two years, and also more than three years. In answer to Question 45, in the GHA it is 18 more than two years and 17 more than three years, and in answer to Question 46, in the Care Agency it is 22 and 19. Does he have an explanation for that, which can answer why there appears to be such a large number of people on short-term contracts over two and three years? It is almost as if those people have been here for a period of time that implies permanency.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I think the answer in respect of each area may well be different. For example, within the answer the hon. Member has there are professionals from many different disciplines – nursing, ambulance, medical, admin, AHP, pathology, domestic – and in each of those cases there may be different reasons. For example, it is an objective of this Government – and, I am sure, of the hon. Members opposite – to, wherever possible, place locals qualified in positions within the GHA. So if somebody is now studying or going through their training programmes and will be ready in 12 months' time, it is absolutely right that we continue their contract, renewing it until the time that person is going to be coming back, and then we can have a local person coming into a position. That is why we spend money on training them through university and further education. So there are very many different reasons as to why we will have renewable shorter-term contracts.

Another interesting point is that, for example, there are some doctors on fixed-term contracts that are continuously renewed more than three years – doctors, consultants – for, again, a host of different reasons. We are specifically focusing at this moment in time in our work on reviewing why we have consultants on renewable fixed-term contracts, and that is one of the areas we are looking to address in the short term.

I do not want to give a reason in respect of the numbers he has in front of him because the reasons are different for each discipline. I will be happy to try to dig deeper into that with the GHA, ERS and the Care Agency to understand the thinking or the policy, if there is one, in respect of in which particular area we behave in what way. That may be of more use to him than my surmising what I believe the reasons to be, because at the end of the day operational matters are in their hands and not mine.

3240

Hon. D A Feetham: If I may say so, that is a fair answer. I do know that some doctors within their yearly contract terms would obtain a percentage that would reflect perhaps a lump sum that they would be getting as compensation for the fact that they may not eventually get a pension, for example. I understand that.

3245

May I ask the Minister, could he, when he writes to me about the other question that I have asked, also break these down? In other words, Questions 45 and 46, in the over two years and the over three years, what are the posts, essentially? When we see the posts, there may be additional questions that we can then ask and drill down in relation to that. Of course, if he is so kind as to also perhaps provide some steer in relation to the policy in some of these areas, that would also be useful to the Opposition.

3255

Hon. A J Isola: Yes, Mr Speaker, I will be happy to do that.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can I just ask also, in relation to Question 44 and in respect of Question 47, which deals with the agency workers...? There are quite a number of agency workers there. Does the hon. Member have information as to which agencies those workers are derived from?

3265

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I will have to come back to him with that information because there are many of them that are specialist companies with whom we have one worker, so there are lots of them that are one, one, one, one, one, one, one. I will be happy to provide information in respect of what those disciplines are. There are some, for example, where nursing assistants are provided, which is an easy one to identify with a large number, but there are a significant number of them that are one each. I can get that information together.

3270

Hon. K Azopardi: Can I simply suggest to the hon. Member that if he is going to write to my colleague he includes that information and then we will have one consolidated answer – if that is acceptable to him?

3275

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q54-55/2023
Seasonal flu vaccinations –
Number administered by age

Clerk: Question 54/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

3280

Hon. K Azopardi: How many people have been administered the seasonal flu vaccine by the GHA to 10th January 2023?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 55.

Clerk: Question 55/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, how many people have been administered the seasonal flu vaccine by the GHA to 10th January 2023 broken down by the following age categories: (1) under 18; (2) 18 to 30; (3) 31 to 45; (4) 46 to 65; (5) over 65?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, 6,359 people have been administered the seasonal flu vaccine up to 10th January 2023.

The number of seasonal flu vaccines that have been administered by the GHA up to this date, broken down by categories, is as follows: under 18, 1,089; 18 to 30, 142; 31 to 45, 417; 46 to 65, 2,026; over 65, 2,685.

Hon. K Azopardi: Is the GHA – Government – satisfied with the take-up of the flu vaccine?

3305

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the GHA every year makes a strong effort to encourage the people of Gibraltar to be vaccinated, not just in respect of flu but in respect of COVID and others. It is never enough is the answer that I think I have to give the hon. Member. The GHA would prefer it if more people were vaccinated, and that is what it is always prepared for. So it will continue to encourage with its campaigns that more and more people come forward and receive the flu vaccine.

3310

Hon. K Azopardi: Does the Minister have statistics on previous years to answer the question of whether these numbers are within the norm of the take-up of the seasonal flu vaccine?

3315

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, no, I do not have that information here. I would have expected, as an instinct, that it will be higher, but I do not have that information. I will happily have it made available to him.

Hon. K Azopardi: And then finally, Mr Speaker, in relation to the category under 18, which is actually relatively high, and higher than I thought, can the Minister give us a bit more information as to why so many under-18s ...? Or is that part of some kind of schools vaccination programme?

Hon. A J Isola: That would be the only explanation, in my humble view, but that is just an opinion. I do not know the answer to that question. What I can tell the hon. Member is that if you look at 18 to 45, the under-18s are more than double that, so it is a significant number, but I will find out. I suspect it is an educational campaign that has led to that number.

GHA Director General –
Extension of contract

3325

Clerk: Question 56/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

3330

Hon. K Azopardi: Has the GHA or Government now agreed terms with the GHA's chief executive as to whether his contract will be extended or whether he will leave his post when his current contract expires?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

3335

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, the position in respect of the Director General remains as per my answer to Question 424/2022.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, it has been a bit of time since then, and from recollection I think the hon. Member said to us that his contract expires ... well, if it is January now I think it expires in two, three or four months, something like that. Obviously, if he is going to go, and assuming that the GHA wants to retain a chief executive, it will take some time for someone to be recruited, so a decision would need to be taken almost immediately for that process to be engaged. An advertisement and recruitment process may itself take a few months, and the selected individual might need to give three or six months' notice if they are occupying another post. So what is the GHA doing, in the context of all that, to try to get a degree of certainty or finality on the decision-making process? I appreciate it is not the GHA that needs to take a decision because I think the hon. Member indicated last time that it is the preference for the individual to remain, but equally there needs to be a decision one way or the other, because otherwise we are going to wake up one morning and his contract will have finished.

3350 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, yes, it is something that we are actively engaged with the Director on. The GHA is very keen to retain him, as is the Government. It is a question of how long he stays for. He has always viewed his appointment, as I said last time, as interim. What I have no doubt about is that we will not be left in the lurch. In other words, he will continue to support us for as long as it takes, if we are not able to agree a longer term, to see us through the period in which we need to find a replacement. But I would certainly, were he to be leaving shortly, want to have him sitting with me making that decision, because of the knowledge he has attained and the understanding he has of the GHA, in any recruitment process.

3360 Hon. K Azopardi: Yes, Mr Speaker, but if the GHA wants him to stay and he wants to stay, what is the issue that is holding this up? I see the hon. Member shaking his head, so I will give him an opportunity to answer.

3365 Hon. A J Isola: Well, Mr Speaker, I have always said the Director General has always seen his appointment as interim. This was never a permanent appointment. If you look at the original press release, that was made quite clear. That position remains the same, so the work ongoing is to seek to persuade him to stay longer, nothing more than that.

3370 Hon. K Azopardi: In the discussions with the GHA, does he at least accept that as we get closer to the expiry deadline and if the GHA runs out of time ...? Is it the attitude of the GHA and of the individual concerned that he will at least accept a short-term appointment to allow a recruitment process of someone else to happen?

3375 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I think the support of the Director General to the GHA is such that, as I mentioned before, I do not believe he would leave us in the lurch and he would help us through that process were we to be in that position. I do not want to pre-empt where we will end up, but I think it is fair to say that he will continue to work with us to ensure that we are not left in any way exposed or that the GHA in any way finds itself without some direction and leadership.

GHA Medical Director –

Reason for resignation; expected date of new appointment

Clerk: Question 57/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

3380 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, what was the reason for the resignation of the GHA Medical Director?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

3385 Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 58.

Clerk: Question 58/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

3390 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, when does the GHA expect a new Medical Director to be appointed?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

3395 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I refer the hon. Member to a public statement made by the GHA on 3rd January 2023.

3400 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, as far as I recollect, that statement did not really provide answers to these questions. It communicated that the Medical Director had decided to stand down – resign – but it did not explain the reasons for it, nor did it explain in any great detail what the process was or the expectations on the timescale of a new Medical Director, so I gave the hon. Member an opportunity to answer that.

3405 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the question asks what was the reason. The reason was that he resigned. I am not able to give any more information. I have not been involved in that process at all; it is a matter entirely for the GHA as to its discussions with its own Medical Director.

3410 In respect of the recruitment, the statement on 3rd January said ‘the recruitment process for a new Medical Director will begin next week’. It has begun. There is a deadline for those positions to be applied for, so the process has already started and I hope it will be dealt with satisfactorily and expeditiously by the GHA shortly, quickly.

3415 Hon. K Azopardi: Yes, so the Hon. Minister has just confirmed that his original answer, which referred me to the statement on 3rd January 2023, did not actually answer the question I had put, because the 3rd January statement says that he has resigned but I have asked for the reason for the resignation.

3420 Is the Government not aware of the reason for his resignation? Did he not give reasons for it in his discussions with the GHA? If someone as important as the Medical Director, who occupied a post as Medical Director, who then did not occupy a post as Medical Director during such time as there was litigation ongoing, then suddenly is restored as Medical Director and resigns ... Are we being asked to believe that the Minister for Health did not ask what the reason for the resignation was?

3425 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I think the hon. Member needs to understand the basic premise of my appointment as Minister for Health, which is in respect of matters of policy. All operational matters, including the appointment of nurses, doctors and consultants, are in the hands of the GHA and the senior management team of the GHA, which has a board to whom they are answerable. So it has nothing to do with me, the resignation of any member of staff, whether it is a cleaner, a nurse or the Medical Director. If the hon. Member wants to understand what the reason for somebody resigning is, ask them. I am certainly not going to get involved in speculating as to what could or could not have been the reason for an individual resigning. So in respect of 3430 that part, it is an operational matter entirely in the hands of the senior management of the GHA who has that responsibility.

3435 In respect of the recruitment, the statement says ‘the recruitment process for a new Medical Director will begin next week’ and it did, so that process is in train. That is what the statement said on 3rd January 2023, so I do not know what more I can tell my hon. Friend.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, the GHA employs more than a thousand people, so obviously, if someone down the chain decides to leave their post I do not expect the hon. Member to ask, but if the chief executive – the Director General, as they call him – were to resign tomorrow, he would 3440 say, 'Well, why?' If someone as important as the Medical Director – he is, at the end of the day, in charge of the clinical directorate of the GHA, central to the implementation of, in effect, the delivery of healthcare in Gibraltar – resigns, is the hon. Member really saying that when he heard that the Medical Director had resigned he did not ask why?

3445 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the question would have more credence if I was told that he was going to resign and I wanted to see if I could in any way interject to stop him from resigning, but that is not what I was told. I was told, 'He has resigned, it is a matter of fact and arrangements are being put in place as quickly as possible to ensure that the GHA continues to operate to its full strength and capacity as quickly as possible.' So on 3rd January the statement is issued, recruitment starts the following week, and I hope that by the end of this month the closing date will happen, applications will be in and the senior manager at the GHA will do what they have to do, which is execute their professional judgement and employ a new Medical Director.

3450 If the hon. Member is saying that I should be involved in the resignation or reasons for the resignation, should I also be involved in the recruitment of his successor because it is an important position? Of course not. I do not for a second believe that I should be involved in the recruitment of the next Medical Director of the GHA. It is entirely for the senior management team of the GHA to exercise their professional judgement as to who is best prepared and equipped to carry the GHA forward as its new Medical Director.

3455 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am asking a very simple question. I am asking him: when he found out that the Medical Director had resigned, did he ask why?

3460 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, if he wants the details, when I found out I was in Portugal suffering from a very bad tummy bug. I was informed, I accepted the information that I received and I asked to be sent a copy of the press statement as and when it was issued, which is what they did.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: If I can interject, let's make this the final ...

3470 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I have asked repeatedly. The answer might be he is not prepared to tell me, but I do not want to know where he was in Portugal. What I want to know is: if he is informed that the Medical Director of Gibraltar has resigned, is he saying that he did not ask why he had resigned? Is he really saying that he did not ask why he resigned?

3475 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Government is here to answer questions about things for which we are responsible. If the Medical Director had been sacked, the hon. Gentleman could ask us why he was sacked, because we, as the Government, with the GHA, even though the GHA is operating independently, will be responsible for him being sacked. But if the Medical Director of the GHA has resigned, that is a decision made by him for which we are not responsible. Therefore, it is not something on which we should be asked to answer a question because it is not something that the Government has done, it is something that somebody else has done and has a consequence and effect on the Government. The hon. Member has said to him, 'I wanted to know how a new one was going to be recruited,' etc. He is asking us about the decision-making processes of a third party.

Hon. K Azopardi: Sorry, can I just ask with this final –?

Mr Speaker: May I interject? I decide how many supplementary questions and when we stop, not the Leader of the Opposition. I will allow this last supplementary.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, of course you decide, and nothing I have said has suggested otherwise. Let's be clear about that.

3495 Mr Speaker, if I may roll this up in this way, because we focused on the resignation ... I have asked several times now. I find it surprising that the answers the Hon. Minister has given, and indeed the answer the Hon. the Chief Minister has given now still does not provide the answer to the question, which is ... I would have thought that actually the answer would have been relatively straightforward, that if someone as senior and as important to clinical governance, patient standards and clinicians' duties as the Medical Director had resigned, you would have thought the natural reaction of anyone at the head of the political Department is to simply ask why. Not 3500 because you have a role in decision making, but because you have wanted to find out why, given that he has been restored to that role after an element of controversy. I would have thought that that is normal.

3505 In relation to the expectation as to the appointment of a new Medical Director, the process has started, but when do they expect a new Medical Director to be in post?

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I hope for the GHA to be able to announce a new Medical Director in February.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q59/2023

GHA Medical Director – Reason for resignation; expected date of new appointment

3510 Clerk: Question 59/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What procedure is followed when a patient is referred to another medical centre as a sponsored patient?

3515 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola):
Mr Speaker, I am informed by the GHA that when a referral is deemed appropriate and approved by the Clinical Tertiary Referral Board the following steps are taken. A referral is approved by the consultant and an appointment at the relevant hospital is obtained. Once the appointment is confirmed, the patient is informed. Sponsored patients are then notified of the appointment and the patient is advised to contact the Sponsored Patients office to make the necessary arrangements: flights, including return, if possible to plan in advance depending on the procedure; ground transport, if appropriate and required; accommodation in Calpe House or other, if required, when visiting a UK tertiary centre. The following are then reimbursed via the SP office upon presentation of receipts: public transport from the accommodation to the centre and return, and a food allowance of £25 per night between patient and escort that can be claimed in Calpe House or upon return via the Sponsored Patients office. Additionally, patients who have not booked in advance can book return flights either via Calpe House if they are staying there, or via 3520 the Sponsored Patients office if staying elsewhere. The service via Sponsored Patients is available 3525 24 hours a day, seven days a week via the on-call arrangements.
3530

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for his answer. Can I ask him, regarding the Tertiary Referral Board, is it functional as it was 10 months ago, or is it any different? I have several reports from constituents who had a referral approved 10 months ago by this Tertiary Referral Board, and now a new board is refusing, changing or not accepting previous treatment. Is the Minister aware of this? I think what we would all want is a uniform procedure with a wide range of individuals being a part of the board and being able to decide on such important treatment plans in a way that is consistent for the patient.
3535

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the Clinical Tertiary Referral Board is a board of clinicians who look at cases before them and make a clinical judgement, nothing more, nothing less. I do not know if it is the same board today as it was 10 months ago. I do not know if the people sitting on the board 10 months ago are the same people sitting today. I do not have that information, but if the hon. Lady will write to me with the details of the case of the constituent she has, then I will happily look into it. I have never had, in my time looking after the GHA, any difficulty at all from any constituent in respect of the Tertiary Referral Board. I would be very happy to have from her whatever case she has and see if we can assist further, but the Tertiary Referral Board is a purely clinical board with no one other than clinicians looking at what is best for the patient.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I appreciate his answer, but what I was trying to say is that there are plenty of patients I have come across in recent months who talk about this lack of continuity of care because of the difference in pathways that are now being taken by this board, so I suppose ... I am meant to be asking a question, but I will just reiterate that I will be writing to the Minister to understand a little bit better how the system works.

3555

Hon. A J Isola: Yes, Mr Speaker, I am happy to do that. I have to say that I have not had a single complaint in respect of the work of the Tertiary Referral Board. They are a team of professionals who execute their work diligently and professionally, so if there are any issues that have arisen I would be happy to hear from the hon. Lady in respect to these.

3560

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q60/2023

GHA Unit General Manager – Recruitment process

Clerk: Question 60/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: At the GHA, what was the process for the recruitment of the Unit General Manager post?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

3570

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, there is currently no recruitment process in place in respect of the position of Unit General Manager.

3575

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, can the Minister confirm that there is a post that is filled under that title?

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I do not know the answer to that question. The question is what was the process for the recruitment, and what I am saying is that there is no recruitment process.

3580 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I do not want to misinterpret, but my question is that there is a post of Unit General Manager, a post that I had not heard the name of before, the title, and therefore I wanted to ask how that post came to be. I do not know if we are talking apples and pears here. Is there a post that has been filled? Does that post exist? Have I got it wrong, or is that a post that is current?

3585 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, there was a Unit General Manager in respect of hospital services in the past, there was a Unit General Manager in respect of the PCC in the past, and there was a Unit General Manager in respect of Mental Health Services in the past.

3590 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, would it be wrong for me to ask the Minister if it is correct that there has been a recent appointment at the GHA in the Hospital for Unit General manager?

Hon. A J Isola: Yes, Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady would be wrong.

ADJOURNMENT

3595 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I move that the House should now adjourn to tomorrow at three o'clock, on the third Thursday of the month, to deal with Chief Minister's Questions.

3600 Mr Speaker: I now propose the question, which is that this House do now adjourn to Thursday, 19th January at 3 p.m.

I now put the question, which is that this House do now adjourn to Thursday, 19th January at 3 p.m. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Passed.

3605 This House will now adjourn to Thursday, 19th January at 3 p.m.

The House adjourned at 8.43 p.m.

The Parliament met at 3.06 p.m.

[MR SPEAKER: Hon. M L Farrell BEM GMD RD JP in the Chair]

[ACTING CLERK TO THE PARLIAMENT: S Galliano Esq in attendance]

Questions for Oral Answer

CHIEF MINISTER

Q91/2023
LNG and diesel –
Amount spent in 2022

Q92/2023
Power outages in 2022 –
Overtime costs

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Thursday, 19th January 2023.
We continue with Answers to Questions.

5 Mr Speaker: Are we suspending Standing Orders?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): No.

10 Clerk: Question 91/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state how much it has spent on LNG and diesel in 2022?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

15 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 92.

Clerk: Question 92/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

20 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state how much the power outages in 2022 cost the taxpayer in overtime?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

25 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, before we are able to answer this question, the hon. Gentleman would assist us by clarifying if he seeks calendar year information or financial year information. For financial year 2021-22, he has the figures in the final Budget Book. For financial year 2022-23, he will have the Estimates Book in the first week of April, of course.

30 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I think it would be helpful if he would clarify Question 92. Does he have a general figure in relation to power outages in 2022?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, this is the point I am trying to make to him in my response. We do not keep calendar year information, we keep financial year information.

Hon. E J Phillips: The only question I would ask in relation to that is can you not provide the House with a specific number in relation to power outages for 2022? You do not keep that information? (Interjection) Yes, for a year. It should, hopefully, have been done.

40 Hon. Chief Minister: Sorry, Mr Speaker, this is fairly basic. Let me try to take the hon. Gentleman through it. I will try. I do not know whether he will understand it or not.

The first three months of 2022 (Interjection) relate to the financial year 2021-22, so we account for the overtime in the financial year 2021-22, not broken down by month necessarily. The next nine months of 2022 are accounted for in the financial year 2022-23, not by month, they are 45 accounted for by way of financial year. The Hon. Mr Clinton has a question I will answer now which will deal with the first six months of the financial year 2022-23. That is why I am saying to the hon. Gentleman is he asking us for the calendar year information or the financial year information? Nine months of the financial year 2022 are in the financial year 2022-23. That is why I am saying to him he will have the information in that respect in the Estimates Book when we get to the end
50 of March, and he will have the Estimates Book provided to him in the first week of April in the usual way; and in respect of the first three months of the year, not broken down by month, he has it in the other Estimates Book.

This is why I am trying to put it to him that before we can give him a detailed answer I need to know whether he wants calendar year or financial year. Calendar year will require us to break 55 down the figures we have for the first three months of the year for 2021-22 and try to apportion that overtime per month, which is an exercise. That is why I was putting it to him in that way.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, it is a calendar question. I think it reads like that. I did not say for financial year 2021-22 or financial year 2020-21. It is obvious from the question that it appears to 60 be a calendar year. I cannot believe it would take civil servants months to prepare an answer to this question; it is a fairly simple question. I suspect he has some of the information before him that might help this House in understanding the answer.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it is very unusual to be asked to provide information in calendar-year terms in this way. That is the issue. Because we account in financial years, which 65 start on 1st April, providing a figure for the calendar year is a little harder. If the hon. Gentleman considers that he wants it for calendar year although we account for everything in financial years ... I do not think I have, in the information I have available, the calendar-year provision because we just do not keep the information in that way; it is not maintained in that way.

I would invite him to have the information in financial-year terms, in which case what he is asking me for is a further breakdown of the figures already provided for 2021-22, and I will refer 70 him to 2022-23 when we have it. Otherwise, if he wishes to put the question again in respect of calendar year 2022, we would not take the issue that he is asking it again within six months, but it will require an exercise to be done to break down per month all of the amounts and provide it 75 per calendar year.

Hon. E J Phillips: Is there any information contained in the answer by civil servants that would help us in any event?

80 Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, I believe I am able to give him, if he wants it, the figure of the sum spent on LNG and diesel on the basis that those are invoiced to us monthly, so I am provided with the figure on the basis of the costs for the months in 2022 – if he wants that? Okay, well, the expenditure on LNG for the calendar year 2022 is £24,895,600.95 and the expenditure on diesel, which is automotive gas oil, for 2022 amounts to £9,331,879.25.

85 Hon. K Azopardi: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I want to go back to Question 92, if I may. The Chief Minister has referred us to the Budget Book for 2021-22 in respect of that. I do not have it in front of me. The Budget Book will have a collective cost of overtime but surely will not give us a breakdown of overtime in respect of power outages, which is the question we are asking. So referring us to the Budget Book will not give us the specific answer.

90 Hon. Chief Minister: It will not give you the specific answer but you will have the amount for overtime, and then what you are asking me for is a breakdown of that overtime so that then I can tell you how much of that overtime in respect of that head relates to payments that arise from a power cut. But you are asking for it then in the context of each of the financial years. Otherwise, we have to do a breakdown by month of the overtime and see how much of that overtime by month relates to a power cut, and then bring, for calendar year rather than financial year, that amount. That is what I am saying to him.

100 Hon. K Azopardi: Given, therefore, that I will not find the answer in the Book – and he has explained the difference between the financial year and calendar year approach, which I understand – does he have a figure in front of him for financial year 2021-22 broken down in respect of power outages?

105 Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q93/2023

Civil servants acting as directors of private companies – If allowed and whether register is kept

Clerk: Question 93/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

110 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise whether civil servants are allowed under General Orders to act as directors for private companies; and, if so, does the Chief Secretary keep a register of such individuals to monitor potential conflicts of interest?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

115 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the General Orders chapter regarding private activities of civil servants was revised in 2021. This now provides more flexibility and clearer guidelines in relation to declarations of any involvement in financial interests, business activities, private work and private trading. This includes the declaration or request for permission to hold directorships of companies and private work amongst other business interests, as long as these do not conflict with their role within the Service or prejudice the Service in any way. This follows
120 UK Civil Service practices.

The Human Resources Department keeps, for the Chief Secretary, a register of all declarations and requests of such activities and, where appropriate, continues to monitor post approval for any potential conflicts of interest.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for his answer.

I was wondering whether it is permissible to give us a copy of that revision to General Orders.

Secondly, would the Government consider it reasonable for us to ask for ... obviously, I do not believe he will give us names of people who have sought clearance from the Chief Secretary, but perhaps numbers of people according to classes of requests for permission – for example, directorships or things like that – without actually disclosing names?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have a copy here of the bulletin, which I am happy to circulate to hon. Members when the Clerk comes. Thank you.

I am happy to provide the hon. Gentleman, across the floor of the House, if he asks me for it, the information he has requested.

I have not checked with the Chief Secretary, but I do not believe it would be objectionable for hon. Members, if they wish to see the register, to ask to come and see it on the basis that it is shared with them in confidence, in the sense that they cannot then bandy those names around. In my view, that would be unfair.

140

I will give you the information you have asked for in terms of numbers and classes. Perhaps we could agree the sorts of classes they want. If they are interested in it, we could happily put that on the website as a statistic that is updated every three months – it does not necessarily have to be updated every month ... and to come and see the register on the basis that it is not a publicly accessible register, but in the context of Members of this House having oversight in respect of Government business, I have no difficulty with them seeing the register on the basis that they would not then use the names.

145

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I thank the Chief Minister again. I think what he has just said is entirely reasonable and it is something that we will obviously consider on our side. If I can just add by way of an aside, I am gratified to see that such a register is in place.

150

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q94/2023

Departmental expenditure – Totals for six months ended 30th September 2022

Clerk: Question 94/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide, as in prior years, an analysis of total individual departmental expenditure outturn for the six months ended 30th September 2022?

160

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the analysis of total individual departmental expenditure outturn for the six months ended 30th September 2022 is, subject to the usual caveats, in the schedule I now provide the hon. Member.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, whilst it is delivered to the hon. Member, I would just repeat that the usual caveats are that these are the interim financial statements for the period and are based on the Treasury's accounting records as they stood in about November. The figures contained in the schedule are, therefore, still subject to reconciliation by the responsible 170 Government bodies and may therefore be subject to corrections and, as such, should not serve as an indicator of the likely outturn for the year in any way.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for the analysis. Unfortunately, it does not have a total, so it is a bit hard for me to come up with any comment at this stage. If we may come back to this later on, with your permission? If not, I will lodge a question for the next session. Thank you.

Hon. K Azopardi: Just quickly, I appreciate that the question asks about Departments, so the answer might lie in that, but skimming very quickly through it, unless I have missed it I do not see a cost for the Gibraltar Health Authority.

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, because the question is about Departments and the information I think we regularly provide is for the Department heads. We do not provide it for the agencies or authorities on the six-month basis.

Hon. K Azopardi: I thought that might be the case. However, I was asking the question because I did see on the list the Gibraltar Regulatory Authority.

Hon. Chief Minister: Because I think the accounts of the Regulatory Authority are managed more directly by the Treasury than the GHA, which has its own accounting infrastructure.

Hon. K Azopardi: Obviously, the Chief Minister will not have that information, but would he write to me with the equivalent information for the Gibraltar Health Authority?

Hon. Chief Minister: I will, Mr Speaker, if he writes to me so that I have something to reply to. I am just conscious that I could forget if I say I will, and I might not. I know that I have something to send him already from the last session, which I know is being prepared.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, as regards the Chief Minister's observation that in the past it has only been departmental expenditure, I would draw his attention to the Estimates Book, on pages 13 and 14. The Health Authority is included within total departmental expenditure, and if my memory serves me correctly, in the past the Health Authority has been included in the list we have been provided with in order that we can do a full analysis of estimate to outturn. So I would just like to make that point, that in the Estimates Book the GHA is included within departmental expenditure.

Hon. Chief Minister: The contribution is included by way of departmental reference, not ... the contribution, yes. The GHA is dealt with at the back of the Book. It is not dealt with by way of departmental expenditure.

I think it is important to clarify what the hon. Gentleman has said. What appears in the departmental expenditure section of the Book is the contribution. There is a reference, in the list I have given him, to Health and Social Care, which is a low amount. It is not the GHA proper. If the hon. Gentleman says that in the past when we have given it to him it has included the GHA, I am surprised because the same people who have prepared that have prepared this and given it to me on the basis of what is usually given, but I am quite happy to go back and, if they have added the GHA in the past, add it and/or, as lawyers love to say, also provide it to the Leader of the Opposition if he writes to me. I have no difficulty with the hon. Members having the six month outturn-ish, as we have said, on the basis of the caveats provided.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q95-96/2023

Government housing –
Expected reduction in waiting list; government rental flats

220 Clerk: Question 95/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Does the Government know by what number the housing waiting list will be reduced following the release of the 161 flats in the government rental housing stock following, in turn, the affordable housing developments becoming available?

225

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Question 96.

230 Clerk: Question 96/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Does the Government have any intention to build any flats for government rental?

235 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, as we discussed at length during the last meeting, the housing waiting list will be reduced directly by at least 161, in the first instance as a result of the sale of affordable homes. The subsequent reduction of the housing list cannot be provided with any accuracy now, but can be up to three or four times that. Additionally, the housing list would similarly be reduced by the move of elderly residents to the new government rental stock being developed for pensioners. These are 44 units at Chatham Views and 83 at Bob Peliza Mews. The new facility at Rooke will also likely relieve the list, and I should just say, as an aside, that I know the hon. Gentleman has another question on the Order Paper directly about that issue in relation to Rooke. As set out in relation to Chatham Views and Bob Peliza Mews, a number of government rental projects are already on foot.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, just by way of premise and by very brief preamble, the question arises as a result of a press release from Action for Housing which I think raised legitimate points following our exchange in this House, which dealt with ... I think it was described as the domino effect by the Hon. the Chief Minister, and questioned really the positive effect that that would or would not have on the government housing waiting list. I think he described it as ... well, he did describe it as – reading directly from the text of his press release – excessive and farfetched.

255 His view is that the reduction is going to be three or fourfold in number. On what basis does he say that? I understand that he may not have any empirical evidence at this stage and he has already said it is impossible to do so at this stage, but on what basis does he come up with what is actually, I think, a very ambitious result?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I think we had this debate ad nauseam at the time of the last House, before the Christmas festivities, but I am quite happy to explain again to the hon. Gentleman that our experience – having developed the affordable housing at Mons Calpe and the affordable housing at Beach View Terraces in the time that we have been in government this time round and the work that was done in the early 1990s as a result of the first affordable projects, and indeed, what we see was the management of the creation of the affordable and rental housing stock in their time – shows that if you properly manage the allocations of the houses that become available after people move to the affordable housing, you can take what they leave and use it to create that domino effect.

As I explained the last time but am happy to explain again, if people leave a five-bedroom house because they are going to an affordable home that they have bought, the five-bedroom house will be taken by somebody who is in a four bedroom waiting for a five, the four bedroom house will be taken by somebody who is in a three bedroom awaiting a four, the three-bedroom house will be taken by somebody who is in a two bedroom awaiting a three, the two-bedroom house will be taken by someone who is in a one bedroom awaiting a two, and the one bedroom house will be taken by somebody who is in a bedsitter awaiting a one. That is how you create the massive domino effect. You can take three, four or five people and move them as a result of one property being vacant.

Additionally – and this is the point that we also discussed last time and Action for Housing did not take into consideration in the letter they published in the press – there is also the rental housing being made available at Chatham and Bob Peliza Mews, which is not just, therefore, for 161. You have to add to the 161 the 83 and the 44, so that is 205 plus 83, 208 plus 80, 288. When you multiply that four or fivefold, you are able to move a lot of people from where they are on the housing list. When you add Rooke, which is going to add not housing but the sort of living that elderly people who need care need, and you move them from homes that they may be in ... It is impossible to say what number at Rooke. There is another question on the Order Paper I do not want to get into, but Rooke has 267 flats, I think, from memory, but a number of them may be taken by people who are in other areas, so we do not know how many would come from government flats that would become vacant – say a hundred. That is 388 moves from government property into new properties, the affordable, the rental and Rooke; 388 multiplied by five – okay, multiply it by four – creates a domino effect which deals in very large measure with the numbers on the housing waiting list. But then, of course, you have to break it down into the appropriate categories, so you might still have four or five people who are on the five RKB waiting list, even at the end of that, because although you have moved a lot of people and you might even have availability of three-bedroom properties, you have not got what they need, which is a five bedroom.

So it is not possible to say that you are going to completely get rid of the housing waiting list, because there may be some configurations where you might not be able to do so entirely for a short period, because there is always churn on the list, but you are going to be able to do what we say we expect to be able to do without that prediction being fairly described as excessive or farfetched, because if you factor in all of the information and one does not allow oneself to be led by the nose by the Opposition's view of 161 flats, you actually have all of the information at your disposal which we disclosed in this House – the 161 Rooke and the rental homes that we are building – and then you do get to do a calculation that gets you much closer to where you need to be.

Hon. D J Bossino: I think that is a very interesting exposé and explanation and I do acknowledge that a lot of what he said he did say in the last session of the House, but I wanted to drill down further because of the comments made by one of the NGOs that deals with this issue, and I thought it was important to raise it across the floor of the House, Mr Speaker.

I suspect the answer is going to be no, because I suppose it is a question really of suck it and see, but would he venture at this stage to say by what figure he thinks the housing waiting list – which I understand, and I have not checked this figure but according to Action for Housing, stands currently at 792 applicants – can be reduced by?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have done a lot of work with Action for Housing in the time I have been in government. I have a lot of time for their commitment. That does not mean I have to agree with their arguments. In fact, it is my job to deliver housing; it is their job to continue to put pressure on the Government to deliver housing. Those are two different jobs. One does not come with the level of responsibility that the other comes with because, of course, in delivering 320 housing we also have to deliver housing in the way that is the best value for money for the taxpayer, which is our other responsibility as custodians of the public purse.

325 So I am afraid that, given the hon. Gentleman has raised this across the floor of the House, it is not possible for the Government to accept that what we are doing is figure juggling to try to convince the general public that this exercise will go a long way towards resolving our chronic housing problem, quite the opposite. What Action for Housing are failing to do in the way they present their figures – and I am dealing with that because the hon. Gentleman has put it to me across the floor of the House – is to factor in not just the 161 but the 83 at Chatham, the 83 at Bob, the 44 at Chatham and the Rooke issue. When you put all that together, you are not figure juggling. You still cannot break it down in terms of the constituent room composition requests because it is dynamic and also because Hassan Centenary Terraces will be ready on one date, Chatham on another, Bob on another and Rooke on another, and therefore you are going to have a different housing waiting list at different times, which is not one picture.

330 This is not on 1st September everything is ready, what is the housing waiting list on 1st September, boom, it happens. It is dynamic, it happens at different times, so the effect of one, which is one of the affordable housing estates, will happen in part because it is in two phases during the period of the summer of this year. The second phase of Hassan Centenary Terraces, Bob Peliza and Chatham will happen on another date and the housing waiting list will be a different picture then, and Rooke will happen perhaps sooner than all of them, so the housing waiting list will be different and therefore you do not have one target that you are dealing with on one date.

340 That is why I cannot give him a figure, and if he were sitting where I am sitting he would be doing exactly the same thing, unless the argument is – and this is where I think it is completely wrong – you have to just build to the housing list. If what you are saying is build rental stock for the housing list, then you are not looking at value for money because if you are going to deliver an apartment for an elderly couple to which you are going to move them from a five bedroom but you are also going to build a five bedroom, what are you doing in terms of value for money for the taxpayer? Better you build, for the price of one five bedroom, three pensioner flats. That releases three five bedrooms, and in that way you move the list in the right direction.

345 That is the philosophical difference between us and Action for Housing. It is a good-faith philosophical difference because we both want to achieve the same thing. We have the obligation to achieve it not esoterically or philosophically, but looking at value for money for the taxpayer, and this is how we have demonstrated in the past it can be done and how we believe we will now demonstrate it can be done again.

355 Hon. D J Bossino: In relation to that final point, is it the case, because when Action for Housing ...? There is a call out there, by some sectors of our society, for another government housing estate, à la Mid Harbours, Varyl Begg and all the rest of it, which is, I think, where Action for Housing are ... basically the point they are driving at when they make the point that really the only solution ... They do not accept what the hon. Member opposite is saying, so they are saying the only way of breaking the back of this problem is to build another Mid Harbours, let's say.

360 Do I take it from the hon. Gentleman's answers that that is most definitely not the intention of the Government and that the rationale for that thinking is that it is not value for money for the taxpayer to go down that route? In respect of the specific question I asked, which related to government flats, he referred to the 44 and 83 in number that are being built, I think, for the elderly in the two affordable housing schemes that the Government is embarked upon and is about to start putting bricks on the ground, but apart from that, there is not a commitment to build a new – if I can put it in these terms – proper government housing estate?

370 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, he has asked me, really, two questions, so let me start by answering the first, the idea that you can only resolve the housing list by building a new estate, that some apparently have taken the view is the correct position. By some, I assume he includes himself, because I understand this is the position they have taken: at the last General Election they said they were going to build a new estate. Whether it is 'they' the GSD, 'they' Action for Housing, or 'they' the people who Mr Bossino says are saying this, they would be wrong to argue that the only way to deal with a housing list, as we have at the moment, is to build a new housing estate. I will demonstrate why they are wrong. In 1988, Gibraltar had a housing list which was greater than it had ever been. I think, from memory, it exceeded 2,000. By 1996, the housing list had been eradicated. No government housing rental estate had been built. The management of the building of affordable housing and the beginning of the provision of housing for pensioners, although not building but providing houses in existing estates for pensioners, had enabled us to do that. In fact, some were built for pensioners at the bottom of Gib5 and were provided as rental. So you can get rid of a housing list that is three times the size of what it is today without building an estate for rental. Full stop. Demonstrated. Empirical. There is the evidence.

You can build an estate for rental and not solve the housing list problem. I will demonstrate it. In 1996, the housing list was at its lowest ebb ever. In 2002, it was once again longer than it had ever been since 1988 and Mid Harbours had been built. So building a housing estate for rental does not solve it. The hon. Gentleman seems to take issue with some of the facts I am saying. Mid Harbours – (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) The dates are not wrong. (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) No, between 1996 when they took office, and 2011 when they left office, Mid Harbours had been built – (Interjection) Sorry. Mid Harbours had been built, but the housing list in 2011 was longer than it had ever been, except in 1988.

So you can build affordable housing, which they built, you can build pensioner rental, which they built, you can build government rental straight and still not deal with the housing list. But if you build affordable, if you build government rental for the elderly and you manage the elderly problem, you can get rid of the housing list, as we did between 1988 and 1996 and as we will do now.

One more final fact, Mr Speaker. Mr Clinton should perk up. An estate with 350 homes – the sort of size of estate you would expect to build – at £3,000 per square metre with an average of 70 square metres per apartment, which is the average: £73½ million. If you are going to reduce debt, if you are going to solve the housing crisis and if you are going to end the pay freeze, better hon. Members think a little about how we are proposing to deal with the issue without spending £73 million.

Mr Speaker: This will be the final supplementary.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, simply to make the point ... I am actually keeping a tally of my supplementaries, and indeed of hon. Gentlemen's and the hon. Lady's supplementaries. I think this will be my fourth of two questions, so on that basis I think it is a bit ... The replies are also long, and I am not complaining about that because they are full replies and I think it is an important social issue.

He talks about the rounded figure of £74 million, which he has calculated very quickly – we can check those figures ourselves, no doubt – but then there is also the ongoing maintenance cost, which also falls on the Government into the future; windows have to be fixed and all the rest of it, painted. That is a point on which I am assisting him in his argument. (Interjection) Yes, exactly. But in relation to the point when he was explaining the flats that would be made available, which would assist in bringing down the housing waiting list figure, he mentions Rooke but he does not mention the project which is on line to build by the Laguna Club. I think he knows which one I mean. Would that also assist? He is shaking his head, so maybe he can explain why he did not include it as part of his response.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the reason I am shaking my head is because, as the hon. Gentleman, I think, will recall when I remind him, that project is to build for elderly residential for sale, principally for people who are living in existing affordable housing. The example that we imagine as we try to plot this and see whether it is an issue, is somebody who bought in the affordable housing schemes in the late 1980s and early 1990s, has built a family there, now wants to sell, can sell for 10 times what they bought for, but 10 times what they bought for – which is a 425 very tidy sum; if you bought for £35,000 you might sell for £350,000 to £400,000 – does not buy you a one bedroom in one of the private estates or developments near town, and you probably want to be near town because you are elderly. So to create churn in the affordable housing estates, even though they are at open market, we need to provide an opportunity for people to buy also at an affordable-ish rate but with different covenants going forward, which we discussed 430 generally here we were going to make policy decisions on as the whole thing progressed. Indeed,

I understand that today or tomorrow a press release will be issued by the Ministry for Economic Development asking for expressions of interest from people who might want to buy in those sorts of estates in the future, just to gauge the interest that we believe is there and to confirm that it is there to purchase those estates. Minister Bossano will be issuing a statement in that respect in 435 coming days, which I urge people to look out for.

Mr Speaker, just to clarify my answer before, and so that we are talking on the same basis, I am reminded by the keen ear of former Minister and much-loved former Member of this House, Pepe Baldachino, who is watching and listening, that the housing waiting list in 1988 was 2,126.
And just so that we are talking about the same numbers, the hon. Gentleman said he would like 440 to check the calculation I have done, which I said before, but just to be very clear about it, is £3,000 per square metre to build, more or less, today, and 70 square metres per apartment – it is an average; you have bigger ones and smaller ones, but the average tends to be, for the purposes of working out the cost of developing, 70 square metres – and I calculated 350 flats in an estate. You can build a bigger one, you can build a smaller one, but if you build a smaller one do not pretend 445 that you are going to be able to deal with the housing waiting list by building your way out of it, because then you would have to build 792, which I understand is the waiting list, more or less, now.

That is why we are saying the combination of the things we are dealing with, not the building of affordable homes for pensioners, because those are for people who are already in affordable 450 homes and therefore are not housing-list fodder, so to speak ... The building of rental for the elderly, the building of affordable homes where people are given priority if they vacate properties that they hold which are government rental, and the building of adequate elderly residential facilities of the sort we are seeing at Rooke will be able to deal with the housing waiting list and we do not believe that this is a calculation that is excessive or farfetched.

I ask Action for Housing to take into consideration not just the domino effect on the 161, which is what they referred to in their public statement that the hon. Gentleman has raised with me, but also the additional homes that we are going to provide, the 83 and the 44 for elderly rental at Chatham and Bob Peliza Mews and the Rooke facility.

460 Hon. D J Bossino: Simply for the benefit of the House, I think the Hon. the Minister for Economic Development has already issued the press release – it is out – inviting people to write to him at 31 Town Range if they wish to express an interest in the flats he was referring to.

465 Hon. Chief Minister: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for clarifying that. I believed it was about to go out; I did not know it had gone out. I very much hope people will read the press release and indicate their interest, if they are interested, so that we can gauge how many of these units we have to build. We are convinced that there will be a serious take-up and that the project at Laguna will be only the first of many such projects which will address the point that the Hon. Sir Peter Caruana, the former leader of the party opposite, when he was already a backbencher on 470 the other side, said was one of the key issues that we had to deal with: when do we stop building affordable housing and how do we deal with numbers then? Our view is that one of the ways – perhaps not the only way, but one of the ways – we deal with it is by creating churn in the affordable housing market with a way out ... I hesitate to say 'at the end' ... later in life when one is older and wants to buy a smaller unit. Thank you.

475 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I just want to ask a net question. I was listening carefully to what the Chief Minister said about creating churn, and to a very large extent of course we agree that creating churn alleviates the housing issue as well. I am not sure we are exactly where he is in respect of government rental housing. There are different arguments as to whether you can do it that way, in the way he has described – without going over that territory again – or whether 480 actually, if insufficient rental housing is built over many decades, it causes a logjam because also you have to take into account the growth of the population, which is very obvious over the last few decades, the growth of the Gibraltarian population. But anyway, that is not the question I wanted to ask. I suppose that is the basis for a housing symposium that would lead us to perhaps different philosophical positions or different positions of approach.

485 What I wanted to ask him is, in relation to the 161 figure, does he have a number of how many of those are going to be released this year?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it could, in fact, lead to a symposium, which would not, I think, start on the basis of the premise that he has set out – the idea that sufficient has not been 490 built for rental over a number of decades, because if we look at the past decade and a half only, we have seen Mid Harbour Estate being built, we have seen Bishop Canilla House being built, we have seen Albert Risso House being built, we have seen Charles Bruzon House being built and we have seen Sea Master Lodge being built. If you take those last four, those are almost an estate for the elderly that has been built, and we are now adding two more, the block at Bob Peliza Mews 495 and the block at Chatham. So the question is do you build for general provision or do you build for the elderly so that you also create the churn in the rental? I think that if anybody were looking at this objectively and were not trying to gain votes, they would say, 'It makes sense, of course, to do it in the way that you are proposing,' but of course it equally makes sense, if you are trying to gain votes, to go out and say that you are going to build for rental generally, so that people think 500 there is the result.

What would certainly not work, what is economic madness, is to sell your existing rental stock of post-war housing, as hon. Members did when they were in government, because then you are undoing the asset that you have in rental. You are selling it and taking it out of circulation, and you are selling it at a 10th of its value and then building at five times the cost of sale. And that, 505 looked at objectively, not looked at through the prism of what we want to say this year so that we might or might not win an election, looked at through the prism of what is good for the people of Gibraltar in the long term, is certainly the wrong thing to do, whilst doing what we are proposing – looked at objectively, not trying to gain votes, trying to do the right thing and trying to deliver value for money – is obviously, objectively, the right thing to do.

510 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, that did not even come close to answering the question I put as to whether how many of the 161 are going to be released this year, so I will ask it again: how many of the 161 are going to be released this year?

But before I sit down, I really ... I prefaced my question with the statement – and I thought it 515 was fairly neutrally expressed – that there might be a disagreement of approach as to what is the best way of solving the perennial decades-long housing issue. I did not say that their approach is some kind of Machiavellian approach to gain votes or whatever, and it is only our approach that is value for money. But the way the Hon. Chief Minister put it, their approach is value for money and any other approach – and he was pointing at us – is to gain votes. Ultimately, I am laying the 520 ground to the position that there might be legitimately a difference of opinion on how to approach the housing crisis and both are taken from good-faith positions. That is what I am saying. But I ask again: how many of the 161 are going to be released this year?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman is entirely right. I forgot to give him the 525 answer to that because I was dealing with his first point, which I do not think was made in the way he has pretended. But I will tell him the answer to the first one first, before I deal with that, so I do not forget the second time. I do not have the number of how many of those 161 are in phase 1 of Hassan Centenary Terraces and how many are in the rest of the phases of the other affordable housing.

530 Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman prefaced his intervention by saying one of the issues we could look at is if you have not built for rental in decades, it could create a logjam, and I was trying to deal with the point that in fact there has been building for rental in the past decade and a half, and considerable building in the past decade and a half. That was the point I was trying to make.

535 Of course we must assume that we all come here in good faith, and I do not assume that they do not, but having done the analysis, I do not believe that a person properly directed could reach the conclusion that there is a better value-for-money approach – and we must all want to deliver the best value for money – than the one we have set out, and I have demonstrated to the hon. Gentleman, I believe, in the way that I have done the analysis of the period 1988-96 and 1996-2011 ... can be seen in one instance to already have dealt with a housing list that was the 540 longest we have had, which was 2,000 people. That is why I am making the point, because the issue must also be one of value for money.

Hon. K Azopardi: My final question, Mr Speaker, on this.

545 The hon. Member does not have the answer to the question I asked, so I will write to him and it would be helpful if he could give me that information.

Does he see the point that while he has given quite a lengthy explanation on the churn and I have agreed with him that churn is important, the problem with the explanation is that because it is tied in to the delivery of Hassan Centenary, Bob Peliza Mews and Chatham Views, all these numbers he has given – 161, 83, 8, 44 – and the expected completion dates of Chatham and Bob 550 Peliza are not until maybe 2026 or 2027, the reality is that, broken down, it would be helpful to understand what the yearly churn is, because actually, when you break it down the yearly churn might be relatively small, deliverable, from all these estates over a period of seven or eight years and it will not have the dramatic effect he is hoping for? So I ask the Government to perhaps ... It would be helpful to them. I am sure they maybe even have this information, but if they do not,
555 they should probably procure it, I would suggest, to see what the yearly churn of these figures is.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am happy to reply to him if he writes to me. We are going to start becoming pen pals at this rate, and I am only one third into my questions.

560 The period will not be seven to eight years. We are delayed on Chatham and Bob Peliza but the latest date by which they will be ready has already been provided and it is not seven or eight years from now, so he does not need to refer to seven or eight years from now.

565 The problem we have is that we are trying to catch up, because the important thing is to build at least 200 units a year in terms of housing. That is what we have insisted for some time now is what you need to do in order to stay ahead of the curve. If they had built 200 units a year in the 16 years they were in government, then we would not have been in the situation we were in, in 2011. In the period 1996 to 2003 – which coincided with him being a Minister, but I am sure it is not relevant to him because he was not Minister for Housing – there was nothing built. Those are the issues.

570 The other point I think is important is that we simply reflect on the fact that the hon. Gentleman's alternative solution would suffer from the same affliction that he says ours now suffers. Of course, we have the difficulty that we were not able to build because of COVID. Okay, fair enough, so we are delayed, but if they win an election it is not going to be in a way that enables them ... Let's assume the worst and they win an election during the course of calendar year 2023. They cannot pretend to start building until 2024, so that means that their estate for rental, in the 575 idea that they might be bringing an estate for rental into the mix, would not be ready until after Hassan Centenary phase 2, Bob, Chatham and Rooke have been delivered. So it would not for one moment enable you to pray in aid, as a way of resolving the difficulty that he says we have, that they are now going to go and build a housing estate, because the housing estate, ironically, is 580 going to be ready when we have broken the back of the housing problem with the issues I have already explained across the floor of the House. The delay cuts both ways.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q97-98/2023

Eastern Beach car park additional storey – Cost and funding; eligibility for using

Clerk: Question 97/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

585 Hon. D J Bossino: What are the expected costs of the additional storey to the Eastern Beach car park, and which entity will fund it?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

590 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Question 98.

Clerk: Question 98/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

595 Hon. D J Bossino: Maybe one day! He will certainly be promoted!
Mr Speaker, who will be eligible to use the extra floor of parking being considered at the Eastern Beach car park?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

600 Hon. Chief Minister: That's more like it!
Mr Speaker, the expected cost of the additional storey of the Eastern Beach car park is £2.8 million. The entity that will fund it is yet to be confirmed.

An announcement about the eligibility for the use of the additional floor of parking at the Eastern Beach car park will be made at the appropriate time.

605 Hon. D J Bossino: If the question of eligibility will be decided upon at some point in the future, why is this car park being built in the first place? As I understand it, there are two floors already. As I further understand it, I am told that they are not used to full capacity. So why is this extra floor in the car park – at a considerable cost, at first blush almost £3 million – being built? Who is it being built for?

615 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do not know who is giving the hon. Gentleman that information, but there are times of the year when the car park is more than abarrotado. In other words, it is full and overflowing, and given the debate we have just had... I should not say that, Mr Speaker – you will tell me we should not have debates at Question Time. Given the exchange we have had at Question Time a moment ago, the hon. Gentleman is surprisingly appearing to overlook the fact that phase 1 of a new government affordable housing estate is going to be provided just across the road from that car park and phase 2 has already started, and those are a considerable number of homes. There is another question on the Order Paper about parking for that estate, and he will see that I will answer him, I will say no more other than positively in respect of that. But of course, in the area, although there are parking spaces available for each resident in the areas and estates that have been developed, most people do not have just one car, to the chagrin of the Hon. Minister for Transport, but they have more than one car and therefore provision has to be made in the area.

625 The reason I have not given an answer about eligibility is because we need to work out as a matter of policy how we provide for that, and we expect to be making a statement, which will be quite detailed, about people in the area and the summer use of the car park etc., which we have not yet finalised. Therefore, we will be making a statement during the next few weeks, which sets out that eligibility criteria. The car park is expected to be finished by late May/June.

Hon. D J Bossino: So, in short, is the answer not that this extra floor is being built for those people who are going to be living in the affordable housing? In effect, that is what he said. And does he not agree with me that this policy decision to spend £3 million for extra car parking spaces runs absolutely and utterly counter to the policy – which should be the policy of this Government, because it seems to be the policy of the hon. Gentleman sitting to his immediate left at the moment, the Minister for Transport – to encourage less use of cars? It just does not make any sense.

640 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, no, I have not said the thing that the hon. Gentleman says I have said. I have said, in fact, the things that Hansard will reflect I have said, and not his summary as he wishes to present it.

There are going to be people at Hassan Centenary Terraces. There are people already at Beach View Terraces. There is a new private development across the road. The Government has seen already and Members opposite may have seen also at the DPC proposals for other developments along Devil's Tower Road. The Government has announced – we have not yet finalised but we expect to – a project to the south of Hassan Centenary Terraces, which is called the East Side project, which will provide some parking in some areas, which we have already talked about, but it is going to be just there. So the volume of people that there will be on the East Side – in a new city, in effect, that will be the East Side – will be massive, and not just those who are going to be at Hassan Centenary Terraces.

What the Hon. the Minister for Transport wants is for cars to move less, and therefore car parks are an essential part of the strategy.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, is he able to tell me how many parking spaces will be made available as a result of this construction? And further, is he also able to tell me what the totality of the car parking spaces will be, once the ... I think it is going to be the third floor ... is constructed?

660 Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, but it is publicly available information, I think ... Or not. Hang on, let me see. Sorry, I do not think it has been marked out entirely, so, no, I cannot give him the exact number, but let me see ... If he gives me a minute, I think I have the information. I do not think I have it here; I think I have it in my electronic portable device. Mr Speaker, because of the period that my device holds information for, I do not have it, but I am quite happy, during the next recess, to obtain the information of the estimated numbers of parking spaces – I think it is a very clear estimation – and let the hon. Gentleman have it.

I would just add one additional point that I forgot to mention in the context of the explanation I gave him a moment ago but which is also relevant, and that is of course that that area is not just the area of the East Side project, Hassan Centenary Terrace, Beach View Terraces, the new residential private facility across the road, and others that are going to be developed. That area is also the area of the entrance into Gibraltar. In other words, if you are coming through the tunnel and you want to park and get a bus, that is going to be the area where you would want to park and get the bus because that is where the tunnel roundabout will be, and you will be able to go into that car park. So the park and ride concept also is relevant to this and is very much in keeping

670

675 with the Minister for Transport's strategy. So everything he has said about this being contrary to our strategy is, in our view, entirely wrong, and given that it is our plan to build parking and our Traffic Strategy, we think we are getting it pretty right.

680 Hon. D J Bossino: Who is responsible for the development of the project? In the news published by GBC, which alerted me to this, it talks about the notice being submitted by a company called ANS Project Management Services Ltd. Is that the entity developing it, or is it a different entity?

685 Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, those are our project managers.

Hon. D J Bossino: So does he have the answer to the question?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it is the Government developing it.

690 Hon. D J Bossino: And are any – all, some, I do not know – of the parking spaces going to be up for sale? Is that the intention?

Hon. Chief Minister: I do not think that is presently the intention, but of course if there was interest we would have to consider that possibility. But it is not the intention.

695 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister has just kindly mentioned that it is a government project, this additional floor, but perhaps he could point to where in the 700 Improvement and Development Fund I could find it, because I have gone through it in some detail but I do not seem to find it in the estimates for 2022-23.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I already told the House that the entity that will fund it is yet to be confirmed, but it is a government project.

705 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, it has usually been the convention in this House that capital projects are in the Estimates Book through the Improvement and Development Fund, so if it is not in the Improvement and Development Fund and it has not been voted on by Parliament, how does he intend to fund a capital project like this?

710 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, that convention is not the one that I learnt when I was elected to this House and the GSD were funding government projects through government companies. In the time that we have been here, we have had a number of arguments about this issue, so I am surprised the hon. Gentleman should think that a government project can only be 715 developed through the I&D Fund. Indeed, we have developed a number of schools and his complaint has been that they have not been in the I&D. It does not mean that they are not government projects, even though they are funded through government companies. We have that debate annually, and he should not be surprised that we are going to continue to have it.

720 Mr Speaker: A final supplementary.

Hon. D J Bossino: Thank you, Mr Speaker.
Who is the contractor? And is the £2.8 million a fixed price?

725 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, will the hon. Gentleman allow me to respond to him after the recess, because I do not have the information here. I know the discussions we have had with various contractors, but I am unable to tell him the contractor that was selected off the top of my head.

730 Hon. D J Bossino: And in relation to the fixing of the price, does he have that information either in his head or available to him in the papers he has in front of him?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, fixed price.

735 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q99-100/2023
Forbes ex-Ready Mix site –
When available and cost

Clerk: Question 99/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: When will the parking at the Forbes ex-Ready Mix site at Devil's Tower Road, which the developer had committed to provide to the public, be made available?

740

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Question 100.

745 Clerk: Question 100/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Has the parking at the Forbes ex-Ready Mix site at Devil's Tower Road, which the developer committed to make available to the public, been sold or are they being sold; and, if so, for how much?

750

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, a number of different options were considered for the small car park under the Forbes development. It was felt that it would not be as economically viable to equip, prepare and maintain this car park for the purposes of rental and sale. Given that over 200 spaces have become available at Devil's Tower Road car park nearby, the decision was taken to sell the Forbes spaces back to the developer for a premium of £½ million.

Hon. D J Bossino: The information I have been able to gather as a result of the information which is made public via the DPC was that one condition was that the public spaces which were on the site where the Forbes development is – and, so the public are aware, it is the tower which is constructed more or less opposite St Theresa's Church in Devil's Tower Road ... that there would be 24. I heard a higher number, but according to the documentation there were 24 public car parking spaces which were going to be lost as a result of the construction, and then there was a commitment, which was a condition of the planning process, which resulted in the commitment by the developer to make these parking spaces available. The hon. Member is now saying that it has been sold at a premium of £½ million? Is he able to confirm what the net sale price from the Government to the developer of each parking space is?

765

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, as could he. It is £½ million divided by 24, which would give you £20,833.

Hon. D J Bossino: When was this arrangement arrived at? It strikes me that that sale has been effected, if one compares the going price of sale of parking spaces in the area ... I saw somebody on social media ... I think I had already filed the question, but I think very helpfully for the purpose of the point I am making ... that there was a parking space going in the Laguna area, if not on Laguna estate, for £40,000. Those are the prices that parking spaces are going for, so on the basis of that calculation, what rationale did whoever made the decision on his side of the House ... influence them to sell it at, in effect, half the price, so the Government has lost out – the taxpayer has lost out – by 50% because they have sold it at an undervalue? Can he comment in relation to the point that I have just made?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker. I think the hon. Gentleman has lost leave of his senses. I think what he is saying is utterly nonsensical. The hon. Gentleman thinks that because there was a sale of a car parking space in Laguna estate for £40,000 inside the estate ... Indeed, as I am reminded by the Hon. Minister for Transport, that is not the sale price, that is the advertised price. Sometimes people go bananas when they see that an affordable home has been advertised at £½ million. Facebook erupts, it is on fire, and then when you look at the completion notice, it has been sold at £350,000 rather than the £½ million that was the asking price – although I go equally bananas when it is sold at £350,000, but at least we have the special stamp duty.

Here, the hon. Gentleman seems to forget that there was a premium paid for the property. A premium was paid. Part of the premium included the provision of the spaces. The spaces, when they are going to be handed to us, require us to maintain them and to enter into a covenant to maintain them with the individual who is going to run the property, keep the area secure if we are going to rent them etc. – in other words, add recurrent cost to the Government. Instead, what we have managed to do is add £½ million to the capital account of the Government.

The calculation the hon. Gentleman is doing is the most nonsensical one can come up with because by his measure, whenever we sell a plot we should take all of the profit that is going to come from it. In other words, when we sold a plot for anybody to put a block of flats on, in effect that party would sell the flats at say £½ million and the plot was sold to them for £2 million. The total sale value would be £15 million of the block. ‘The taxpayer has been denied £14 million,’ – yes, and the risk of building, the risk of marketing and all of the other risks that are involved. But he would believe that the only way to sell a plot of land and do fairness by the taxpayer is to take the full profit once the whole thing is going to be developed. And yet when the taxpayer is going to have an interest in developments in Gibraltar in order that the taxpayer does garner some of the benefit of development in Gibraltar – like, for example, Victoria Keys – what do we get? ‘It is disgraceful that the taxpayer is going to be involved in development and make profit from the sale of property.’ For goodness sake, you could not make this nonsense up.

So, Mr Speaker, I believe that the person who made the decision – who was the Deputy Chief Minister, as the Chairman of the Land Management Committee, with the whole of the Land Management Committee – made the right decision for Gibraltar. He made it looking at the recurrent costs that this would have meant for Gibraltar, he made it at the right time, he made it in the right circumstances, he made it with a Devil’s Tower Road car park in the area of the west of Devil’s Tower Road with the expansion of the Eastern Beach car park at the east of Devil’s Tower Road and understanding that this was exactly the right thing to do for the taxpayer, and without in that way incurring any of the nonsense that the hon. Gentleman has just suggested.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, the only nonsense which is being spouted in this House has just come from the hon. Member. The central point, the basic point that I am making still stands despite all the waffle, despite everything that we have heard. He has taken us round the houses. The basic point and the accusation still stands. This was a bad deal for the taxpayer. It is very clear. He is saying that that is the offer price – £40,000 – for that parking space in Laguna. The reality is that people are probably going to pay that money – that is the market price. If not £40,000, thirty-odd thousand. The hon. Gentleman to my right tells me that there are parking spaces in Notre 825 Dame School that have gone for £30,000. That is the going price in Gibraltar. And on this occasion the Government has decided to fob off 24 spaces which ultimately and fundamentally should have been made available to the public in the first place. We should not be having this discussion. The developer, once they built Forbes, should have made 24 parking spaces available to the public, but the Government decided to sell them to that particular developer at £20,000.

830 Mr Speaker, by way of question, may I ask the hon. Gentleman what premium was paid for the land?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, we all know what is happening here and we all know what we are seeing, but we are going to stick to the issue so that we do not bore watchers or listeners.

835 Anything the GSLP Liberal Government does is waffle, nonsensical and bad for the taxpayer, and everything the GSD Government did was magnificent and a golden legacy. But when you talk about premiums, does the hon. Gentleman remember the other car park that we developed at Midtown? There, parking spaces are being offered at about £35,000, in the centre of town, not in Devil's Tower Road – £35,000 in the centre of town, in some instances. (Interjection) Well, perhaps the offer price, but the sale prices that we are seeing ... We see the sale prices, not the offer prices.
840 The hon. Gentleman seems to forget that we developed a car park under St Anne's School and a car park under Notre Dame School. We offered for sale parking spaces there for £30,000.
(Interjection) We could not sell any of them, they have all gone to rental, but it is our building. So I do not know where he gets the idea that you can sell for £40,000 when we could not sell for £30,000. We had to take all of those people who wanted to buy and put them in Bayside car park 845 instead.

So I think, Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman really needs to think a little beyond the opportunity to make suggestions that the Government has in some way provided less than the best value for the taxpayer, because we know when we tried to sell those just along that we could not sell them – in a much more populated area, because Laguna with Glacis opposite is much more populated 850 than Devil's Tower Road, very much so, and Devil's Tower Road and the church etc. have a car park already available for rental within very short walking distance. So it makes no sense.

I do not have the number of the premium for Forbes, but I am reminded by the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister that it went to the highest bidder, so it was the highest premium on the table, to which we now add £½ million. And when it comes to premiums – I was reminding them about the 855 car park here – does he remember what the deal was when they handed over the naval grounds?
They exchanged the naval grounds for the refurbishment of the Kings Bastion Leisure Centre, capped out at £10 million. How can I take lessons on what is good for the taxpayer and what is value for money for the taxpayer from the party that did that? When we were elected, we went back, we reduced the plot and built ourselves the car park and took more premium.

860 Mr Speaker, I think we are doing an excellent job for the taxpayer. I have demonstrated before that we have more premium per square metre for land in Gibraltar, even adjusted for inflation, than any amount they ever got per square metre for land in Gibraltar. We are doing an excellent job and we are going to continue doing so.

865 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q101/2023
Wonderworks Media Ltd –
Employees working within Government

Clerk: Question 101/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

870 Hon. D J Bossino: Please state whether employees of Wonderworks Media Ltd or any other private entity work or have worked in/from/at the Ministry for Tourism; and, if so, how many, the duration of their employment contracts and the duties they are/were performing.

ANSWER TO QUESTION 102

890 Additionally, the Gibraltar Health Authority has been unable to provide their responses in time for this Parliament session. The information can be made available in slower order, should the hon. Member wish to receive it.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, whilst I have a look at the schedule he has passed over in relation to the answer to Question 102, in respect of Question 101 I must say I am very surprised by the answer. The information I have – and there is absolutely no reason in my mind to the information I have received from various sources – is that, in fact, there are two employees who work from the Ministry for Tourism.

Let me remind the hon. Member – I hope he has prepared sufficiently for the supplementaries – it talks about a historical position and it talks about whether they are working in, from or at the Ministry for Tourism. I will make the point – he has the Hon. the Minister for Tourism to his right – I am told that there are two individuals who follow the Minister for Tourism, photographing him, videoing him and producing that type of visual stuff for him, and that those two who work at, from or in the Ministry for Tourism are employees of Wonderworks Media Ltd. Can he please provide a specific answer to that? He has said zero in his written reply.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, as ever, the hon. Gentleman is as wrong as he is vehement. I will repeat the answer: no employees of Wonderworks Media or any other private entity work or have worked in, from or at the Ministry for Tourism. None. Zero. Zilch. He is wrong, completely wrong. The information he has is wrong. It was wrong when he had it, it was wrong when he referred to it here. He has got it completely wrong. If he wants to refer to the two individuals he is referring to, he can. They are not employed by Wonderworks Media, so he is wrong.

I hope he has come sufficiently prepared to ask another supplementary based on that answer, which is correct, as the Hon. Minister for Tourism will indicate and as I can indicate to him, given my responsibilities for the public sector as Chief Minister of Gibraltar and the information I have been given by the Human Resources Department, which manages all of these contracts, and indeed the Employment Service, which would manage the contract of a third party.

So, wrong, Mr Speaker. Vehement, passionate, but wrong.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I am quite relaxed. It is information that I have been provided and I am duty bound, in exercising my public service to this community, to ask these questions because had it been right, it would have been very serious.

Can he then tell me who those two individuals are employed by? Are they government employees? Are they employed by a different company? I dare say with the hon. Gentleman and the entire Government, pretty much, we cannot take anything they say at face value. There is always going to be a bit of fancy footwork in order not to answer the questions. This is why I still do not harbour doubts as to the information I have been provided. I will ask him that specific question: who are those two individuals who follow the Hon. the Minister for Tourism around, videoing him and photographing him, employed by?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, of course he is duty bound to ask the question. I never complained that he asked the question; I am just saying that however passionate and vehement he may be, he was wrong and the person who gave him the information was wrong. No doubt, given that everything they do is in good faith, he got the information in good faith and he brought it here in good faith. I do not challenge that, of course not, but I just remind him that however much passion he might put into things, if the information is wrong, it is wrong.

In terms of fancy footwork, I am not inclined to take that in any way other than positively because, of course, what he is saying to us is that we are right and that they sometimes find it difficult to work out how right we are, because I have told him that these are not employees of Wonderworks Media and I have told him that they are not employees of a private company. They are not. They are employees of a government company, so they are in the public sector. They are employees of ETCL – Employment Training Company Ltd – and they are on an apprenticeship scheme and have been for some time. I am surprised that he got that information, given that these two are public sector employees through a government company. Footwork or otherwise, I hope that satisfies his curiosity.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, with the greatest of respect to him, I take everything he says – and I do not want to personalise it: almost everything that the Government says – with a pinch of salt. I have been on this side of the house for –

950

Mr Speaker: I do not think that is quite right and it is being disrespectful. I would rather you withdrew that expression.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I withdraw it on your advice. Let me just put it in these terms, that everything they say I am put on enquiry and I need to check it. So I still stand by what I said earlier in respect of I think it was my first or second supplementary, but is he telling me that those individuals have never worked for Wonderworks Media Ltd and that there has not, at some point, as a result of the questions that we have been asking from this side of the House, been a bit of fancy footwork ... and had them transferred to ETCL, which he has rightly described as a government-owned company.

Mr Speaker, if I may, there is a long schedule that has been provided in respect of the answer to Question 102, and I would like a bit of time, if I may, to come back to that, but I will ask a question in relation to Question 102 now, which may obviate ... No, Mr Speaker, it arises from the same point that I am making, and I think it would assist him, but I am happy not to ask it.

965

Hon. Chief Minister: Just so that I can answer one thing at a time, otherwise I might have the 161 problem I had before.

Mr Speaker, even to say that the hon. Gentleman puts on enquiry the information that we have is, if I may say so with respect to him, unedifying. I am not going to say it is unparliamentary because that is a matter for you, Mr Speaker, but it is unedifying for this reason. The information I am giving him is provided to me by the brilliant people who prepare the Government for answering these questions – by the Parliament team at No. 6 Convent Place. They go to the Departments to obtain the information and then check it against the records at Employment and Human Resources to ensure that, insofar as possible, we do everything we can to ensure the information we give the House is accurate.

985

He has known me for longer than he and I care to remember. I have given him direct information. I have told him who they are employed by. He knows I am not going to give information that could enable him to embarrass me by showing that the information I have given him is wrong in the way I have been able to embarrass him by showing the information that he brought to the House and based his question on is wrong. (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) Well, he should be embarrassed, Mr Speaker, because he should have checked with his alleged source of information. The information that I have, therefore, is information provided to the Government through the Government in good faith to come to the House to put on the record of Hansard, and therefore there is not going to be any chance that anybody should legitimately be able to be put on enquiry by information that we provide in that respect. His suggestions about me are water off a duck's back and irrelevant, but his suggestions about the people who work for me and who work for the taxpayer are really unearned because they do their best to ensure that every piece of information that I give to this House is accurate.

The information I have is that in all of the time that these individuals we are referring to across the floor of the House have been working in the Ministry for Tourism, they have been employed by ETCL on this apprenticeship and that therefore it is completely wrong for anybody to have given him the information that they worked, ever, for Wonderworks Media. I do not know whether before they worked in the Government they might have served chips and doner kebabs for 995 Wonderworks Media if they have a takeaway somewhere; I do not know, but certainly they have never worked in the Ministry for Tourism for the hon. Gentleman, as he has suggested, for Wonderworks Media.

1000 There has not been any attempt to change records as a result of that questioning. My goodness, he does ascribe to himself an incredible importance that a question from him across the floor of the House might suggest that we then go and change records, that we might create an erroneous and fraudulent paper trail on public documents to address a question that he put in this House in a way that would expose us to potential criminality and sanction. That is the sort of allegation he is making. He does not think through the things he is saying. That is the problem. The allegations that are loaded within the things that he says he does not think about, that we or public servants have changed the public record. No, it has not happened. These two ladies he refers to, who do an excellent job, (Interjection) do it for ETCL, seconded to the Ministry for Tourism on an apprenticeship from the day they walked into the Ministry for Tourism.

1005 The hon. Member might want to reflect on the fact that he has cast huge aspersions – not on me, because we have known each other for long enough that we call each other every name and our friendship is unaffected, but on the public servants beyond me. Knowing him as I do, I do not think he intended to do that and he will want to extend an apology to the public servants who work with the Government in providing information to this House.

1015 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, the first point I would like to make is that ... The Hon. the Minister for Housing, in an unhelpful way, I suppose, is asking me from a sedentary position where the question is. I have just started to speak; a question will come, he can relax. When he says 'alleged' source of information, I would ask him to withdraw that on the basis that it is true, what I am saying. I do have a source and information has been imparted to me, so he is questioning the veracity of what I have said and I would ask him, please, to withdraw that.

1020 But if I may ask the question, Mr Speaker – and this is the question I was going to ask in relation to Question 102, with the caveat that I would like to consider the schedule with a bit more time – is it the case that there have been transfers to these government companies – he has mentioned one, but I see that there are others; we have GBIC, which is a joint venture with a Chinese entity, and others – of people who had at one point worked with Wonderworks Media Ltd? In his answer – and this is why it needs to be unpicked – he says that at the time of ... and quite properly because the question arose from Question 101, which related specifically to the Ministry for Tourism, but is it possible that these individuals worked in other Government Departments before they were transferred to ETCL with Wonderworks Media Ltd? And I widen the question now, because I am able to as a result of the way that Question 102 was posed, to other employees.

1030 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I will start with the request that I withdraw something: I should withdraw that his alleged source of information provided him information. I do not know what it is that the hon. Gentleman wants me to withdraw, and it is a bit rich coming from somebody who has said that everything that I say – by the way, Mr Speaker, it is 1639 by my watch: I hope he will take that for granted – he is put on inquiry about. He might want to check the phone that he is looking at: 1639. I hope that on that his inquiry leads him to the same conclusion, that I am telling the truth, because the idea that everything I say, even when I am telling the time, is something that puts him on enquiry is something which, if I was not so long in the tooth and if I did not have such a thick skin, I would say I would like to see withdrawn because it is an allegation that the things that I say are not reliable.

1040 Forget the fact that I am talking to him, that I have known him for 38 years and that I have a sufficient personal regard for him that I would not mislead him – even if we were outside here, I would not say something to Damon Bossino, whom I have known since we entered comprehensive school together, which was untrue. I would not, because of the regard I have for him. But the idea that I have come to this House, where we have an obligation not to mislead, where we have an obligation to ensure that what we say on Hansard reflects the truth and that everything I say puts 1050 them on enquiry, I can only mean as to the truth of what I say. Mr Speaker, if he does not withdraw that, I am certainly not going to withdraw what I am alleged to have said about the person who is alleged to have told him something. The fact that he has been told something ... I fully accept he has been told something. We are going to the thing that he has been told, and the thing that he has been told is untrue. That is the reality.

1055 In terms of whether any of the people on this schedule that I have passed to him have been employed by Wonderworks Media, well, the hon. Gentleman might care to look at the schedule. The schedule has a date of employment commencing set out in one of the columns. From my memory, all of those dates of employment predate the controversy, as he has described it in this House, about Wonderworks Media, so I would have thought that a careful analysis of the schedule might have led him to the answer and not required that he put the question in the way that he has, which is designed to suggest that there is some, what he has described as fancy footwork, changing of things as a result of their questioning. As far as I can see, there has not. I have no information to suggest that any of these people have ever been employed by Wonderworks 1060 Media, and I hope that his enquiries lead him to the conclusion that this House has never been misled by me or any Member of this Government.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

1065 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, before we move on, I have some information that the hon. Gentleman asked me for before, in relation to the other questions.

I have the premium for the Forbes site. It was £1.8 million.

1070 In respect of the Eastern Beach car park, the contractor is GJBS. I thought we had settled on GJBS, but I did not want to give the information to the House because I did not want to act from memory in case I misled the House.

The total number of new parking spaces is 144, which brings a total of 579 parking spaces to the car park – 579, £1.8 million premium.

Mr Speaker: We move on to the next question.

Q103/2023

Hassan Centenary Terraces residents' parking – Whether sufficient

1075 Clerk: Question 103/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Is there sufficient parking for all Hassan Centenary Terraces residents?

1080 I think the hon. Member made a reference to this in response and he thinks positive news will be coming my way now.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, yes, sir.

1085 Hon. D J Bossino: He has kind of already answered this question, but in relation to ... Just by way of further supplementary, the affirmative response ... Just so I make myself clear, in other words, that is parking spaces ... Presumably there is one per flat within the entire development, or just split into two phases, phase 1 and phase 2, and he has given completion dates in respect of each. Is that understanding correct? He said that the extra floor being built at Eastern Beach is 1090 going to be providing extra parking and doing other things, but is going to be providing extra parking spaces for residents at Hassan Centenary Terraces. Is that understanding correct?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the understanding is correct insofar as he is referring to one parking space per affordable home. The Hassan Centenary Terraces phases 1 and 2 are designed so that there is one parking space available per affordable home. It is the sort of criterion that the DPC imposes on private developers anyway.

1095 The use of the Eastern Beach car park extension in part by Hassan Centenary Terraces residents for their second cars is also for Eastern Beach, Beach View Terraces second cars, for the private development second cars, for areas in relation to the East Side project when completed, which will require more parking, and also the users of Eastern Beach. I gave him much more logic in relation to the Eastern Beach car park, Mr Speaker, so I hope that gives him the information.

1100 In the amount of costs, which was £2.8 million that I gave him a moment ago for the car park, by the way, the 144 spaces comes to about £19,400 per space, which means that we did quite a good deal on the Forbes one.

1105 Hon. D J Bossino: Is he not being overly ambitious that the – 144, I think he said – extra car parking spaces are going to be providing for so many? He has mentioned many developments plus other private developments. That strikes me as a very tall order as far as those 144 extra car parking spaces are concerned – but he is sniggering, so I am sure he will have an answer.

1110 Hon. Chief Minister: Sniggering, Mr Speaker, at the morass of contradictions that I face from him, and I am snickering with affection because he started by telling me that the car park is empty. And so it is not the 144 that we have to calculate on, it is the 579, which will be the total number of parking spaces available in the car park, given that it is empty. But this is now going to be the entrance to Gibraltar when the tunnel finally opens. We are going to have a very large estate. The East Side project is going to be there. You are about to see completions in the private property which has just been completed across the road, and Beach View Terraces is there also. So it is not the 144 that is going to do the job, it is the 579.

1120 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q104-05/2023
Gibraltar Airport –
Recent flight diversions

Clerk: Question 104/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

1125 Hon. D J Bossino: Have the human resources issues which have been the cause of recent flight diversions at Gibraltar Airport been resolved?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Question 105.

1130 Clerk: Question 105/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: What contingency measures have been put in place in order to prevent flight diversions which have arisen as a result of a faulty telephone line in Spain and fuel bowser technical issues at Gibraltar Airport?

1135 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if the question is related to the historic HR issues that NATS Gibraltar has, the information I have is that these are still not entirely resolved. This is highly unsatisfactory and I have personally made this point to the Commander British Forces and shall 1140 raise the matter with the Defence Secretary if a satisfactory resolution is not forthcoming. However, flight operations have not been affected due to HR issues since 24th November 2022.

On diversions, it must be noted that the main reason for flights diverting at Gibraltar Airport is for safety reasons which, by and large, relate to weather or technical circumstances. The aviation industry is one of the most regulated and safe modes of transport and this is only achieved 1145 because the strict safety protocols in place are adhered to.

Diversions and disruptions are very inconvenient to passengers and HMGoG would like to avoid these completely, but the reality is that they occur every day in many parts of the world and will never disappear completely, due to the complex nature of the operation and the aviation industry itself. For this reason, Gibraltar Airport has robust diversionary procedures in place, which are well 1150 planned and executed, and although they add more travelling time they still achieve a continuity of service for passengers and deliver that key aspect of air transport, which is safety.

Mr Speaker, let me be very clear: the diversions caused because of communication issues at ATC were resolved by the MoD and any measures put in place are their responsibility and not the Government's. Gibraltar Airport is a strategic UK airfield and an important military base, and it is 1155 not for HMGoG to report on what these plans are. Having said that, we did offer our support in trying to resolve their issues and we were kept fully informed of the problems they were facing at all times and have been assured that they will continue working to add resilience to what is already in place. In this instance, I understand that all three resilience options were down at the same time. The resilience needs to be checked, in our view, more often, so that Plans B and C are 1160 available when required, when Plan A is not available.

Additionally, there were no diversions effected because of the fuel bowser technical issues. The technical issues encountered on the morning of 1st January 2023 were also related to safety and these were resolved on site. Again, on this, even the resilience failed. This is unacceptable and must be addressed urgently. We have assurances from the contractor that they are addressing 1165 these issues. The first aircraft due that morning operated normally, although the next two were delayed outbound whilst this was resolved.

Hon. D J Bossino: All of these things ... it is almost like a perfect storm in the sense that you almost could not make it up, and because they happened, really, in such a short period of time.
1170 As far as the fuel bowser and the Seville telephone line issues are concerned, they all happened, I think, within the same week, during Christmas, which is, to boot, a very busy period.

There is a lot of information that the hon. Gentleman has imparted in his response, and I hope not to miss any replies which I think are worthy of a supplementary question to elicit further information.

1175 Because this is such an important asset as far as our economy is concerned, because it is a means by which we communicate and travel, and that is hugely important, I am sure that, when I say that, I have the complete and utter agreement of the hon. Gentleman opposite that we need to make sure that we do everything absolutely possible to prevent these issues. I fully understand and acknowledge the remark that he has made. He has made it in the past. It is a fact and it is
1180 obvious that this is an MoD airport at the end of the day, but we have an interest in it and our economy has a huge interest in it – just by way of, I hope, as brief as possible a preamble that I have been able to muster on this occasion.

In relation to the human resources issue, I think he said that the last occasion when that issue caused a flight disruption was in November. He gave us the precise date of 24th November. Can 1185 he give us a firmer response as to whether these issues have been finally resolved? As I understand it, they are caused as a result of fewer personnel available than there used to be, and again, when we have a bit of a perfect-storm situation where there are more than x number of individuals who are off sick and it results in the tower not being available for operation ... The mind boggles just saying that. Can he give us some further information in relation to that? And then I will ask him some supplementaries in respect of the other question.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, yes, this obviously became a perfect storm because if the airfield is unable to operate for civilian traffic, then although in the mind of the MoD the principal purpose of the airfield is to be an RAF airfield, as far as I am concerned the only reason I am prepared to put up with the risk of having it is because it provides civilian services. And, to boot, we pay an amount per month which goes towards the resurfacing of the runway and therefore the maintenance of the whole thing. It is, as I have said already in my first answer, entirely unacceptable that the MoD should not get its act together with its contractors to be able to provide a service that does not fall down. It is just unacceptable. As I have said before and the hon. Gentleman will have heard me say outside of this place and inside this place, we have reduced the amount that we pay to the MoD by the number of hours of operation that they have not been able to give us the running of the airfield as we expect to be able to have it for civilian operations, and we will continue to do that. I know that the MoD itself is reducing the amount that they pay to their contractors when their contractors are falling down.

Unfortunately, perfect storms happen. Hon. Members will have seen what happened in the United States last week. Every aircraft in the air in the United States, thousands of aircraft, had to land because the air traffic computer equivalent in the United States failed – remarkable – with aircraft in the air, and they were down for almost a day. This morning, Manchester Airport in the north of England had to close both its runways due to snow. Frankly, if you are in the north of England, I am surprised you have to do that, because I was in Finland in November and they did not have to close their airfields because of snow, which was bountiful and falling. We all know and have seen on our screens the issues affecting Heathrow Airport, the largest airport in Europe, and Schiphol Airport and Gatwick Airport.

We may all be told that these things happen because of a perfect storm. I find it entirely unacceptable and a failure of process that if you have three systems in order to be able to communicate safely with Seville Air Traffic Control in a way that provides a log so that you are able to have, for air-safety purposes, a proper recording of your conversations, the three go down on the same day. In other words, your usual system does not work, you go to your resilience option 1 and it does not work, and you go to your resilience option 2 and it does not work. My question is when did you last check your resilience option 1, and when did you last check your resilience option 2? If you did not check them because you have not had to use them for 15 years, well of course they are not going to work; they are going to atrophy. You need to be checking them. You need to ensure, every morning, that your three resilience options are operating, and if one of them is down you repair it on that day so that if, the following day, something goes down, it is provided for.

It is just unacceptable. If we were running the Airport we would be crucified, rightly. And so the message has to go out that this is not acceptable, to the MoD and to the MoD's contractor, because of the importance of the airfield for Gibraltar and, indeed, for the civilian importance of the Airport; also for people who work in the MoD who, when they are not working and flying on a services flight – most of them do not – also rely on the Airport to be able to go back home and see their relatives etc. It is just unacceptable.

In terms of a firmer response on the personnel issue, I do not understand how they have not been able to resolve this yet. It is just remarkable. They need to train new people. They need to have people here who are able to operate the airfield. Why didn't they do it already? How has this crept up on us? This is a key piece of national infrastructure, even though we do not run it. We make sure that nobody is able to leave a bolt on the runway, we make sure that this piece of critical national infrastructure is available in an emergency, and yet we do not see coming that we are going to have this difficulty with personnel. As I have said before in this House, if Trevor Hammond had been running it, it would not have happened; he would have seen it coming.

1240 I do not understand what on earth it is that NATS does not understand about how important this asset is to Gibraltar, and because it is important to Gibraltar, its economy and its resilience economically, how important it is to the UK, of which the MoD is a part. In my view, they had better wake up and smell the coffee and get the operation of the Airport right, so that it can be 1245 properly relied on by the airlines that fly to it, by the people who depend on it and by the businesses that depend on it, because otherwise one is left with the view that it is just not fair that they should continue to control such an important asset and that the people of Gibraltar would do a better job of running it.

Hon. D J Bossino: I hear the hon. Member. I hear the passion with which he is expressing 1250 himself. He is certainly as irate as I think we all are as a result of the problems and he is a user of (Interjection) airlines because he travels a lot as a result of the work that he carries out. But how is that, dare I say irate reaction, anger and passion reflected on the ground? From everything that he has expressed now, putting to one side the manner in which he has expressed it, in terms of the substantive things that we as a government can do, other than, I think, at the end of his 1255 comments he was almost suggesting – I would invite him to say something about that in his reply – that what, we would run it? Presumably we would not be able to afford it. I remember in the days when Sir Joe Bossano used to say, when he was Chief Minister, that if the MoD ever passed the running of the Airport to the Gibraltar Government he would have to close it the next day because it was simply impossible for us to pay for it. So we are, in that sense, lumbered with the situation 1260 we are in, but I would invite him to comment in relation to that point.

But other than – just to carry on with the point I made earlier – the reduction of the amount that we pay, what else is there that we can do? In the press release attributed to a spokesman of
No. 6 during Christmas was ‘we will continue working with ...’ He now says the Gibraltar Government is going to be supporting the MoD. And he pulls his hair out, saying, ‘How is it possible 1265 that those three resilience measures ...?’ I would ask him also if he can specifically say what those are – A, B and C. He may not be able to, but I ask him to do so. How is it possible that that should have arisen? Is it things like that that the Gibraltar Government can assist with? In other words, I suppose it is a bit of a mix, what he has said. It is a bit of a carrot in the sense that we are here to support –

1270 Mr Speaker: Please –

Hon. D J Bossino: I am asking questions as I go along.

1275 Mr Speaker: Right. You can only –

Hon. D J Bossino: Let me, then, distil it, at the Speaker’s request, to that: what is it that the Gibraltar Government can do substantively by way of putting pressure in a ‘stick’ way? He talks about reducing the amount that we pay. Is there the possibility of seeking compensation for the 1280 losses that we may suffer, or indeed increasing the reduction? And secondly, what is it that we can substantively do as a government to support the MoD, so that these incidents do not reoccur?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, let me start by saying that he is asking what am I doing.
Answering as I have in this House is one of the things that I am doing, communicating the same 1285 level of conviction that this is unacceptable to the Commander British Forces. I do not know whether he heard the answer I gave him: raising the issue, if necessary, with the Defence Secretary. In other words, the top of the Ministry of Defence. I do not discard, if things were not to improve quickly, raising the matter with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom because this can affect the economic resilience of Gibraltar. All of the way that we have to go, we will go. I have 1290 expressed the views I have expressed in this House directly – in a way that does not require me to keep to the established level of polite language that this House requires me to keep in the way that I have expressed it more privately – to those who have responsibility.

1295 What else can we do? Well, of course we can redact further the amount that we pay under the customer user agreement. We are doing it in quite a scientific way at the moment. I do not think we can take over the running of MoD RAF Gibraltar, which is the sort of thing that Sir Joe Bossano used to say he would not do, but we can take over, for example, the running of air traffic control and train local controllers, and then we sell that service to the Ministry of Defence, because 1300 somebody is selling that service to the Ministry of Defence today. NATS is a UK company. It sells its service to the Ministry of Defence in all of its airports around the world, including Gibraltar. It is falling down in Gibraltar. Well, look, we can employ those air traffic controllers in Gibraltar, we can train them for Gibraltar and we can sell our service to the Ministry of Defence in respect of that, because they do not do it themselves now. So there are options. But in terms of compensation, the hon. Gentleman should know this is pure economic loss.

1305 Mr Speaker: Final question. If you were to reduce the length of your preamble, then perhaps you can get ... Honestly – (Interjection) Just go ahead and ask the questions.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, yes, but I think it is fair comment to say that the answers are long. I do not criticise that. The answers are long. There is a lot of information, but the answers 1310 are also long, not just on this occasion as a result of this exchange, but as a result of many of the questions that we pose, the answers from the Ministers tend to be long. I have not been keeping a tally of the number of supplementaries I have asked in respect of this exchange, but I do not think there have been that many.

1315 When he questions the three resilience options – A, B and C – all of which failed ... I think he said they are working to add resilience. Has the work towards that resulted in a permanent solution, so that, as best as possible, we have some form of guarantee that something like this will not happen again in the future?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if the resilience options had been working, then what 1320 happened would not have happened because what failed was one, and therefore if the other two had been working, or one of the other two had been working, there would have been a seamless period of transition to repair one and the other one would have continued.

1325 What I am assured is that all three are being brought back up and all three will be checked more regularly, so that therefore there should not be a recurrence of it. But you can never say never. If there is an earthquake and it does not affect us, but it affects the other side of Los Barrios and the east line goes between Gibraltar and Seville, then there is going to be nothing you can do.
You cannot have a radar link between Gibraltar and Seville. So these things, subject to what could reasonably be provided for, I am assured are being provided for.

1330 There is no Government of Gibraltar element in here and there is nothing that we can do in terms of that link. Just so that we understand what we are talking about, we are talking about the black box recorder of air traffic control and that is why they have to be able to record everything in a way that is particularly time stamped etc.

1335 Mr Speaker: You may ask another question, but just a single question. Do not group them together. Let's have another question, but concise and straight to the point.

The Hon. the Leader of Opposition.

1340 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I have one question and it is short, but before I do that, because I see the explanation ... The Hon. Chief Minister has said, and I see the value of him making those comments publicly, as he has done, about how unacceptable it is that the airport infrastructure should be affected by those issues, and so that the message goes out loud and clear to the MoD

1345 that this House speaks on a united basis on this issue, can I also add that the Opposition considers it wholly unacceptable that – barring acts of God, of course – things that can be planned better, things that are employee related, things that are related to the infrastructure or are about forward planning of the Airport should be done in a better way? So we are with the Chief Minister in relation to those remarks and the House speaks united on that basis.

1350 Can I ask him, is there a joint forum between the Government and the MoD in relation to these types of issues? Or given that there have been, if there is not one, does the Government agree that one should be set up going forward?

Hon. Chief Minister: There is a forum, Mr Speaker. I am grateful for the hon. Gentleman's remarks. It is very helpful.

1355 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Damon Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Just one final question. I am grateful, Mr Speaker, for your guidance in relation to this.

1360 The fuel bowser incident – was that not under our control? I am not sure. I am not sighted on the detail, but that was not an MoD thing. I think that was something ... I acknowledge and it was reported in the press to that effect, that that did not result in a flight delay, but something like that surely, again, is unacceptable and should not be happening. It is just because it happened at the same time. But in terms of the future, can he give any comfort to this House that that issue will not happen again within the possible ...?

1365 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, yes, that issue is not an MoD issue. That is a Government of Gibraltar issue. It is the Gibraltar Air Terminal that grants that tender. It was not granted in our time, it was granted by them. I do not think there are many parties who can do it. I, myself, became involved and the Minister became involved that day. We were receiving the reports from people who were sitting on the plane and given what they were being told. In fact, I must say that, there, 1370 the resilience failed, but the contractor brought the resilience back immediately. It was 1st January, but they brought people in and they very quickly dealt with the issue, and as a result of the resilience failing they are going to provide further and additional resilience to ensure that it does not happen again.

1375 I can tell the hon. Gentleman I have been in an aircraft in Barcelona and the bowser failed. There, they have an alternative, which is that they take fuel directly from the runway. The runway has the fuel lines underneath. There was an electrical storm. They could not use the fuel from under the runway because it relies on metal connections, and my flight was cancelled – some years ago. So fuel issues arise. I have had fuel issues at Heathrow. Perhaps because I am a frequent flyer, I experience these issues often. I have had fuel issues at JFK as well. So these are issues which 1380 in fact arise only ex abundanti cautela In other words, you could refuel the aircraft but you have not got all the safety mechanisms, so you do not do it because there are passengers on board whilst you are refuelling etc. That needs to be fixed and the contractor has assured us that they will be providing additional resilience. I thank them because, on 1st January, getting people out to very quickly turn that around and be able to continue flight operations after only a short delay 1385 I think is a remarkable demonstration of their commitment to Gibraltar Airport. Would that they all acted like our fuel contractor did – we would not have these problems at the Airport.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q106/2023
Red ID cards –
Applications filed and granted in 2022

Clerk: Question 106/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1390

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, how many applications for red ID cards have been filed and granted in 2022?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1395

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, a total of 6,131 applications for red ID cards have been filed and granted in 2022.

Q107-08/2023
Winston Churchill Avenue –
Future use; CEPSA petrol station

Clerk: Question 107/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1400

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, when does the Government intend to wholly or partly decommission the use of Winston Churchill Avenue, and will this be pedestrianised?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Question 108.

Clerk: Question 108/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Will the CEPSA petrol station be relocated or shut down as a result of the proposed new Victoria Stadium project; and, if relocated, by whom, at what cost and to where?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, there is no intention to decommission Winston Churchill Avenue. The section to the north of the runway will remain in use as at present, although there will be some changes introduced to cater for the discontinuation of the vehicular crossing of the runway once the tunnel is opened. The section to the south of the runway will also remain in use, although some changes are expected in the area arising from proposed new developments. The continued crossing of the runway by pedestrians and bicycles once the tunnel is opened will mean that some modifications will be made to Winston Churchill Avenue either side of the runway, such as the incorporation of cycle lanes.

As the hon. Gentleman should already know, the CEPSA service station will be relocated due to the opening of the runway tunnel. Work on the new facility has already commenced. There is a lease in place between the Crown and CEPSA dating back to 1994, which states that in the event of the main traffic flow into and out of Gibraltar being diverted away from Winston Churchill Avenue, HMGoG will provide an alternative plot so that a new station can be built, which will then become the first. That is what CEPSA had confirmed by the GSD in 2010-11 when the works on the tunnel commenced – more than a decade ago, believe it or not. Therefore, the new Victoria Stadium project will not cause the relocation or closing down of the CEPSA station, the GSD tunnel 1430 project will. There is no direct relocation cost to the taxpayer, other than the provision of the new plot of land.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, on the decommissioning of Winston Churchill Avenue, he has said there is no intention to decommission. The reason for the question was that I picked up a reference to the decommissioning of Winston Churchill Avenue in the design statement on the Victoria Stadium. There is actually a comment on it. It actually says it as a statement of fact. It says after completion of the tunnel and new access into Gibraltar, it is currently anticipated that Winston Churchill Avenue will be decommissioned. I thought that was odd, so I wanted to ask about it and give the Government an opportunity to confirm how, because I could not envisage how that was going to be decommissioned given the importance and length of Winston Churchill Avenue. But not only that, can I just say, in relation to it, that it does not come up in the most recent design access statement only, it comes up in a previous one that was filed about two or three years ago, which actually refers, I believe, to discussions with the Government. So can I ask whether it was ever considered by the Government as a decommissioning?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, that design statement, the current one and the previous one, are not government documents, and the language of decommissioning is not the Government's language. I do not know whether a person who is preparing those things for the GFA considers that that is the right way to summarise what I have explained to him, but for example I can tell him that there needs to be a crash gate on either side of Winston Churchill Avenue to be able to have vehicular access to the runway continue in the event of there being an accident. The crash gate would be a necessary part of how you access the runway through there. There are other crash gates at different parts of the runway where you can access the apron as well. But, for example, we are not looking to build a wall on to the runway on either side, there will be crash gates, and therefore, for crash gates to be meaningful, the road still has to be there.

The way that the road will be used will, of course, be different because it will be used by pedestrians, it will be used by cyclists, it will not just be used by vehicles, but that is not a decommissioning as we understand it. The four lanes might become two because of the cycle lane etc., but there is no decommissioning to speak of, and decommissioning is not the Government's word or language to explain what I have set out to the hon. Gentleman. Whether a third party who hears us might want to describe that as a decommissioning of part of Winston Churchill Avenue is a matter for them, but that is not how we would use the word 'decommissioning'.

Mr Speaker: Next question. The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker, I just have one quick question in relation to Question 108. When the CEPESA station is relocated to the new site, given the opening of the tunnel, would I be correct in my understanding that the current site of the CEPESA petrol station would then revert to the Government? And is it the Government's intention to open up that site to expression of interest?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I believe that site is already agreed to form part of the GFA's plot from the time that we transferred the plot to the GFA some years ago.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q109/2023

Civil Service –

Employment opportunities for returning graduates

Clerk: Question 109/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Does the Government consider that returning graduates should join the Civil Service; and, if so, how will it provide entry opportunities for that to happen?

1480

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Government considers that returning graduates should take the most attractive jobs available that best suit their skills and qualifications. If these include the Civil Service, they should be very welcome.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, from that generic answer the Government does not see any kind of special importance in ensuring that ...? Given that the Government obviously invests quite a lot in education and sending children to university, as all successive Governments have, or at least since the scholarship programme was first established and then enhanced, does the Government not see the value of a long-term plan facilitating the entry of graduates into the Civil Service, which will then also, together with any other new entrants into the Civil Service, provide for a long-term succession plan that strengthens the Civil Service?

1490

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, yes, sir.

Hon. K Azopardi: And given that, does the Government not consider there should be a specific plan to facilitate that entry?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, that assumes a specific plan is necessary. I can tell the hon. Gentleman from memory that when we last recruited AAs, I think we recruited 44 and I think 44 had degrees – they had been away to university, been through the programme that the hon. Gentleman refers to and then entered the Civil service – and that in the recruitment before that, I think ... Hon. Members can be put on enquiry about this because I am not sure, but I think 90% to 95% were also graduates, and in the recruitment before that, 95% to 100% were also graduates, and in the recruitment before that, ditto, and so on and so forth. So I think the effect of the scholarship programme has meant that when we get applications for the Civil Service, the best qualified have, of course, the five GCSEs, but most of them have also a degree, and many of them a master's degree to boot. So for the past ... I am going to even suggest 20 years, most of the people who have been recruited into the Civil Service – the question is about the Civil Service – have a degree, and if not, 95% to 100%. Because I have now gone to 20 years, 75% to 80% have degrees.

And so I think that what the hon. Gentleman is saying is being achieved, because a lot of people who are coming through the ranks now are people who have degrees. Having said that, some of the best people I work with day to day do not have degrees because they come from another generation when they were not available, and they are exemplary and are leading the Civil Service today and giving an example to those who are joining the Civil Service, some of whom have degrees. But I would have thought that it is near-on a 100% hit rate that the new entrants have degrees through the scholarship programme already.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am glad to hear it. Having gone to university when there was a points system in place, I do certainly remember that because of the constraint that the points system used to apply, sometimes a lot of people would either ... those closed-Frontier Gibraltar ...

1525 I am showing my age, but a lot of people would either then get into the private sector, maybe into banks, or a lot of very clever people would join the Civil Service. What concerns me, hence the question, and has concerned me for some time, is that now that there is not the points system, people are encouraged to obtain degrees but then somehow there is a lost generation that does not have the opportunity to join the Civil Service.

1530 Can I ask him whether the comments that he made in respect of the number of people who have degrees in the Civil Service are anecdotal or based on some kind of statistical basis? And if it is anecdotal and based on his experience, would it be useful to actually understand more precisely the kind of make-up of the current Civil Service in 2023?

1535 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I did not realise he was quite that old. I did not think he had gone away to university when the Frontier was closed; he went away to university when the Frontier was open. (Interjection) It had opened a year. Exactly, it had opened, so I was not wrong. When he went to university, the Frontier had opened because the Frontier opened for pedestrians in 1982 and he did not go away to study in 1982, and it opened for vehicles – (Interjection) The points system, yes, but he said ‘the closed-Frontier Gibraltar from which I went to university’.

1540 (Interjection) No, exactly, that is what I thought. When you were at school, right, okay.

I went to university when the points system was no longer there. Happily, I would have been able to go even if the points system had been there, but a lot of people who joined the Civil Service before the points system was done away with would very easily have been able to go to university without the points system, and so the Civil Service was the beneficiary of people who were going to the Civil Service instead of going away to get a degree, and it was providing them the university of life and administration. Now they get their university degrees and they come back to the Civil Service and to other jobs in Gibraltar, but the Civil Service is taking its lion’s share.

You could also argue this in another way. You could argue that we are sending people away to university to obtain degrees, they obtain degrees in fields where Gibraltar might be able to benefit from them in the private sector, but the Civil Service terms and conditions are so attractive that they do not stay in the private sector, they go into the Civil Service. So there are arguments about this which go round and round.

1550

I am talking anecdotally, because I have met the 44 and I could see that they were all people who I knew had been away to university, but I will ask the Chief Secretary to give me a breakdown of the last three intakes of the Civil Service and indicate how many of those who are in the intake have a degree.

1555

One of the things that has been done very successfully also is that the Civil Service has offered the opportunity for continuing professional education and to take degrees, in particular in fields of management or further degrees in their fields of study. So people have continued to study whilst at work in the Civil Service – in the Open University, I think also with Sheffield University – and so people have become graduates whilst in the Civil Service, also a very laudable way of ensuring that those who work for Gibraltar are able to continue to develop their own studies for the improvement of the work that they do for Gibraltar and indeed for their work after retirement.

1560

Anything which is education enjoys the support of the Government, and although he is not here, we all agree that Joe Bossano was a visionary in that respect when he insisted on the abolition of the points system in the teeth of opposition, and he has been proved right. When we were re-elected in 2011 he was also insistent that we should go further and get rid of any requirement in terms of master’s degrees, and people can now do a first master’s degree as a mandatory grant, as we used to hear our teachers refer to it in comprehensive school.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, my final question. We are in agreement, of course, that a lot of people who could have aspired to go to university had the current system been in place in those years joined the Civil Service, but of course it has now been so long that probably a lot of those people have retired. That is the reality since the change in the removal of the points system, which is more than 30 years ago now. Hence the concern.

1575

The Chief Minister talked about their entry at a AA level. Is the route available to returning graduates at that level, or would the Government consider any other entry point for graduates, as perhaps they do sometimes in the United Kingdom? And will there be another AA round at some point soon?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do not think that last question arises from this question.

The Government already provides for graduate entry in respect of some grades and not just in the clerical Civil Service, but beyond. For example, Crown Counsel is a degree entry grade. Of course, in the GHA and in other areas you require a degree qualification in order to be able to apply – a mechanical engineering degree for certain of the technical services. At administrative grade we are looking at recruitment with degrees as a better qualification, which qualifies the individual applying and raises them up the ladder of those who are likely to get the job.

Graduate entry to the Civil Service would require negotiation with the unions of that possibility. The Government has not raised that with the unions at this stage because we think this is happening organically. The hon. Gentleman is right to point to the fact that the points system was abolished – 35 years ago in May, I think – and so we have the benefit of 35 years of graduates now in effect in the Civil Service. If the hon. Gentleman, the Hon. Mr Feetham and the Hon. Deputy Chief Minister do not mind me disclosing, I believe that their age is now the retirement age for a clerical grade in the Civil Service, although they all look much younger than that – of course, the Deputy Chief Minister in particular. I would therefore suggest that we have, in effect, now a whole lifetime of civil servants who are benefiting from a recruitment process that has enabled HR and the Public Service Commission to take on those who have turned up with degrees at the time of application. And so very senior people in the service, either because they went away and had degrees when they joined or because they took degrees when they were in the service, have the benefit of degrees, and equally senior people are magnificent and nobody can hold a candle to them even though they do not have degrees.

1600

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q110-11/2023

Administrative posts in Government Departments – Number of vacancies; posts occupied on acting or temporary basis

Clerk: Question 110/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can the Government confirm how many vacant administrative posts there were in Government Departments on 10th January 2023 and provide a breakdown of where these vacancies arise by Department and by grade?

1610

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Question 111.

Clerk: Question 111/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, how many officers were occupying administrative posts in Government Departments on an acting or temporary basis at ... the question says 11th January, but it really should have been 10th January, broken down by particular clerical grade and by the Department in which the particular officer is occupying the post?

1620

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I now hand the hon. Gentleman a schedule with the information requested.

1625 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, while I look through the schedule, if the hon. Member looks at my questions, my questions were in two parts, really: first of all, how many; and then provide a breakdown. I think the schedules provide the breakdown but they do not provide the totals. I wonder whether the hon. Member has that information, given the wording of the question was how many and provide a breakdown.

1630 Sorry, did the Hon. Chief Minister say he does not have one?

Hon. Chief Minister: I do not have it. I have the same schedule he has.

1635 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I will count them, but ... It is quite a long schedule, for the listener and the watcher of this.

Hon. Chief Minister: Sorry. I think that the numbers I have are the relevant numbers he has asked for. I think that it is 76 in Question 110 and 167 in Question 111. I think that is what he is asking me whether I have the numbers on, and I just did not know whether this was an explanation to me about some aspect of it. I think that is the total, actually, of the two questions. He should check it, but I think given what I can see here and what those two numbers ... I think that is correct.

Hon. K Azopardi: I am grateful, Mr Speaker, and yes, I will have a look myself just in case that reference is to something else, but given the length of the schedules, it looks like it is probably right. That being so, on that assumption, 76 vacant administrative posts and 167 officers occupying administrative posts on an acting or temporary basis is a fairly large number, over 250 in total, but taking vacant administrative posts first, and indeed looking collectively at the acting officers in the various administrative posts in a number of Departments – Digital Services, Employment, Financial Secretary’s Department, Human Resources, Income Tax, No. 6, Treasury ... You can go on. It is many, many Departments. What is the process that the Government is following to fill these posts?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do not necessarily agree that it is many. I think it is many less than I inherited when I was elected – I understand that the number was much higher than that – first of all. Second, you cannot add 76 and 167. I do not think it makes any sense to do that because the 76 are inclusive of the 167, and to the extent that there will be people acting into the 76 in many great respects. So it is not 250 by any stretch of the imagination. At most it is 167, but the actual number of vacant posts would be 76.

What happens is that when you are filling a vacant post and somebody acts up, somebody else acts up and somebody else acts up. It is a little like the domino effect in respect of the housing. One vacant post can lead to two or three acting positions. So I do not think it is a very high number in that respect. Seventy six out of the total complement of the Civil Service is probably quite a low number.

I can tell him, for example, that just one of them is certainly a new post. That is to say it is not a post that was there before and is going to be filled; it is a post that the Government has accepted, after representations, we should create, which is a senior officer in the Employment Department. The process is that the Office of the Chief Secretary, the PSC and the HR Department deal with the opening of vacancies etc. This is quite a jigsaw puzzle. You open one and you create another vacancy because by filling, for example, the vacancy for a senior officer, you are creating the vacancy of senior executive officer. The next step is to fill that senior executive officer vacancy, which creates the HEO vacancy – I hope I am getting my grades right – etc., ad infinitum. That is a process that this Government, certainly that I lead, does not get involved in. It is a process that is run by the Office of the Chief Secretary and the Human Resources Department, and in my view it is not, at the moment, a huge issue in respect of the 76 vacant posts.

At this stage, when we are looking at the last quarter of the financial year, we would probably also be looking at whether any of those posts should continue or not continue. In the same way as you create new posts, you can also discontinue posts with the agreement of the union etc. in consultation, as we come up to the finalising of the Book and the complements for the year to come.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, just scanning quickly ... If I may, on the vacancies, there are 76 vacancies and obviously different grades, but I do notice, doing a quick look through the schedule, that there are 15 AAs and around 16 AOs – administrative assistants and administrative officers – so, AA being the entry grade, I ask again: I assume, obviously to fill in those vacancies, you would have to have a round of recruitment – is the Government planning an AA entry round soon?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, at this stage the Government is not planning to do anything that increases the recurrent expenditure because, as the hon. Gentleman should know, if we 1690 increase the recurrent expenditure the only place we are going to do it is by increasing the debt because we have not got a surplus to be digging into. He has started the week by saying that he wanted to bring debt down, and therefore I would have thought we would all agree that we would need to keep the recurrent costs down if we are going to bring recurrent debt down and we are going to bring the deficit down.

1695 So the Government is not planning in this respect, because he has identified that there are AA and AO vacancies, to do an AA or AO round. There are other ways that we can provide, for example by providing GDC employees who can assist in these areas, and in particular, given that the complement of the Civil Service is much higher than it was when we were elected, it is outside our electoral commitment in respect of the Civil Service to have to maintain those grades if they are beyond what the complement was on 9th December 2011.

1700 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, the reason I ask is because ... I am asking about government policy and the Minister for Financial Stability ... He is not here right now, but he has said publicly, I think several times now, that when there are vacancies the Government would just take the view that they would assess the particular requirements of the particular posts and decide whether or not to fill the vacancies. He has not made the point generically that there would be no vacancies, but rather that they would test the case for it. I am asking whether, given this list of vacancies, they have assessed whether any of these AA entry posts should be filled, and if so, whether they are going to hold an entry round. That is really what I was asking.

1710 Hon. Chief Minister: But, Mr Speaker, that is really what I have said to him in other language. I have said as we are in the last quarter of the year, we are doing the assessment of whether, when we settle the complements for the Departments, a particular grade should remain or not remain, and only then would you be making a decision as to running a recruitment round.

1715 Hon. K Azopardi: Can I just ask specifically: the Accountant General Post is vacant? Is that correct?

1720 Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, because the Accountant General has just become the Financial Secretary.

Hon. K Azopardi: Presumably, this is a post that the Government does intend to fill. Is that right?

1725 Hon. Chief Minister: Of course, Mr Speaker, it is a statutory post, but that has nothing to do with AAs or AOs.

1730 Hon. K Azopardi: Of course it has not got anything to do with AAs and AOs, but I was not asking in that way. And so, given that, can I just ask about ...? Because a Financial Secretary was appointed – (Interjection) Well, he says just become, but it is at least four months since he became the Financial Secretary. I thought the previous Financial Secretary had stood down from the end of September, so that is nearly four months ago, isn't it? We are now in late January, so what process of recruitment is there of the Accountant General ongoing?

1735 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it is a process of recruitment that does not involve me. It is a process of recruitment that started the day the Financial Secretary took his post, on 1st October, which is run by the Chief Secretary and the Public Services Commission. It is not anything to do with the political Government. We are not standing in the way of it. It is a process that is running. In fact, I understand that it is something that started even before the Financial Secretary took his post because when he was going to take his post, he immediately started the process of recruitment of his successor.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am not suggesting that the Government is standing in front of that process. I do not think anything I have said suggests that. I am simply asking for clarification as to the process. Does the Chief Minister have an expectation of when there will be a new Accountant General?

1745

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman has been a Minister. This is why I am surprised at his questions, unless they did things in a very different way, which was not to leave the Civil Service to its own devices when it came to recruitment. We leave the Civil Service to its devices.

1750

The Financial Secretary, who became the Accountant General, who became the Financial Secretary, immediately started a process, as I have told him, with the PSC, the HR Department and the Chief Secretary for the recruitment of their successor. This is an internal recruitment process and it is ongoing.

1755

When are they going to be able to have a new Accountant General? I do not know whether they announced one yesterday, I do not know whether they are about to announce one tomorrow or whether the candidates for interview have asked for a longer date for the interviews because of personal issues. I cannot give him an answer, but it is not a ministerial responsibility – at least it is not a ministerial responsibility in my time – that he would expect to be running if he were Chief Minister in a government like the one we are running. That is my point, Mr Speaker.

Q112-13/2023

No negotiated outcome scenario – Macro-economic impact; means of mitigating outcome

1760

Clerk: Question 112/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Does the government have any updated figures on the macro-economic impact of a no-deal Brexit scenario?

1765

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Question 113.

1770

Clerk: Question 113/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: In his New Year speech, the Chief Minister states that ‘if there is no deal for reasons we cannot control, I assure you we will be ready to mitigate such an outcome’. Could the Chief Minister explain the substance of how he plans to do this?

1775

1780

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady is asking me to provide the substance of how the Government intends to mitigate, insofar as possible, the socio-economic impact of a no negotiated outcome (NNO). However, as she must surely understand, it would be to give those who may seek to gain leverage over us in the negotiations the ultimate lever should I reveal publicly in this House the measures we have taken and will continue to take to mitigate such an outcome.

As the hon. Member should already know, the Government has, for a number of years now, been working flat out in planning for an NNO. The NNO Board is led jointly by the Deputy Chief 1785 Minister and successive UK Ministers for Europe, now the Hon. Leo Docherty MP. It meets again this week – in fact, I think it met this morning.

The hon. Lady will have, undoubtedly, read our press release last month announcing the latest NNO Board meeting following a table-top exercise which was held at the end of November last year. This exercise proved to be extremely useful in highlighting areas of potential difficulties which may arise in the event of a no negotiated outcome and has reassured the Government of our preparedness, insofar as is absolutely possible, for such an outcome.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, if I can just take the supplementaries because of the two questions. Even though maybe the Chief Minister cannot share the information with us, can he confirm whether his Government has prepared a detailed forecast of the impact of a potential no deal?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, we have.

1800 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

We know about the table-top exercise, and obviously that is all positive and gratefully accepted, I think, by the people of Gibraltar, but does the Government intend to conduct any campaigns to inform the public of the impact of a potential no-deal Brexit in order to mobilise and create public awareness and expectations in the event of no deal, prior to such an event actually happening?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, we have already distributed a book to every house in Gibraltar, called 'Guidance to Citizens – No UK-EU Treaty on the Future Relationship of Gibraltar'. It has a preface signed by me and the Deputy Chief Minister. It extends to 36 pages and was distributed last year, I believe.

When I see what she has said today to El País, I am surprised that she is asking me the question. She says that what I am doing is educating and reminding people that there will be things on which we will have to bend down, and others on which we will not. The quote in Spanish is, 'Picardo Est^a educando, record^ándonos que habr^a cosas en las que tendremos que agacharnos y otras en las que no.' Well, Mr Speaker, I do not believe I am doing that. I do not believe I am trying to tell people in Gibraltar that we are going to have to bend over, because we are not going to bend over. We have already distributed a lot of the material to every household in Gibraltar without giving our opponents the levers they would need. I hope that our potential opponents become our partners, that we will be able to deliver an agreement and that she will join in agreeing that the negotiated outcome that we bring, if we bring it, is a good one for Gibraltar.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I am sorry to see that the Chief Minister has taken my words badly. I was actually trying to be complimentary to him by telling a journalist that our Chief Minister is trying to prepare us for an eventuality that might not be to our satisfaction. Having said that, obviously I could not comment on the substance, in terms of what I am trying to get today, in terms of how much information we can have and how much the Chief Minister himself can tell us on the eventuality.

One more supplementary. I do not know if he is willing to answer this, but as in other moments in Gibraltar's history where Gibraltar has received financial aid from the UK in difficult economic times, is the Gibraltar Government looking at receiving financial aid to see us through these potentially difficult times, as we have seen in the past, given the size of our indirect debt?

1835 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am not taking it badly at all. I just want her to understand that I do not agree with her words. In politics, the least we can say to each other is that we do not agree with our words. She is being quoted by a Spanish newspaper, the leading Spanish newspaper, on an issue like Gibraltar, where I decided not to give an interview to this newspaper for reasons that I think will be obvious, but she did, and she is being read in Madrid this morning as saying that my words in my New Year message in respect of the agreement – not the absence of agreement, her words are quoted in respect of the agreement – are that I am trying to prepare people so that they understand that we are going to have to bend. Agacharnos is translated by Google Translate, and probably by most of us, as ‘bend’. I want to be very clear to anybody who may be watching us from Madrid, who has read a Gibraltar MP’s view of what I said in my New Year message, that I was not preparing the people of Gibraltar to bend because I am not going to ask the people of Gibraltar to bend – it is clear – and so that is the issue I am taking with the hon. Lady.

1845 In terms of financial aid, we are already receiving commitments from the United Kingdom, which we have published, in respect of financial aid. For example, the United Kingdom has committed to provide the Government of Gibraltar with funding for the provision of e-gates down at the North Front Four Corners entry point into Gibraltar. That will be funded half by the Government of Gibraltar and half by the government of the United Kingdom. The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister referred to that, I believe, in this House during the course of the Budget debate at estimates time this year. There have been other such commitments and the Government of Gibraltar reserves the right to seek further financial assistance from the United Kingdom in the event of a no-negotiated outcome for a Brexit that we did not choose.

1855 Mr Speaker: Is the Chief Minister planning to recess for a short break? Before he does that, I believe –

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, can I just ask one more supplementary, please?

1860 Mr Speaker: Right.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, based on the answer that the Chief Minister has just given, can I establish that the Chief Minister will not support any agreement which might require some bending or concessions on our part?

1865 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I could not have been clearer in my New Year message. I said there was absolutely no question of us for one moment considering any concession in respect of British sovereignty, for rights of access to the European Union, for rights of flights etc. It is all there, clearly set out in my New Year message. I do not think I could have been clearer. I do not think we, together, could have been clearer in this House that that would not be acceptable to the people of Gibraltar.

1870 I have also said that I will only bring an agreement to this House if the Gibraltar Government has approved it, if the Cabinet has approved it, and there is no member of this Cabinet sitting to my left or sitting to my right who would approve an agreement that required us to bend on issues of sovereignty which are fundamental to us. I have expressed it as vehemently and as clearly as I could. In fact, I seem to recall that that part of my speech said no spin, no nuance. It could not be clearer, so I am surprised that she felt it could be interpreted in this way and that it could be communicated to the leading Spanish national newspaper as my having said that, because I think, with the very greatest of respect – and I am sure that she did not intend to do this – it does a disservice to the negotiating position of the Government of Gibraltar.

1880 Mr Speaker: There was one supplementary question which the Hon. Edwin Reyes wanted to ask in connection with Questions 111 and 112. (Interjection by Hon. K Azopardi) On this one, fine.

1885 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister answered, in relation to Question 112, that the Government has carried out an impact assessment on the economy. Is the Government willing to share that report confidentially with the Opposition?

1890 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, we are prepared to consider doing so. I would have to take advice on whether we should at this stage. The hon. Gentleman should know that that report is so sensitive it does not live electronically on our servers. We are, of course, very concerned about the opportunity for digital interference with information that we have. We have considered that information to be so sensitive that it has only been seen by a small number of the members of the Cabinet because we do not want to share it electronically. We have had a discussion about it in Cabinet, but it is extraordinarily sensitive. Even where we discuss it is sensitive, so we are careful even about where we talk about it.

Administrative posts in Government Departments –
Posts occupied on acting or temporary basis –
Supplementary question

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Edwin Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

1900 It is a small, pedantic thing, but in case one adds up all the posts that are being acted for, the Chief Minister, in the schedule referring to the answer to Question 111, if one looks six and seven lines from the bottom in respect of the Customs department, the post of Collector of Customs seems to be recorded twice as being acted for by Assistant Collector of Customs. It is either a typographical error or there are indeed two Assistant Collectors of Customs who are taking it in turns to act for the Collector of Customs. A clarification on that would help us to make sure we 1905 have the right total when we have the whole number of posts.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I think that post has now been filled. It was being acted for by somebody who was temporarily promoted and that person who was temporarily promoted was away on leave, I understand. That is why you see the numbers do not always tally, because 1910 there are different moments when you can have two people, in effect, acting in a post.

Mr Speaker: Is the Chief Minister going to ...?

1915 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the timetable published for today seeks to provide an element of accuracy and sets out that I would answer questions at three o'clock and the Hon. the Minister for Financial Stability would answer questions at six o'clock. Given the number of questions I had, I thought we would have been finished in good time to enjoy a convivial cup of tea. In fact, we have four minutes to enjoy a convivial cup of tea. But given that people will be watching now, I am quite happy – understanding that whilst the rest of us have been able to come 1920 in and out, you have not – to propose that we should adjourn for 15 minutes and that the Minister for Financial Stability should start answering questions at 6.15.

Mr Speaker: The House will now recess until 6.15.

The House recessed at 5.57 p.m. and resumed at 6.17 p.m.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What entity outside of the Civil Service's Statistics Department was engaged to carry out the 2022 Census, and at what cost to the taxpayer?

1930 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Social Security, Economic Development and Enterprise.

1935 Minister for Social Security, Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, to my knowledge, there has been no entity outside the Statistics Department engaged to carry out the Census.

1940 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I was under the impression that a company had been engaged to carry out this project, but in any case, can the Minister tell us when the results of the Census are expected to be published?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I am not sure that it follows from whether there was a company or not. I will find out the answer to that question, but it does not follow logically from whether there was a company or not.

1945 Mr Speaker: No, it does not.

Clerk: Question 61/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you.

1950 Mr Speaker, can the Government please provide the total gross debt, aggregate debt after application of the Sinking Fund to gross debt, cash reserves and net debt figures for public debt for the following date, being 1st December 2022?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Social Security, Economic Development and Enterprise.

Clerk: Question 62/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the balance on the General Sinking fund on the following date, being 1st December 2022?

Clerk: Question 63/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the total value of loan notes purchased by GSBA Ltd from Gibraltar Community Projects Ltd, including term and interest rate?

Clerk: Question 64/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Can the Government provide a copy of the loan notes and term sheets for the loan notes purchased by Gibraltar Community Projects Ltd from Community Supplies and Services Ltd?

1980

Clerk: Question 66/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Can the Government advise how does it expect Community Supplies and Services to be able to repay the three-year loan notes issued for the construction of the Rooke Nursing Home?

1985

Clerk: Question 67/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Can the Government advise how GSBA Ltd has used the £40 million borrowed from the Gibraltar Savings Bank for five years at a rate of 6%?

Clerk: Question 68/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Can the Government advise why Gibraltar Community Projects Ltd is lending money to Community Supplies and Services Ltd at 4% whereas the cost of borrowing from the Savings Bank by GSBA Ltd is 6%?

1995

Clerk: Question 69/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Can the Government advise who is the appointed auditor for each of the following companies: GSBA Ltd, Gibraltar Community Projects Ltd, Community Supplies and Services Ltd, Gibraltar Community Initiatives Ltd, Wonderworks Media Ltd?

Clerk: Question 70/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Can the Government advise if the total cost of the prefabricated modular units has been paid in advance of shipment?

Clerk: Question 75/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Can the Government advise if the prefabricated modular units that were shipped on the Great Faith are entirely for use on the Rooke Nursing Home site, and what is the expected configuration/use of units per floor?

Clerk: Question 76/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

2035

Hon. R M Clinton: Can the Government advise what warranties have been obtained and by whom in respect of the prefabricated modular units for defects and for what period?

2040

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Social Security, Economic Development and Enterprise.

2045

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the gross public debt, the aggregate debt after the application of the Sinking Fund to gross debt and the cash reserves and net debt figures were, on 1st December 2022: gross public debt, £872.7 million; aggregate debt, £845.3 million; cash reserves, £80.9 million; and net debt, £764.4 million.

The balance of the General Sinking Fund on 1st December 2022 stood at £27.4 million.

GSBA has not purchased any loan notes from Gibraltar Community Projects.

The Government will not provide copies of the documentation of government companies' commercial transactions.

The repayment of the loan notes by Community Supplies and Services will be from the cash it will have by the time the maturity dates of the loans are reached.

Of the £40 million raised by GSBA through the sale of loan notes to the Gibraltar Savings Bank, some has been invested in the purchase of real estate, some has been used to invest in loan notes from government companies and some is still in cash.

The cost of borrowing from the Savings Bank by GSBA is not linked to the arrangements between Gibraltar Community Projects Ltd and Community Supplies and Services Ltd.

The auditor of the two Government companies is PwC. The selection of an auditor by private companies is a matter for those companies.

Gibraltar Community Projects loan notes can be held by any government company.

No early redemption discretions in respect of Gibraltar Savings Bank debentures have been stopped.

I am informed that the vessel Great Faith has transported 226 prefabricated modular units.

The costs of the different stages of the elderly residential home at Rooke are a matter for the developer of the project.

The prefabricated modular units for the Rooke site have been paid for as agreed between the suppliers and the purchasers of the unit.

As far as the Government is aware, all the modular units are needed for the Rooke project, which is not intended to be a nursing home. The configuration in the layout of the modular units is a matter for the developer and the construction company and will become evident once the modules start being installed in a week's time.

The guarantees that may have been obtained by the developer in respect of the Rooke development is a matter that will have been agreed between the developer and the supplier on terms that are standard for this type of construction.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, you will appreciate that there are 15 questions in there and it may take me a little while to work my way through them.

If I may start perhaps with the easiest one, in respect of Question 62 it would appear the Sinking Fund has increased by £1 million compared to the Minister's answer from last month. I would be grateful if he would give me an indication of what that £1 million represents.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the £1 million is a result of the sale of government property to GSBA, which the legislation allows can be credited to the Sinking Fund rather than to the Consolidated Fund. It is something that I have initiated because, in the provision we make in the Consolidated Fund estimates for the year, since the interest rates are now higher than they were, there would be very little scope for adding to the Sinking Fund; so for the future movement of assets where the money is being placed in the Sinking Fund rather than in the Consolidated Fund, so that we are able to continue the Sinking Fund growth.

2090 Hon. R M Clinton: I am grateful to the Minister for that explanation. How do you distinguish which properties go into the Sinking Fund in terms of sale proceeds and which do not? Is it only those that GSBA is engaged in? How is that determination made? Or does the Minister have a target amount each year that he wants to put into the Sinking Fund?

2095 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: We are able to increase it by the amount that it has been increasing by in the past years, at least. At the moment, it can apply to any sale of government property. The law provides that the sales of government property can be provided to the Sinking Fund instead of the Consolidated Fund, and that is what I am doing at the moment.

2100 Hon. R M Clinton: So that I understand the Minister correctly, basically there is no set formula as to how this will happen – if I am incorrect, by all means correct me.

In terms of the property the GSBA purchased from the Government, would he be able to identify that for us?

2105 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: In this case, the property is the one that we are planning to use for the elderly people's flats, where initially – as I explained, I think, to the hon. Member previously – GSBA purchases the original lease and then grants a sublease to the construction entity or the developer of the site. It is a site in Laguna estate.

2110 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, in answer to Question 63, I believe the Minister answered no, in that GSBA Ltd has not purchased any loan notes from Community Projects Ltd, but if I my memory serves me well, I think in last month's session he indicated that Community Projects Ltd obtained its funding from GSBA Ltd, and I may have assumed incorrectly that he had been following the same formula as for Community Supplies and Services and was purchasing loan notes. So how is GSBA Ltd transferring money to Gibraltar Community Projects? Or rather, more simply, on what basis?

2120 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: GSBA buys the loan notes from other government companies and Community Projects buys loan notes from those companies that have the funding, but it does not do it directly. The origin of the money is GSBA.

Hon. R M Clinton: Sorry, Mr Speaker, I thought I had understood the structure last month, in that there was a relationship between GSBA Ltd and Gibraltar Community Projects Ltd. I thought that was a direct relationship. Obviously it would appear that that assumption is incorrect.

2125 If the money is originating in GSBA Ltd and GSBA Ltd is purchasing loan notes from another government entity, could the Minister fill in the gap for us in the missing link between GSBA Ltd and Gibraltar Community Projects Ltd?

2130 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: [Inaudible] the hon. Member thinks there is a missing link. The money that eventually is received by Gibraltar Community Projects has originated in GSBA, but it is not necessarily all the money that has been obtained from GSBA by another government company. If there is £x in loan notes that have been bought by GSBA from one or more companies, there could be the whole of that amount that has gone, eventually, into Gibraltar Community Projects, or less than that. But in any event, whatever the amount is, whether it is the same or less, the origin is GSBA because GSBA is the one that buys assets, which can be either real estate ... As I have already told him in answer to the other question, the money is either in real estate or in loan notes from other companies, or in cash.

2140 Hon. R M Clinton: Yes, I understand what the Minister is saying, but what I am trying to do is get a full picture of the structure. To simplify things rather than trying to ask a big question, I ask one simple question: from which government companies – I do not know if the Minister has the information available with him – is GSBA buying loan notes, and the amounts?

2145 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The hon. Member has asked me how the £40 million is used. The £40 million is used in either buying bonds from companies, buying land assets which then get resold or subleased, or is kept in cash for when it is needed to do either one or the other. I am not prepared to give him more information than that because that, in effect, gives the picture of what is happening, but it can be any company that we choose to use.

2150 Hon. R M Clinton: But, Mr Speaker, a loan note – forgive me for perhaps going back to 101 on finance – would be for a specific period of time at a specific interest rate with specific terms on it. The Minister has just clarified that the GSBA buys loan notes from government companies. I just want to know which government companies have been issuing the loan notes that the GSBA is buying. And then, of course, my question that will arise from that eventually is which one of these companies is lending money to Community Projects?

2155 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I have told him that there is no reason for one or the other specifically. There is a question and I have said GSBA is lending to companies, meaning any company we choose – all companies or one company, whatever we choose to do – and I have told him that Community Projects in turn can issue loan notes to any company. That is the mechanism. Which company it is and how much it is ... I am not prepared to give him more information on that.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, why on earth not?

2165 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The level of information that I have already given him far exceeds anything that has ever been given in this House to anybody else. I think at the end of the day what the hon. Member wants is to be the 11th Member of Government and be told every detail of everything we do from the time we get to the office in the morning until we clock out. (Interjection) He is not going to get it from me.

2170 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I think the Chief Minister might regret that offer, but ... (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister)

2175 With the greatest of respect to the Hon. Minister, what I am trying to do on this side of the House is not run Government, but just hold Government to account. That is my job, as I am sure he recognised in the past when he called me a one-man public accounts committee. All I am trying to understand is the mechanism and all the various links in this mechanism.

2180 I have a question later on saying if Community Supplies and Services is borrowing at 4% and GSBA's cost of funding is 6%, where is the difference coming from? That is just not financially sensible, so what I am trying to understand is if GSBA is borrowing at 6% and it is issuing loan notes to someone ... If they are actually lending money to some government company, can he at least tell me at what rate they are lending? Is he going to tell me it just depends on the day? Surely he will have to tell me that if GSBA is borrowing at 6% for five years, it must be lending at more than 6%, otherwise GSBA is making a loss or getting money from somewhere else. This is what I am trying to understand. I am trying to understand how this mechanism works, because it is not clear to me.

2185 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: In the answer to the other question he has referred to I have told him there is no connection between the two. GSBA does not borrow three-year money at 6%. He is saying if they borrow 10-year money at 6%, why do they lend three-year money at 4%? Well, because the rate that the Savings Bank pays on three-year money is 3%, so that is the cost of the 2190 money. But there is no link. There is a logic to the length of the repayment period and the interest rate, and if a company has recourse to the resources of the Savings Bank for investing in a development that is not going to take 10 years, why should they borrow 10-year money?

2195 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, the Hon. Minister knows perfectly well that if the funding costs are 6%, it does not matter what period it is, you have to make more than 6%; otherwise you will de facto make a loss. All I am trying to understand are all the various links in the chain – which he does not seem to want to tell me – as to how this money is eventually spent.

2200 He has already said in this House that Community Supplies and Services gets its money from Community Projects, which gets its money, we now know, ultimately from GSBA, which we know is a subsidiary of the Savings Bank, which we know has borrowed £40 million from the Savings Bank. All I am trying to understand is exactly how all this flows down the chain. That is the simple question.

2205 What the Minister does not seem to be willing to tell me is that element of the chain between GSBA and Community Projects. That is the element I am trying to link up and I cannot understand why the Minister is so reluctant to give me that piece of information. If he tells me, 'I have Gibraltar Government company X that has bought today' – he could argue that I have not given him a point in time, but you could choose a point in time – '£10 million of loan notes that they have issued to GSBA for a period of three years and they are paying x% per cent, and then they, in turn, are issuing loan notes to Community Supplies and Services for £x, or Community Projects,' and carry on down that ... I can understand the flow. That is all I am after.

2210 If he does not want to tell me now, I will ask specific questions of the links and then he can perhaps give me the answer then, but it would be a waste of this House's time if I have to come back and ask the same question.

2215 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The question that the hon. Member puts ... The answer that I get leads to a whole range of other questions. It does not matter how much I give him, he has an insatiable appetite and therefore there is a point at which I am not prepared to give him more information beyond what I have given him.

2220 The money is in the Savings Bank. The money from the Savings Bank is invested in bonds or loan notes issued by GSBA. GSBA, in turn, issues loan notes to a number of other companies and one or more of those companies issues loan notes to Gibraltar Community Projects. That is not enough. He wants to know the date, the time, the amount, the rate. Well, he is not going to get any more detail. That is all I am telling him, okay?

2225 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, Gibraltar Community Projects Ltd is ultimately owned by the Gibraltar Development Corporation. The Minister can confirm that or not by one entity and then another entity above it, and ultimately it is the GDC. It is a government company. Is the Minister telling me that he would refuse to answer a question in this House as to what loan notes Gibraltar Community Projects has issued and to whom?

2230 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: To whom – presumably so that people outside think we are giving money to outsiders. He knows to whom: ultimately, to building homes for our people; ultimately, to building a stadium for Gibraltar; ultimately, that is where the money is finishing up. But that is not enough for him. He needs to have a trail through the jungle – to get to where? To see if there is something that he can criticise the Government for. Well, criticise me for not providing the answer; it is faster.

2235 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, with your indulgence, because I really did not want to get into this type of argument, but he has just described his own structure as a jungle, and that is what it has become: it has become a jungle. So basically I have a ... I am going to use this word, which he will not like. We have a black hole between GSBA and Community Projects, and he is not willing to tell me what the link is. Is that his position?

2245 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The position is that I am prepared to give a level of information, and beyond that I am not prepared ... The hon. Member has been asking since this arrived, and continues asking in every meeting, where every account is in the Government, in every company, and we tell him we do not ... And it does not happen anywhere. He knows where the Government starts with the money and he knows where the Government finishes. That is not enough. He has to be able to go through a trail to understand every bit. Well, look, understanding every bit is 2250 something you need to do when you are in Government. In Opposition you are entitled to know how it is we are funding things, and we have told you how we are funding things. Why we put it in one company or another is not asking for information, it is asking for you to be given an explanation of how the Government proposes to do things in the way they think it is necessary or efficient to do it. We have this position again and again. He does not seem to know where to draw 2255 the line.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I accept that the Minister is not willing to give me any more information. I must say I am disappointed at the Minister because he normally is very helpful in this House in providing information. If that is his position, so be it, but I do not think it is a fair 2260 position to adopt and I will make it clear in due course, when the time arises.

If I can move on to other – (Interjection by Hon. K Azopardi) Yes, certainly. Can I give way to ...?

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, before my hon. colleague moves on, can I just ask the Hon. Minister ...? He has used this phrase ... Why does it have to be a jungle? As he has described it, the 2265 money is going from the Savings Bank to companies, maybe different companies, then ultimately it may go through a trail – through the jungle, as he says – then ends up in community projects. Why does it have to be a jungle? What is the rationale of it being so complicated?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, what I described as a jungle is the situation in which the hon.
2270 Member finds himself. I am not in the jungle. I know exactly where the things are. They may be in the jungle, but I am not. He is behaving as if he was in a jungle and he wants me to take him by the hand and lead him through the jungle. Well, look, that is not my job and I do not think he is entitled to do that.

The hon. Member knows that the previous Government wisely invented a cash pool where all 2275 the companies that were in surplus were netted against all the companies that were in deficit. That is something that is still there. This, we are doing as an alternative to the cash pool so that there is greater tracking of the money than there was before. I am doing it only because the money that moves from GSBA into another company is ultimately finishing outside the Government, albeit on projects that the Government is sponsoring as part of the National Economic Plan and 2280 where the Government knows exactly where it is going because the actual deliverer of the construction is a government joint venture.

Hon. K Azopardi: I am not sure, with respect, that the hon. Member has answered the 2285 question. Apart from explaining that it is not a jungle to him ... I am trying to understand why. Is there an economic case for it being a complex structure from company to company? What is the reason? Why can't it just go from the Savings Bank to Community Projects? Why do there have to be interposed companies? What is the reason for that?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Very simple: the money that goes initially from GSBA to another company 2290 may be used by the other company for another purpose relevant to the company's activities other than community projects. It is not that there has to be a matching. When I told the hon. Member where the money came from, it was because the money will be coming ultimately from the

2295 Savings Bank through GSBA, then it passes from GSBA to different companies that want to use money by raising loan notes from GSBA, and then some of those companies can, if they want ... or if we think that a particular company in a particular location has more liquidity than another one, then we use the one that has more liquidity, depending on the point in time when the money is needed. The money that goes into Gibraltar Community Projects goes as a ... basically demand driven by the progress of projects, not for any other reason. The money that may be sitting in one company or another ultimately does not make any difference because it is the same as the cash 2300 pool – except that it is not the cash pool, it is identified.

Hon. K Azopardi: And for me to be clear, who is making these decisions? When a company takes the money, then moves it to Community Projects indirectly, having received it from the Savings Bank, GSBA or whatever, who is making these decisions on the movements of the 2305 moneys? Is the Minister ultimately taking these decisions?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: By the need that the company may have in the activities of the company.
All the companies have directors and the Treasury is responsible for all the movements.

2310 Hon. K Azopardi: The Government is making the decisions?

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I at least take some comfort from the fact that the Minister has said that he is tracking this money more closely than perhaps he would other money that is in the cash pool, and that it is obviously all trackable through these loan notes which he has described 2315 already.

Going to Question 64, in which I asked for a copy of the loan notes – and I guess this would also cover Question 65 – I think his answer was that he would not provide copies of these loan notes. I do not know why, because they cannot possibly be commercially sensitive since most of this is intragovernmental or intragovernmental company borrowing, but can he tell me who drafts 2320 these loan notes? Is there a law firm involved in drafting them?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: To my knowledge, I am not paying anybody outside to draft loan notes.
To my knowledge, it is just drafted internally. I do not know what complexity a note that is basically an IOU between one government-owned company and another government-owned company 2325 needs in drafting, but as far as I am aware, we do not pay anybody outside the Government to draft anything for this.

Hon. R M Clinton: So is the Minister effectively saying that these loan notes are drafted internally by Treasury?
2330

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, I do not know how they governed, but when we are in government I do not say I want the name of the person who was drafting this or the person who was drafting that. We have processes that happen, thousands of processes, while you are in government, and there are people working, doing things, and I am sure that if we spent the level 2335 of time in monitoring every movement of every civil servant like the hon. Member seems to want me to do, then the system would take even longer to deliver anything.

The answer is things have to be done, they get done. I do not ask who has done it or how have they done it. These people are employed to deliver something and they do it, the same people who would have drafted a loan note before. What I can tell him is that we have not gone outside 2340 the Government to pay for somebody externally to draft a loan note, because if that had happened I would know that there was a cost.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if I can move on to Question 66, which is in relation to how Community Supplies and Services is going to be able to repay the three-year loan note, I think, if I 2345 recall, his answer was cash it will have on maturity of the loan note. Can the Minister give us an idea of how he expects Community Supplies and Services to actually have the cash to pay in redemption?

2350 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Community Supplies and Services is not giving the money away, it is investing it in assets which will ultimately be owned by people who want to invest in them, all of which I have explained to the hon. Member before. Ultimately, it does not mean, necessarily, that we are going to have to wait three years, because we would not put Community Supplies and 2355 Services in the position that they had to keep on paying interest if the money was no longer required. The three-year term is because we do not expect projects to take that much longer. The construction projects, in the main, are things that should take less than three years, and therefore three years is the maximum, but if the project is completed before and there is a transaction that they receive money before, then they will probably come back and say, 'We want an early repayment, to stop having to pay interest.' But ultimately what they will have, I have no doubt, is the cash to pay if that does not happen.

2360 Hon. R M Clinton: The Minister talked about investors once the project is completed. So just to be clear, is it the Minister's plan basically that the entire site would be sold as a single unit to an investor or group of investors? Is that what the plan is, to realise the asset, as he describes it, in order to repay the loan notes? Is that the overall thinking?

2365 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The Rooke will be sold as one, yes, but obviously in Laguna it will be individuals buying the apartments, and the cash will come back very quickly because the people who are expressing an interest are already property owners who will sell for more than they are going to be buying.

2370 Hon. R M Clinton: Again, I apologise to you, Mr Speaker, because this is a complex process of understanding.

We anticipate that within three years we will have an asset that is saleable to an investor or group of investors. I just have two questions. One, which I do not think I have had the answer to, 2375 or may not have asked as part of the questions I have asked before, is what is the actual maturity date of that three-year loan note? And does he have an investor or group of investors that have already expressed an interest in purchasing the Rooke site as a whole?

2380 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: To the second question, I have more than one.

The loan notes are not issued all at once. They draw on the loan notes as they need to pay for the ongoing work, so the loan notes are three years from the drawdown, not three years from a specific date.

2385 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, the Minister has indicated that he may have two potential purchasers for the site as a whole. What is it that the investors would be buying? I know the architect's plan described it originally as a nursing home, and in his answer today he has said no, it is not a nursing home, so what would he call it and what is it that the investors would be getting in terms of an income or yield on the project?

2390 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The only thing that investors in property get is rent from the users of the property. I do not know of anything else that is done with property other than that.

2395 Hon. R M Clinton: And finally on this particular question, Mr Speaker, does the Minister envisage having some kind of option agreement built into whatever arrangement he comes to with the investors in order to buy the facility at some future point in time?

2400 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I have no preconceived ideas. I am willing to listen to the people who are interested in buying and if I think what they are prepared to offer and the terms that they want are beneficial, then I will consider it; and if not, not. But at the end of the day, the importance is that the Rooke Home is going to be used for people who are on the waiting list for going to Mount Alvernia, and consequently what we are looking at is the ultimate cost to the Government of the facility. Clearly my involvement is in making sure that the cost to us, as potential users, is not excessive. I expect it to be less than we are paying now.

2405 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, following on from what the Minister has just said, it is not a nursing home, it is an old people's home – that would be the correct description of it? And is it the intention, as part of this project, for the Government to effectively guarantee a block leasing of units in the building, or will it be a mixture of external people that the Government will not provide accommodation to and they are doing it off their own bat, and a chunk of the building 2410 may be leased by the Government to make provision for our own community?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: At this point, what I am thinking is the cost per bed. So we would take the number of beds we need. What we have is priority. If we have the demand to take everything, then there will not be anything available to anybody else because at the end of the day it depends 2415 on, once the thing is finished and people see it, how many people want to go there.

The hon. Member must understand that everything we are doing ... He is asking questions all about what will happen in the future, and what will happen in the future is not one single path with one single option. It depends on the people we are dealing with, it depends on the money they put in, it depends on how many people want to be there.

Hon. R M Clinton: And just a quick question on the building itself in this respect. These are all one bedroom, bathroom ...? What is the internal configuration, just so I understand, when it comes to the investors, what it is they are buying?

2425 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I have not been able to see yet the finished product, but my understanding is that the rooms are big enough to be double rooms or single rooms. They are all the same size, but I think one floor could be for married couples and the rest for single people. It has a kitchen on every floor and a dining area, and a bigger kitchen and a restaurant at the top, and there is a shower and all the accessories you need for people with disabilities in these rooms. And each one 2430 has a balcony.

Hon. R M Clinton: So just by way of comparison, this is the layout of the standard Calpe House type room, where you have an ensuite bathroom/toilet and a main room which may have some other facilities, but that is about it – the bed and ensuite. Is that correct?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Not quite, because Calpe House was something that we bought where the structure was there already and we adapted it. This has been designed for this purpose. It has been designed as a place that is going to be a home for people with disabilities because of their age, who are incapable of keeping themselves in their own homes. In some cases, the Government 2440 is having to provide quite a lot of support in their houses. Gibraltar, like everyone else in Europe, is facing an increasing ratio of people with dementia. The people on the waiting list ... There are something like 68 who are between 95 and 100. There are a lot of us living a long time, as I intend to do, so eventually there will be a place for me in the home as well, but not just yet!

2445 Hon. R M Clinton: So the waiting list we are talking about is the waiting list for Mount Alvernia – is that right?

2450 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, it will relieve the pressure on Mount Alvernia and the pressure on the GHA, which has a ward with people who really cannot be discharged to go back to their homes and cannot be discharged because Mount Alvernia has not got, at the moment, the capacity to take them.

2455 Hon. R M Clinton: And what, in real terms, is the difference between Mount Alvernia, which I always thought was a nursing home, and Rooke? What would be the difference in facilities? Or is it just a question of what label we put on it, but effectively people will get the same service?

2460 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mount Alvernia did not start as a nursing home, it started as a residential facility for elderly people, but I think as people have got older ... The movement of people in and out of Mount Alvernia in the old days, when people did not live so long, was much quicker. Now what happens is that people actually age in Mount Alvernia and really they get to the stage where they need medical treatment, and therefore in Mount Alvernia we have a level of medical treatment that is not too distant from what a hospital is.

2465 This is not what this is going to do. This is not going to be replacing the responsibilities of the GHA to provide medical treatment, so I am investigating whether ... Once it is finished, I am getting somebody from the UK to come out and advise me – free of charge, from a company that is a close friend of ours and has 25 homes in the UK – whether the layout and the facilities we have here would be suitable for having, say, one floor for dementia if we found that we were having problems in adequately fitting the number of cases we have in the facilities we have.

2470 At the end of the day, we need to be clear about one thing: this is only the beginning of what we need to do. The reality of it is that we can expect to have ever-increasing numbers of people over the age of 70 in Gibraltar, as in every other developed country in Europe, and sooner or later, however fit they may be, they will get to a point where they really cannot cope on their own – and that is what this is intended to be.

2475 Mr Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

2480 Hon. K Azopardi: Can I ask on this issue, before my hon. colleague moves on again ...? I had understood, actually, that in due course, once this is built, everyone in Mount Alvernia will be offered a transfer to this new facility, but of course, what would make it attractive is not only that this is a new-build in the centre of town – I suppose that would be a plus – but that in practice it would offer all the services that Mount Alvernia is offering to the current residents, including whatever access to nursing care they have. Is the hon. Member, in effect, saying it is not going to be like that? And if that is the case, well then does he not agree that it will, therefore, impact on people's attitudes to a transfer?

2485 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: It was there for many years without being structured the way it is now, and giving very good service to people. At the end of the day, having two or three doctors in Mount Alvernia, where there are 140 people, is a ratio of doctors to patients which does not exist anywhere in the world. This place is very near the Hospital and it will have a room as a clinic for doctors to see patients, so that they do not have to leave the building. It is certainly a better location than the location of Mount Alvernia.

2490 What we are doing is trying to meet need in a way that will be possible for us to finance the cost of the individuals, effectively. We believe that because the size is bigger and there are economies of scale, this will be the case. The need is there and it has to be met – we cannot escape it – but not everybody is in need of permanent nursing care 24 hours a day. That is not what this is going to be providing. This is not a nursing home, it is a residential home. The residential home is a stage in the process. What we have had in Mount Alvernia is a mixture, with people at different stages, and the people at the stage where they need most medical attention are there simply 2500 because they have been there for a very long time, not because they went in like that. That is the difference.

Hon. K Azopardi: I understand that, but I have seen a slight transition. The hon. Member first explained how people will be approached, as they will be made an offer, but then I was also taken by a phrase that he was reported to have said to the Chronicle, that the new residential place will eventually replace Mount Alvernia. I am not sure if that is an accurate quote, but if it was accurate I am not sure I understand how you are going to get there, because however many people there are at Mount Alvernia right now, there will be some who do require certain nursing care because they are older. It is fine, Mount Alvernia has changed and all of that throughout the decades, but the reality is that those people will not be attracted to be transferred to somewhere where they are not going to get that more immediate, permanent staffing assistance that they have at Mount Alvernia.

2515 And the other issue arises, I would have assumed – again, maybe I am making the wrong assumption because it is not in the plans of the Government, in their thinking, but I would have assumed that the attraction of a transfer would then also impact on staffing issues at Mount Alvernia, and then maybe some of those people would go into new employment at the new home. But again, that may not be something that the Government is thinking about.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: It is all speculative and in the future, but we may well find that we need to increase the capacity for people with dementia. That is a possibility and we may have to do a new centre. But certainly the Mount Alvernia building is increasingly unfit for purpose and would cost more money to put right than a new building would cost.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I move on now to Question 69. I think, if I heard the Minister correctly, he said the auditor for the government companies is PwC, and I would identify those – and if I am wrong, the Minister, I am sure, will correct me – as GSBA Ltd and Gibraltar Community Projects Ltd. If the other three entities, which I think he said was a matter for the companies and the directors ... Given that these are effectively the building blocks for his National Economic Plan, would he obviously not have an interest that they are audited and would he not know, or at least can he tell us if he knows, whether there is an auditor appointed? And presumably he must know who they are.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, if I was interested, it still would not be my responsibility to say who they are to him or anybody else. I am not answerable for whether they have or they have not, or who they choose or do not choose. But in any event, my understanding is that you do not need an auditor if your profits are under £1.25 million. These people are a long way from that figure, so I do not know what he thinks ...

2540 We are in the process of starting something and the hon. Member puts questions that may be relevant sometime in the future – not when something has been going for two weeks, I would have thought.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I would have thought the Hon. Minister was hoping for more than £1 million profit in the short term from these entities.

2550 The problem is that we are dealing with this chameleon-type entity where it is obviously in the National Economic Plan and we all know it is in the National Economic Plan, but then anything to do with the actual mechanics, the nuts and bolts, the mechanism, whatever – no, it is nothing to do with the Government. The dilemma we have on this side of the House is that the Minister has created the structure under a registered charity and then disclaims any responsibility for it. He cannot have it both ways, Mr Speaker. Either it is in his National Economic Plan, for which he has full responsibility, including the structure, or it is not.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I can have it both ways, Mr Speaker. If I have an obligation to produce more housing for elderly people, which the National Economic Plan does, I do it in the way that is most effective, given my other responsibility for restoring financial stability, which I think is a very reasonable thing to do.

2555 If we did what they did, for example, when they were in government and they got an outside person to run the £1.2 billion programme that there was in 2010, because of its expertise and because in the private sector people charge the Government more than they charge private entities, then it would never have occurred to us to want to know every single transaction between the Government and that individual. And we never did. We accepted the rationale of the policy of the Government, and that is it. That is what they did. They did things how they thought was the best way to do them, and I am doing things in the best way to do them. Clearly, if we had not found ourselves with the results of COVID and the results of the drop in revenue that has come after COVID, we might have done it differently, and probably finished up spending more money given the position of the previous administration – which is probably true – than ... If the Government is the client, the money goes up, the cost goes up. We found a way, that I have devised, which ensures that I am able to deliver the goods by outsourcing the work, which is not something new because every time the Government builds an estate ... There are lots of companies involved in building an estate, but there is no question of when did you pay them, what did you pay them, how many invoices, how many people do they employ? It does not work like that.

2570 We have a responsibility to try to deliver what we set out to do, two years late. We are doing it in the way we think is most beneficial for Gibraltar because we think it will minimise the direct cost to the Government. We are confident – I am confident – that the results will justify the way we are doing it, and I think when the Members opposite see the results they will have to agree that it is.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I just want to finish off on this particular question as to auditors. Can the Minister at least confirm to the House that he expects auditors to be appointed for any entity within his National Economic Plan?

2580 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: No, Mr Speaker, I cannot say that because I have just told him ... These companies are charities, and the charities that are going to be involved ... Gibraltar Community Initiatives is there because we had a need to do something and there was no other way of doing it with the Government and no other way of doing it with the private sector. Then we found a new vehicle to do it, and that new vehicle will comply with whatever the laws of Gibraltar require – not because I tell them, but because they have a legal obligation to do it. So if they have to have an auditor, I am sure they will have an auditor. Why on earth should they not want to have an auditor if they need to have one? Why should I expect them to have one? Well, I am not qualified to decide that if their turnover is a couple of thousand pounds a year, they have to have an auditor. My understanding is that there is a threshold, which in fact the professionals in audit have asked the Government to raise, so that there is less work for the auditors with very small companies. At the moment, they are very small. How much bigger they will get I do not know, but I do not expect them to become multinationals.

2595 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if I can just finish off on this, at the end of the day it is a creature of his creation which we will credit him for having created, but it is his creation and whether it has an audit or not it is not a question of simply complying with the law. At the end of the day, he can determine and the companies can determine the whole structure. He can design it. He is the designer, the creator of this structure. He can say 'I want an auditor' tomorrow. He does not have to wait for the legal threshold to be triggered.

2600 I would have thought, given that he is responsible for the Savings Bank and given that all the Savings Bank money is flowing through this entity, he would want to have at least that assurance, even at the very beginning, that everything is as it should be, because at the end of the day it is not his money. The money belongs to the savers of the Savings Bank and therefore I think it is entirely reasonable that he would be extra cautious, as he has already demonstrated he is trying to be by tracking every penny all the way down the chain. And yet when it comes to the appointment of auditors, he just says, 'Nothing to do with me, it is up to the companies.'

That is the only point I want to make, Mr Speaker, and if he does want to accept that point, I will leave it there and move to the next question.

2610

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: It is not that it has nothing to do with me, it is that if I decided to do it, I would not have to tell him because it is nothing to do with him. That is the point. He cannot say to me that I have to give information about what I do or do not do in relation to what I say to a private entity, because he is asking me questions in this House about things that are in the public sector, and these are people who are contractors.

2615

Maybe if he had been advising the previous Government they would not have found themselves losing lots of money with lots of companies that disappeared over the horizon. These people are not going to disappear over the horizon. They are here and they are doing something as a commitment to Gibraltar. These are not people who are lining their pockets. The situation is if they feel there is a need or I feel there is a need at any point in time that they should have an auditor, then I will consider discussing it with them, but I am not going to say to them, 'You must have an auditor', just so that some auditor gets more money and the thing cost us more money. No way.

2620

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if I can move on then – I am obviously flogging a dead horse on that one. I think we have had an answer to Question 70 already. On Question 71, about the early redemption discretions, whether there have been any changes in government Savings Bank debentures, I think the answer was a simple no. Can the Minister confirm that those discretions – as I recall them, and my memory could be faulty and have to be corrected ... I think it is at the discretion of the Financial Secretary, the purchase of a government affordable 50-50 or perhaps the death of the holder of the debenture, in which they nominate somebody to receive the money. Those are the three conditions that still exist for the breakage of a debenture, which is of a term, yes?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Those are the three conditions that are standard, and of course somebody may come with a particular calamity that has affected them, which is not covered by those three, and then it is at the discretion of the Financial Secretary whether he says yes or no.

2635

Hon. R M Clinton: And just to confirm that if that discretion is exercised – apart, perhaps, from death or even the purchase of government property – there will be some sort of a penalty applied.

2640

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: If there is a penalty, depending on the nature of the ... I think it is possible ... For example, in the most recent debentures that were issued for pensioners, we actually allowed up to 25% to be withdrawn without penalty, so the person can withdraw 25% over the 10 years, and if he does not draw anything down in the first year he accumulates the percentage. So there, there is no involvement of the discretion. If somebody has done that, in that particular issue, normally there would not be a discretion to withdraw even more than that, because there is already a facility there.

2645

Hon. R M Clinton: And the new pension debentures, do they still have that 25% withdrawal facility in them?

2650

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: As far I am aware, there has been no change in that either, but it is limited to the 10-year debenture for pensioners.

2655 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I move on to Question 72. I believe the Minister said there were 226 units shipped to Gibraltar on the Great Faith. If I can combine this with Question 75, in terms of the use of the units and configuration, I was not quite clear as to whether they were all for the Rooke site. And in terms of the configuration, I think he said it was a matter for the developer, but if we were to take ... I think there are eight floors, maybe nine floors, but if there are eight floors, 2660 with 226 units that is 28 units a floor. Can the Minister enlighten me in any way as to what he thinks the layouts or the usage of these units will be? First of all, I guess the simple question is are all these 226 units going to be used at Rooke; and, if so, how many units per floor?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, I do not have the information and I do not intend to ask them 2665 for the information, but I will invite the hon. Member to come to the Rooke and count them for himself when they are all there.

Hon. R M Clinton: Yes, I have had a look, but I shall wait.

In terms of Questions 73 and 74, the Minister, I think, replied, in terms of the costs, that it is a 2670 matter for the developer, and to whether they have been paid in advance I think the Minister said
'paid for as agreed'. If I take the last question first, 'paid for as agreed', we know Community Supplies and Services has issued loan notes of about £22 million. What I am trying to establish is whether that £22 million will cover the cost of purchase of the modular units.

2675 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: This is a level of detail that the hon. Member wants me to obtain from a private entity that is delivering something which, at the end, is going to be bought by a private investor where the Government is going to be the user of some or all of the units. I do not go asking them these questions, and I do not think he is entitled to expect me to ask them.

2680 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, with the greatest respect to the Minister, this is his National Economic Plan. I expect him to know every aspect of the project, including how many nuts and bolts have been used, because at the end of the day it all boils down to the cost on the bottom line. The fixtures and fittings, which I have not asked about, is probably something that the Minister has been intimately involved in because it all goes down to the final cost, which all goes 2685 down to the viability of the project and the cost to the Government as the ultimate user. I would have expected that at least he would have a little bit more visibility as to costs because that is what drives the economic viability of this kind of project and his ability to recover the money that the Savings Bank has put into this project in that obviously he wants to recover the money from potential investors.

2690 He keeps on saying it is a private entity on which I cannot ask questions, but it is his National Economic Plan and again I come back to the same conundrum, where it is in the National Economic Plan but I cannot ask questions about it. Does the Minister understand my frustration here?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, I do not want to forsake him – I am very fond of him – but he needs 2695 to understand that the Governments of Gibraltar over the years have used private contractors for lots of things, and the level of information that the hon. Member is seeking about the behaviour of those contractors has never been asked before. Nobody has asked how much did the foundations cost in Hassan Terraces and how much does a window cost and what is the layout of the room. You have a contractor, the contractor is given a brief and the brief is to deliver 2700 something. I am not the project manager of the operation. At the end of the day, it is something that is happening on the basis that I know what we want to finish up with, we are doing it in a way which I think is the most cost-effective way to do it, and we are doing it with entities that are not from outside of here. We are doing it with a joint venture, a construction company, and with people who are local people. These are not people who are going to disappear over the horizon, 2705 as has happened in the previous projects of the Government of Gibraltar in the last administration,

of every contract had been examined, that might not have happened, but then, unfortunately, he was not in that Government to do it.

2710 What he needs to understand is that the level of lack of confidence in the people who are there and the level to keep an eye on them is not heightened by what I am doing, it is lessened by what I am doing because we are not dealing with people who put in a contract price and then, as often happens in the construction industry, you are shown the specimen room the first time ... I remember many years ago when I was working in the construction industry, when I came back in 1972, in Varyl Begg, when the government contract surveyor came along to see how the walls 2715 were plastered they were plastered with gypsum, which was quite expensive, and then when he went, the rest of the rooms were plastered with something else, which cost much less money. That happens in the industry, so even if you examine one room, they will fiddle you on the rest and there is nothing you can do about it because when it is all painted and finished, it all looks the same.

2720 Can that kind of thing be prevented? No. Is this kind of thing likely to happen with this? I think less so than with dealing with strangers, less so than with dealing with people from outside who are here today and gone tomorrow. So, if his concern is about the quality and the cost of the thing, then all I have to say to him is I am confident that he will find, when it is done, that the concern was unnecessary. If I accept that all he is expressing is concern, then I can tell him I am confident 2725 that the concern is not required, that the degree of control that he says there should be is not required, and I am confident that I can demonstrate that to him. And these things are going to be finished by the summer, by the way, not in 20 years' time.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to hear that the Minister is so confident.

2730 I am moving on to the last question now, Question 76, in which I asked about the warranties and by whom, in terms of defects, and for what period. I believe the Minister said that guarantees would be agreed between the developer and supplier in some standard terms on this type of construction, or words to that effect.

2735 In the Minister's last contribution, he talked about nobody disappearing over the horizon, but he may have seen an article that appeared in Construction News in August 2021 where I think, according to the article, one of the entities within the group – I think it is China International Marine Containers, and I think that is the name that is plastered on the side of the containers that we see here in Gibraltar – ran into some alleged defects at hotels in England, and they subsequently, for whatever reason, decided to put the UK entity into liquidation. So I have a real 2740 concern about defects. They obviously had problems in the UK with defects, or allegedly problems with defects. I think one particular complaint was settled, or they offered a settlement at £1.1 million. This is why I am asking about warranties on this project.

2745 It is a big project. It is costing, we know, at least £22 million. I would have thought that the Minister would have some kind of feel or some sort of idea of what kind of warranties ... because bear in mind that if he tries to sell this on to external investors, they will want the benefit of those warranties, especially since we are talking about modular construction. I am no expert on this particular methodology, but obviously it is all steel framed. How on earth do you maintain these units? What happens if unit number 10 in the middle of the structure suddenly develops a defect? How do you remedy that? And to what extent is the supplier of the module responsible? Or is it 2750 the person who assembles it on site? Or is it GBIC? Or is it somebody else? I would like to know, first of all, are there any warranties that the Minister is aware of that the supplier of the modules has given the developer?

2755 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I know that there have been UK personnel in the factory supervising the whole process, that every single joint and every single thing has double signatures, that it meets ISO things, that the guy involved has actually travelled with the units here to Gibraltar and is here supervising it and that the workers engaged in the erection are from the UK, a Manchester company, UK people who have been doing this in the UK. The assurances that I have been given I

2760 believe. I think they want the business and they want the relationship with us. They have gone, I think, to whatever lengths they need to, to give us comfort that they have been looking very carefully at everything. Apart from that, if there are pieces of paper in the contracts between them
I do not know, but I know that we have been insisting from the beginning that it had to be UK 2765 standard and that even if it cost more we would not accept anything less and the UK had to guarantee that. Frankly, the advantage that we have is the relationship with the company in China, which has used its senior people to make sure ... The only problem, sometimes, with bringing things from Asia is that what you see when you go to buy it may not be what they put in the container, but they are not likely to do something like that if, in fact, their partner company is our partner as well, and therefore it is an in-house relationship which, the way it has been explained to me by the guy here who did it all, has been very thorough, checking almost everything.

2770 Hon. R M Clinton: This is my final supplementary, unless the Leader of the Opposition has anything, or anybody else wishes to ask anything.

In conclusion, I understand what the Minister is saying in terms of the efforts he has made to ensure that the product he receives here is a product that he desires, but can he tell the House 2775 one way or another is he aware or does he have no knowledge of whether any warranties have actually been obtained in the legal sense? Is that in his knowledge, or not?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I do not know.

2780 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q77-80/2023

Disability Benefit applications and appeals – Numbers determined since 1st July 2022; numbers outstanding; numbers successful and unsuccessful

Q81/2023

Vacancies in government-owned companies –
Number at 22nd December 2022

Clerk: Question 77/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

2785 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, how many applications for Disability Benefit or appeals from the refusal to provide Disability Benefit have been determined since 1st July 2022?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Social Security, Economic Development and Enterprise.

2790 Minister for Social Security, Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 78 to 81.

Clerk: Question 78/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

2795 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, how many applications for Disability Benefit remain outstanding for (a) less than a year, (b) more than one, two or three years?

Clerk: Question 79/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

2800 Hon. D A Feetham: How many appeals against a decision to refuse Disability Benefit remain outstanding for less than one year, and how many remain outstanding for one, two or three years?

Clerk: Question 80/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

2805 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, of those applications for Disability Benefit or appeals against a refusal to provide Disability Benefit that have been determined since 1st July 2022, how many have been successful and how many have been unsuccessful?

Clerk: Question 81/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

2810 Hon. D A Feetham: Following on from the answer to supplementary questions to Question 560/2022, can the Government now state how many jobs or positions within government-owned companies are vacant as at 22nd December 2022?

2815 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Social Security, Economic Development and Enterprise.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, since 1st July 2022 to date, 28 cases have been determined for Disability Benefit; of these, 16 were approved and 12 disallowed.

2820 Ninety eight applications for Disability Benefit remain outstanding; of these, 71 cases are less than one year and 27 cases are up to two years.

To date, 12 applications for Disability Benefit which were not approved and requested to be reconsidered, remain pending; of these, four cases are less than one year, six cases are for one year, one case is for two years and one case for three years.

2825 On the date mentioned in the question, there were no vacancies within government-owned companies.

2830 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I will have to take this in stages. In answer to Question 77 – I thought it was Question 77; certainly the first part of the answer was Question 77 – he said that 28 cases have been determined since 1st July 2022, 16 approved and 12 disallowed. That is a combination of answer to Question 77 and answer to Question 80. But can he tell me, of the 16 that were approved and the 12 that were disallowed, how many were first applications for Disability Benefit and how many were appeals? The hon. Gentleman will see that Question 80 splits it down between applications and appeals. I just want to know what the ratio is.

2835 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I am told, Mr Speaker, that of the 28, five were applications requesting the decision to be reconsidered, and two were successful and three disallowed of the five.

2840 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, in relation to Question 78, what he said was there are 98 applications that remain outstanding. I think when I asked this question before the summer recess, there were 149. He says less than a year, 71, and then over two years, 27. Do I have that last figure correct? So am I right in saying that, therefore, no applications for Disability Benefit remain outstanding for longer than two years?

2845 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: It would be a logical deduction from the information I have been provided with, yes.

Hon. D A Feetham: And does that include also cases where, for example, an application may have been made three years ago, which was refused, therefore determined, there is then an appeal and that appeal remains outstanding? In other words, that the total process is over two 2850 years? Can he confirm that when you take appeals into account, none have been outstanding, taking into account the whole process, for longer than two years?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I cannot confirm that, Mr Speaker, because the alternative interpretation is also possible from the information that I have been provided, and that is that they only count the time from the last time that something happens and not from the time before that, when an appeal was made and then it was rejected. It is quite possible that they are counting it from the last time that some action was taken. I do not know. I can find which of the two it is.

Hon. D A Feetham: I may come back to this next time round, to get a clearer picture, but can he confirm that he understands that when I have asked the question how many applications for Disability Benefit remain outstanding, obviously that is the original application for Disability Benefit – not the appeal, but the original application for Disability Benefit?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I would have read the question like that. I do not know necessarily that the person who wrote the answer interpreted it that way, but I will find out. I would agree with him that that would be the correct interpretation of what he has said.

Hon. D A Feetham: He said, in relation to Question 79, that there are 12 appeals outstanding – which seemed to me quite a low number, but that is the answer he has given me – four below a year, and then I think he said six between one and two years and one above – (Interjection by Hon. Sir J J Bossano) All right.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Yes, and then six cases are one year.

Hon. D A Feetham: Well, it must be above one year.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, no, that is not what I have been told. It could be that they are one year exactly and the others are one day less than a year. (Interjection by Hon. D A Feetham) And one case is for two years and one case for three. Obviously, I do not know the individuals or their names or anything, so I cannot tell him anything other than the numbers that have been provided by the Department.

Hon. D A Feetham: Yes, I think that is unlikely, given the question.

Let me ask this. We have one appeal that is at least outstanding for two years. Does he agree with me that that is a very long time for somebody to wait for an appeal to be determined?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I agree entirely that the whole thing takes a very long time, but the reality is that the volume that the Department deals with nowadays is not what it was 11 years ago when he was in government. There was a huge increase in cases of disability when the criteria were changed. Some of them may be very urgent, difficult cases, and some of them very superficial, but I think they are not dealt with in order of importance, shall we say, but rather chronologically. They tell me that you cannot rush the people who are doing this and they will not be told to hurry because they say they have a professional assessment to do and if they take time, well, that is it.

I do not really know what the answer is, because other than trying to find more doctors to do it and provide more resources, I cannot see ... As I have told him before, what worries me is when I look at this and when I look at what is happening with children needing support in classes, where the figure this year has been astronomical. Members will see, when they see in the Estimates the growth that there has been in the resources we have to provide, that if there is indeed a real increase in children having disabilities and in adults having disabilities beyond what was normal before, then we need to do something about investigating what is going on. It is not just simply saying do more, because it is a very worrying thing, if it is happening.

2905 Hon. D A Feetham: I do not mean this as a criticism of the hon. Gentleman or anything like that, but I think the answer he has given me, which is dealt with in chronological order ... I am not sure that can be the case, given the fact that there is a case that is longer than two years and some of the other statistics that he has provided.

2910 But let me just drill down, because my concern is to search for the reasons why some of these are taking longer. Does he know how many, for example, panels there are determining these applications? Is it one panel, is it two panels, is it three panels? Of course, that is then going to impact on how quickly these applications and these appeals are determined.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: One panel. I do not know of more than one.

2915 Hon. D A Feetham: From my own knowledge, I am not sure that can be ... If he does not have the answer ... I am not sure that can be the case, because of course there is one panel in the sense that it is the panel that advises the director, but the panel is composed of various doctors, and I think there has to be more than one panel because, for example, there may well be situations where there is a conflict and somebody else has to come in – for just a simple reason like that – and I think, from my own knowledge, there is more than one. There are more than three or four people. There is a pool of people who basically are then convened into a particular panel to advise on particular cases. But I will ask about that, unless he knows.

2925 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: What I have been told is that there is a panel for adults and a panel for children. That does not mean that the panel is always the same people. They can be different people, but at any one time there is only one panel.

Hon. D A Feetham: It has been me that has confused you by asking the question as to how many panels. Does he know how many pools of doctors there are from which you convene a panel, and also how many doctors on each panel?

2930 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Three on each panel. I do not know what the pool is, but I will find out.

2935 Hon. D A Feetham: And of the applications that remain outstanding ... Well, let's deal with Questions 77 and 78, arising from a supplementary answer that the hon. Gentleman has given me. Out of the 28 cases that have been determined, does he know how many were children and how many were adults?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I have just given the questions put as they are written to the Department, and that is the information they have given me.

2940 Hon. D A Feetham: I presume, therefore, that he does not know, but please could he confirm whether he does not know, out of the ones that are outstanding, how many are adult and children?

2945 The next supplementary is this. Seeing that there have been considerable delays in relation to this ... This is probably an issue where if you are affected, it affects you very personally, so of course you are going to do everything you can to contact your MP or somebody else to try to help you out, and because I have asked a lot of questions I probably get more people coming to see me about this than anything else. I accept these are small numbers in the context of the people who live in Gibraltar, but there have been delays and there are people who are waiting for a long time. Has he attempted at least to drill down as to the reasons for that? And has he attempted to convene a meeting with the director in order to see how the decisions can be speeded up?

2950 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: No, I have not done that, but from what I have seen, the variety of definitions of disability seems to be very wide, both here and in the case of special learning needs.

2955 The system that there was before was a straightforward thing because it was a list of medical conditions and either you had it or you did not have it, so the decision was clear cut. The system we have today is ... For example, should mental illness be a disability that gets a disability allowance? And if so, should every person who has a mental illness get it? Because the system has been made subjective ... Before, it was arbitrary. A condition entitled you to it and another condition did not entitle you to it. Now it is irrelevant, really, what the condition is. It is whether 2960 you are able to cope with your daily life. This is a very difficult thing to assess, in my view, and not everybody would agree with the assessment, because it is totally subjective. The person who is claiming it obviously thinks they cannot cope with their daily life. The person making the judgement – I do not know how they reach these decisions.

I think we need to maybe go back and analyse how we define the people who require help and get it to those people, because I think the ever-growing number is ... There really is no limit, in my view, to what you can say is causing you an inability to cope with the daily chores of your life, because there is no criterion laid down. The criterion is not what is the condition, the criterion is how are you managing the condition. So if you manage it reasonably well, you get no help. If you say, 'I cannot get out of bed,' they have to give you help. It is not a system that makes a lot of 2970 sense to me and I think maybe what we need to do is make sure that we are putting all the help in the place where it is needed, not having a system that is clogged up because the number of applicants keeps on growing every year. Therefore, how much, in terms of medical resources, do we ... if you keep on widening it? If somebody is depressed because they have had a quarrel with somebody, do they get Disability Allowance? And for how long? How do you judge when they are 2975 no longer depressed and now happy?

I think the system is problematic. I think it is a difficult system to get delivery of what is required. But it is not something that I have sat down with the director to discuss. I try to understand. From the explanations that have been given to me of the range of things that people claim are preventing them from leading normal lives, I would say half the population would fit the 2980 bill.

Hon. D A Feetham: But this is why I have been an advocate in this House for a number of years – probably more than four years now, asking questions about disability, about Disability Benefit – for there to be a statutory definition or a statutory test with defined criteria that then 2985 allow the panel to refer to the test, and people to then also know where they stand and essentially the criteria that they need to meet in order to qualify. What people out there, unfortunately the people who come to me, say is, 'I have a disability,' and I say to them, 'That is not enough because it is not the disability, it is the effect that it has on your daily life.'

Of course, you say how do you determine it, it is subjective. In a sense, that is always going to be a problem with any decision by any court, any tribunal, anything, because tribunals make 2990 decisions on the basis of evidence. You produce evidence – medical – of the disability and the effect that it has through a report from a doctor, and then the tribunal basically makes a decision.
But if you have a statutory test with defined criteria, with the evidence that you might require – for example, a report – it makes it much more stringent but everybody knows where they stand, 2995 and the people who need it will get it, and the people who do not need it will not get it. I commend that to the Minister and I ask him whether he agrees with me in relation to that.

May I ask another supplementary? I have just two more, Mr Speaker. The other supplementary is the lady I wrote to you about who has a leg that has been amputated and several other conditions: has he been able to look at that? I am very keen to try to help that lady because she is 3000 going through a very difficult time.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, I am not sure if that has been dealt with without going back and asking.

On the first one, I will think about the arguments he has put because I think they have merit.
3005

Hon. D A Feetham: If he wants, I can help him with that. I do not think anybody outside ... I do not even know if those who administer it have actually thought about it in those terms. I have given it a lot of thought. If he wants me to help, I am perfectly prepared, pro bono ... I see him there looking at me with a suspicious face. This is not me angling for any legal work or anything like that. This is pro bono.

The final supplementary is I could not help but notice when he answered Question 81/2023, which asks how many jobs or positions within government-owned companies are vacant, he said there are no vacancies within government-owned companies. Of course, last time round when I asked how many vacancies are there in government-owned companies, he said to me government-owned companies do not have any vacancies, and then it produced an exchange. That is why I used the words 'jobs or positions'.

What I do not want is, if I may say so ... This has been a jovial exchange. I do not want any funny business in terms of returning to the original answer that he has given me, that there are no vacancies in the formulistic sense. I am asking whether there are any jobs or positions that are needed within those companies, that are going to be filled. I just use language – I know he understands me perfectly, but language that all of us would understand because I asked originally about vacancies and he has now returned with the answer 'vacancies'. So is he saying that there are no jobs or positions within government-owned companies that are vacant?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, I am not trying to misunderstand what he is saying. I explained to him already that in a company, when somebody goes it does not necessarily leave a vacancy, position or anything else, because government companies are not government Departments that have a list of things and you say, 'How many vacancies are there?' and you ask because of what you see in the Book. There are a number of companies that have been shrinking now for quite a few years. What we are not going to do is go down the route of saying there has to be a fixed number of positions in a company if the company does not have the work available to require to replace somebody who goes.

At the moment, the companies are not recruiting anybody, have not opened any vacancies in the ETB and I do not know whether they will in the future, but on the 22nd certainly they were not doing it.

Hon. D A Feetham: There were no vacancies?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: No vacancies that required filling.

Hon. D A Feetham: But no vacancies open in the ETB, yes?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Yes.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q82-83/2023

Rooke and Victoria Stadium developments – Number of government flats to be released; plans re hotel

Clerk: Question 82/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: How many Government flats will be released following the allocation of apartments at the Rooke residential development for the elderly?

3050 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Social Security, Economic Development and Enterprise.

Minister for Social Security, Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, I will answer this together with Question 83.

3055

Clerk: Question 83/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Please state whether there is still an intention to build a hotel as part of the Victoria Stadium development.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Social Security, Economic Development and Enterprise.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, as I explained in a recent interview with GBC, it is not possible to provide an accurate figure at this stage of the impact the Rooke residential development will have on releasing government rented housing because we do not know how many people will want to take it up and I do not think it is possible to know until the thing is finished and people see it.

3065 On the question of the Victoria Stadium, as far as I am aware, there are no changes to the original design that was produced, which included the hotel development, but I can tell Members that there have been approaches to me by two different groups of people who are interested in the development and in providing the finance. In fact, I had a meeting yesterday with one group from the UK, where I said from my point of view the Government, as long as it meets what is required for the GFA and UEFA ... if somebody is interested in funding the whole thing, we will just pull out. If they want to fund part of it and they want us to stay, then we will stay in. We want it to happen, basically. If it has to happen with us providing 100% of the funding, then we will have people locally who are involved locally, interested in the project and advising what they think the project should contain in order to be viable from the point of view of paying for itself. If somebody comes from outside, they may have different ideas.

3070 At the moment, we are getting ready to start on the project because we do not want to hold it up, but we still have an open mind as to how it is likely to finish up. I think the idea of the hotel is one that has logical attractions because of course if the people who come to watch the football in the place and they are coming from outside ... It is probably the only place where you can land at the Airport, walk across the runway, get into the hotel, wake up in the morning and watch the match, so it may have some attractions.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, if I can start with that last answer first, the reason why I am asking this question is because he did make a reference to various things that are going on, on that site – and that included a hotel – in a programme on GBC, but looking at the design and access ... I think he said in the answer also that it still features in the current plans, but in the design and access statement for outline planning permission as submitted by the GFA, there is no mention of a hotel. There are mentions of the apartments and commercial units, but absolutely no mention of the hotel. Does he know why that is the case? And should he correct the answer he has given me, or have I misunderstood?

3095

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Remember that the people have been trying for a number of years to get this going. When they finally thought they were not going to get it and they would finish up with no stadium here and having to go forevermore to Portugal, they came to me to see if the Government could help. I told them, 'The Government cannot do it because we are having enough problems trying to pay for the things we need to pay for, so we cannot give you money, but we will look to see if there is something else we can do to get you the result that you want. We will incorporate your project in our National Economic Plan and sponsor it and give you the technical support and make funding available. Ultimately what we want is that it should happen, and we will make sure that it happens if we have to fund it, but only if it makes money. There is no question of subsidising it.'

3100

In those conversations, the people who came to see me said they thought it would be a very attractive proposition to have a hotel in the complex, and therefore when I have talked to other people I think the idea of the hotel has always been seen as a positive thing, a multi-purpose thing that would have offices, accommodation, shopping centre, hotel. The more variation you can get, 3110 presumably the better the project is in terms of raising finance and making money.

Hon. D J Bossino: When he answered the question initially, he was talking about talking to different people and that he had had a meeting last night. When he is referring to 'the development', he is talking about the whole thing, not the hotel – is that correct? – and because 3115 he is speaking to various investors, some investors may think it is a good idea to have a hotel as part of the complex. Is that understanding correct?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: With the people who have come to see me I have said we are not in this because it is particularly something we want to be doing, because otherwise we would have put it in the manifesto in the first place; this is something we are doing because we see a need and something has to be done about it, and we have decided to get involved on the basis that the product that we are financing will not be something that needs a subsidy from the Government. That is the criterion.

In terms of people wanting to come in, they only want to come in, obviously, if it makes money as well; they are not going to come in to lose money. Since there are different groups that have approached me, I have said to them, 'I think it is better if you discuss these things with the people in the GFA, who are going to be the ones who finish up with the stadium – we are doing this to help them – and then, depending on what you agree, we are prepared to look at different options from different people, and the one that makes most sense ...' Frankly, if somebody comes and takes over the whole thing and we are confident that it is going to happen, we will be quite happy to withdraw from the project and devote that money to doing something else, because there are lots of things that we intended to do and we have not done in the construction area.

So the answer is quite simple, really. At this stage, how it is going to finish up will depend on whether we are the only ones there or there are other parties, or whether we are not there at all. That could change the configuration, because if somebody comes along and says, 'I will do it, but only if it contains this because I am a professional property developer in the UK' – these people are from the UK – 'and I believe that this would in bring more money than what you want to do,' I cannot argue against that because I do not have the knowledge to argue about what is the best property development – as long as we make sure that the people who come in do not then disappear, as has happened on many occasions with other projects that have never got off the ground. We want this to happen and it is important that it should happen in the timescale that we want, so that we have as little time as necessary with our players having to go outside. If it is something serious and the people there convince me that it is going to happen, that it is the best thing for football and the best thing for Gibraltar, then what I am saying today about its configuration may not be what materialises.

Hon. D J Bossino: I understand, Mr Speaker. Just so I have understood the position, is it the case that, as he has explained it, the Government, through the Savings Bank, which is part of the National Economic Plan, is providing the funding and it will hopefully reap the benefits as a result of this? The plans, as they currently stand ... Let's assume no developer comes forward that the hon. Member is happy will provide results. Is there some flexibility – talking about the hotel – within the current plan? Is it fair to assume that the plans as they are currently submitted by the GFA before the Planning Commission, which do not include a hotel ... and should there be no 3145

3155 developers coming forward – other developers, other investors – that this project would not include a hotel? Or is there also flexibility there which the hon. Member would consider as, in effect, the prime investor in the project?

3160 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: My own view is that the hotel would add value and it is quite obvious that we do not have enough hotel beds at the moment. There are other people who have contacted me recently who are interested in coming in to invest – not in this, but in providing hotels and investing in the tourist infrastructure of Gibraltar. So it may be that if there are investors for hotels elsewhere, it may not matter too much if it is not here, but if that is not there, I would strongly argue that there is a need for the hotel, and I think it would do very well financially.

3165 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Hon. D J Bossino: No, Mr Speaker, please, I do not have any supplementaries on Question 83. I have asked three supplementaries on Question 84, which dealt with the hotel – sorry, Question 83, which has dealt with the hotel, but I have now got questions on Question 82.

3175 Hon. D J Bossino: I am grateful. In relation to Question 82, which was how many government flats, he was not here, but we had a question and answer session with the Chief Minister in relation to that. I understand that it is, at this stage, not possible to have an empirical analysis of how many government flats will be released when the Rooke flats are made available and occupied, and there is an element of people making decisions as to how they want to proceed in their lives, but in terms of statistics, do I take it that we have ... I think it was 267 flats available at the Rooke development that is currently being constructed, and we have 300-odd applicants currently to Mount Alvernia, and there are 140, I think he said, residents in Mount Alvernia? Are those statistics correct?

3185 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I think the list of people who supposedly wanted to go to Mount Alvernia is an exaggeration. I think the number is much less than that. Having asked for the list, there are people who are in their 50s. I think there has been, historically, a situation where, just like every 18-year-old puts his name down for the housing list so that eventually he goes up the list, every 55-year-old who came out of the Civil Service put his name down for Mount Alvernia, hoping he would get there eventually. So the list that I have been shown has people who are urgent cases, who may not be the people we can care for, depending on their medical condition, and then there is a list of the people who are between 90 and 101, some of whom are very fit, and they are likely to be the ones on that list, out of the 368. That is the kind of number that is most likely to be the people who would want to move now, although there may be people younger than 90 who may be less agile and less fit than the ones over 90. The list is divided into the urgent cases, the over-90 cases and the rest, and in the rest there are certainly some very young people who I would not expect to want to go there at this point but might want to be scoring points on waiting time to get there eventually.

3195 Hon. D J Bossino: And would he know, of the 368, how many are in government rental flats? It is possible that within that demographic there could be private dwellers.

3200 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I do not have an exact figure, but from my recollection of the list they showed me, I think probably over 60% would be government tenants.

3205 Hon. D J Bossino: One final question. I think it is a very interesting statistic and I want to think about it a bit more, but because there is a number of 260-odd, I think it was, available units at Rooke, assuming everybody says yes, the supply will not necessarily meet the demand, and then – it arises and it is relevant to the question – that will have a correlating effect in terms of the availability of government flats for rental. Would that understanding be correct from the figures that we have available?

3210

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: [Inaudible] meet the demand, from the figures that I have seen, because I think there are people who are not ready to move there yet – quite a big number of people, I think. But it all depends. Once they see the quality of the place, if they are there and they have been accepted as being on a waiting list, if they say they want to move and they leave a government house that can be rented to somebody else, we will not say no. If the actual usage for pensioners is low because people are not ready to move now but want to move some years down the road, then subject to the advice I get from the expert I am getting from the UK being positive, in terms that we can dedicate one of the floors to people with Alzheimer's or dementia so that we can have one floor where perhaps the manning levels and the skills mix is different, we will consider that.

I do not know what the answer is going to be. The reality is that obviously we want the place to be occupied, but we want to occupy it for the best possible use. If the advice I get is that this is not suitable, then it is not going to happen because we are not going to force people into a place that is not suitable.

3225

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q84-89/2023

Victoria Stadium development –

Tender and construction commencement dates; financial feasibility plan;
UEFA rules re number of seats; cost without residential and commercial development; determination and approval re extent of residential and commercial elements

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, when is it expected that the construction of the new Victoria Stadium and adjoining residential/commercial complex will commence, and when will the contract for the works go out to tender?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Social Security, Economic Development and Enterprise.

3235

Minister for Social Security, Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): I will answer this question with Questions 85 to 89, Mr Speaker.

Clerk: Question 85/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Who has undertaken a financial feasibility plan for the projected new Victoria Stadium and has the Government or Savings Bank received a copy?

Clerk: Question 86/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Has the Government been told by the GFA whether it is currently permissible under UEFA rules for the proposed new stadium to be of a smaller size than 8,000 seats?

Clerk: Question 87/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Is the Government aware what the projected cost for building a 5,000-seater and/or 8,000-seater new football stadium would be without the proposed residential and commercial development?

3255

Clerk: Question 88/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Has the Minister for the Savings Bank approved the extent of residential and/or commercial configurations of the proposed new Victoria Stadium project; and, if so, on what basis?

3260

Clerk: Question 89/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Who is determining what the size of the residential or commercial parts of the proposed new Victoria Stadium should be and how many apartments should form part of the project?

3265

3270

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, there is no start date identified yet for the construction of the stadium complex project, but preliminary site-clearing work should be starting later this month. At the same time, packages for different parts of the project are being considered and quotes may be invited once planning permission has been obtained.

Neither the Government nor the Savings Bank have been given a copy of a financial feasibility plan for the projected new Victoria Stadium.

The Government has not been told by the GFA whether under UEFA rules it is permissible for the proposed stadium in the complex to be smaller than 8,000 seats.

As far as I know, there is no standard cost comparison between a 5,000 and an 8,000 spectator capacity stadium, but I have been given to understand that the difference is not very big in terms of cost.

I am not involved in the operational details of the commercial configuration of the stadium complex and I am not qualified to make such a judgement on the extent of residential and commercial configurations, which would determine the profitability.

3285

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I will take these in turn in a minute, if I may, but let me just ask a broad question that strikes me, having heard all those answers, which in effect, I think, is that the Government has not seen the financial feasibility study – at least the Minister has not seen it and he is not involved in the configuration, he is not aware of the specific costs and he is not aware whether UEFA rules allow a smaller stadium. In the context of all that, given that backdrop of his lack of knowledge and lack of sight of the financial feasibility study, on what basis has he been able to come to a conclusion to allow funding of the project?

3290

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The project is subject to the project happening because it is profitable and viable; otherwise it will not happen. I made that clear in answer to the previous questions. We have made an offer that will permit this to happen on the basis that the people involved are confident that they can deliver a project that will, in fact, meet all the questions that he is asking now, even though so far there is nothing concrete that is taking place.

3295

I have told the previous questioner that if there are a number of parties interested, what would be the final thing and the feasibility would be different. If we have somebody coming along with one suggestion on the configuration and one result on the feasibility, and somebody else, I have

3305 already said in that question that when we look at it we will then decide. If there are a variety of proposals and a variety of feasibility studies from different partners, from different people who want to get involved, we will pick the one that we think is best in Gibraltar's interest. If, indeed, it happens that somebody comes along and wants to take it out of our hands and do the whole thing, the answer is there will be no more questions to answer on this because we will not be needed.

3310 Hon. K Azopardi: Yes, Mr Speaker, I understand it is all about the financial feasibility of the project, but that is precisely where I am going: he has not seen the financial feasibility study, if there is one.

3315 The design and access statement that was filed by GFA National Stadium Ltd for the planning application sets out a fairly precise meterage of the shopping centre at 9000 m, the residential area at 11,700 m – it is quite precise – and commercial offices at 3,500 m. Somebody must have designed this project and put it together. You would have thought that this would have had a financial feasibility study underpinning it to precisely decide whether it is profitable or not, one way or the other. The hon. Member is saying that he has not seen it, so I am trying to probe on what basis then he has given this project his backing.

3320 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I repeat what I said before so it might finally penetrate into the brain of the hon. Member opposite. I said, before he stood up, that there are a number of variable possibilities that may change the piece of paper he has in front of him: that we may not be involved at all, but that if we do get involved, as we are willing to get involved, it will be because we are satisfied that the thing is going to make money and not lose money and cause us to have to provide a subsidy. That is the state of play as we stand here today.

3325 The problem with the hon. Member's questions is that the questions they put the moment something is announced are as if in the first 24 hours everything that is possible has already been worked out. It does not work like that. We are moving at a very fast speed, compared with what is the traditional time it takes for anything to happen in Gibraltar in this area. So he can expect results faster than, for example, what happened when the GSD announced the Sovereign Bay Eastside project, which went through several iterations and they were going to be investing millions in it and then none of it happened. I am not going down that road. I am not making claims of things that are not tight. When they are, I will share what I know with the hon. Member. At the moment, what I am telling him is what I have told the GFA: we are willing to come in and do this, provided we are satisfied that it will not be making a loss and that we will not be incurring a loss, because I am not going to be investing money from the Savings Bank in anything that loses money – it is as simple as that – in this project, or in any other one. These things will make money for the Savings Bank that is better than the return they get by having it in London, in equity, which gives us a measly ½%. In my view, it is better to use the savers' money to create assets in Gibraltar than to create assets somewhere else. Clearly, I am not going to put that money at risk, and therefore, if when the time comes we see that the viability we expect is not there, it will not happen.

3340 Everybody involved who knows more about this than I do is confident that it can be done and that it will make money. I do not think they are all making it up in order to persuade me, because I will not be persuaded just by that. I will be persuaded when there is something more tangible being done. But at the moment, the fact that somebody comes out from the UK to meet me because they have heard of this and they think it is something worth investing into is an encouraging sign, I would have thought.

3350 They have not got a feasibility study. They have not asked all the questions the hon. Member is asking. I had a meeting of an hour and a half yesterday with them in the Savings Bank because they wanted to know what the position of the Savings Bank was in terms of being the investor, and I said, 'The reality is that we are the investor by default in this and we want this to happen, but if somebody comes in and wants to do the whole thing and wants us to get out, we will get out. If you want to come in and you would like to partner with us, then we will partner.'

3355 That is the answer I have given before. I cannot go beyond that, because that is the state of play now.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I do not think I am normally particularly slow on the uptake, so it is not that he has to repeat things – (Interjection) yes – for brain-penetration purposes; it is that what he is saying sounds so strange given the catalogue of events we have all seen. After all, he is 3360 now saying, on 19th January, that he has not seen the feasibility study, he is not involved in the configurations, and that they might not be involved at all, but if they are, it is going to make money. I say, 'On what basis does he think it is going to make money?' because he has not seen a financial feasibility study and he has not seen the numbers, but it did not stop him, three months ago, from donning the Gibraltar national shirt – which is the only shirt that he and I probably 3365 share – and announcing it with great fanfare in the middle of the Victoria Stadium at half-time in the last match that Gibraltar played at home. Having donned the Gibraltar shirt and then gone on television to explain the project, he must have been satisfied then that the savers' money was going to be well used, but he is now saying, three months later, he has not even seen the financial feasibility study. That is what he is saying to people, and I find that strange. I accept, at face value, 3370 that he is saying ... I am not suggesting he has seen it. I accept it, but I find it strange.

This is not the first GFA application. The GFA has made previous applications. In March 2020 it made a previous application for the construction of a stadium that did not have residential, commercial etc. At that stage, it was obvious that there was a financial feasibility study because the entity that prepared the design and access statement in March 2020 on their website says, 3375 'We prepared a financial feasibility study for the stadium that did not include residential or commercial.' He is saying he made a decision as to savers' moneys without seeing the financial feasibility study. I find that incredible given the sequence of events.

In the context of all this, will he not ask for the financial feasibility study?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, in the 50 years I have been here I have done things that 3380 people thought were incredible on that side, and eventually they had to believe it because it happened, and I expect that this will be the case again.

I will not ask for something because he asks me to ask for it. I will ask for something if I think I need to ask for it. I have told him that I am more encouraged than ever if people come here looking 3385 for the opportunity to invest in something than by having said, 'Give me the feasibility study.' I have not said they have not done a feasibility study, I have said I have not seen it and I have not asked for it. At the end of the day, I have gone to great lengths to explain to him that if there was any risk whatsoever it would not happen ... I am totally convinced that there is no danger of risk and therefore it will happen, but I could be mistaken. If I am mistaken, I will say I am mistaken and 3390 we cannot do this because it is not possible to do it, but since I believe it is possible to do it, the feasibility study that will be done will depend, given there are a number of players, on which one eventually is going to be the partner or the person that delivers it, and if it is somebody that is doing the whole thing, then all his questions and all his worries and everything else evaporates because we will not be there.

Hon. K Azopardi: And, of course, if that were the case, a lot of my worries would go away because I am worried about savers' moneys and the decision-making process.

The slight glimmer in what he has just said is that he might ask for the feasibility study. That is a good thing. I would have thought it would have been obvious. I appreciate we are different 3400 people and we are going to react differently, but if someone approached me on this basis I would want to know how much is the stadium that the GFA itself sought to construct in March 2020 – which was about 5,000 people, not an 8,000-seater stadium – going to cost, how much is an 8,000-seater going to cost, and if I am going to recommend this to the Government, if I am going to 3405 announce this decision, convince me that it is financially viable. I would have wanted to see the financial feasibility study, but I see the glimmer in what the hon. Member says.

3410 Can I just ask: in relation to the specific question on the commencement of the works, which is Question 84, he says that quotes may be obtained for packages of the works, the clearing of the site may start and so on, but he also said, in the context of an answer to my colleague to my left, that obviously there was a keenness to get on with the project within the timescale. I think he alluded to a timescale, although he was not specific on the timescale. I am not sure whether in his discussions with the GFA a timescale has become evident, given that obviously this is a stadium that is being used all the time for football. So two questions rolled into one: has there been any kind of timescale indicated as to when this project should be done; and are these packages where quotes have been obtained going out to tender on these works?

3415 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the Savings Bank is involved in providing finance in the projects we do. We do not get involved from the Savings Bank or from the Ministry of Economic Development in telling people how they should do their jobs, so the people who are doing it, who are professionals, will decide what is the best way to do it in order to get the best result at the best price.

3420 This is not a government tender that is going out. I do not know what is different between the Savings Bank and the Gibraltar International Bank in terms of funding projects, but I cannot imagine that the kind of questions I am being asked here would be asked of the bank by them. (Interjection) No, but it is state owned, therefore the position is that at this stage I have given the hon. Members opposite an update on what is happening, which may change what happens in the future but the commitment is a commitment that I gave, subject always to the fact that when we go down the road of financing it, or whoever else comes in goes down the road of financing it, it will only happen if it is viable – and I am convinced that it is viable. Have I seen a feasibility study that convinces me? No. I am convinced that this will work and I am convinced that it can make

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can I just ask about the cost of the stadium? The hon. Member I think said he does not have a specific cost for a 5,000-seater stadium or an 8,000-seater stadium, but he understands them not to be too different – or words to that effect, if I understood him correctly. Can I just probe on that? Is he saying that in the context of the decision-making process he did not ask the GFA what a 5,000-seater stadium and an 8,000-seater stadium cost? The reason I ask that question is simple in this sense: this is not the first application that the GFA have made to construct a stadium, this is the third. They made an application in 2018. The application in 2018 was for an 8,000-seater stadium. In 2020, they made a second one, this time for a smaller stadium.

3435 They say in the 2020 design and access statement, and I will read it to you:

An initial concept design with a stadium capacity of approximately 8,000 seats was submitted as part of a planning application in June 2018 and was granted outline permission in November 2018. However, since then, the GFA has taken advantage of the fact that category 4 conditions were amended by UEFA in April 2019 to allow smaller countries to reduce the capacity of their stadia. This has allowed the GFA to adapt the capacity and other design elements to Gibraltar's actual needs.

3445 One would have thought, therefore, that it must have been relevant to the GFA because they filed a new application for a smaller stadium. So why would the Minister, when he engaged with the GFA, not ask them what the cost of the relevant stadium would be, whether it is 5,000 or 8,000? The GFA must have thought it was relevant because they filed a second application in March 2020.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The questions are hypothetical, not questions of fact. I am told that, in terms of the complex, the difference in the price of the stadium will not be significant. If you did not do the complex and you just did the stadium, then clearly the difference in price would be 3450 more significant. That is to say if you are doing a bigger thing, of which the football pitch is a part, the number of seats in the football pitch may make a difference to a football pitch with seats and nothing else. If you are doing something where perhaps, hypothetically speaking, 80% of the 3455 project has nothing to do with playing football, then the difference in the bit that is about playing football may not be significant in the overall cost. I think that perhaps explains why before it might have had more of an impact on the cost and now it has less. I am told that the impact on the cost is not significant in the context of a complex. It might have been significant in the context of nothing else there, other than the stadium.

Hon. K Azopardi: But told by whom? He has not seen the financial feasibility study and he has 3460 not seen our information. Told by whom that it would not be a significant cost? By the GFA or by somebody else?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Would the hon. Member like to know the day of the week and the hour of the day, or just the names of the people I talk to? He is asking for information, I give him 3465 information. He then wants to know who told me that. Well, it was a guy I met having coffee in Main Street, okay?

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, if that is true, fine, I accept it, but if that was a glib remark and he does not want to give me the information, it is relevant because I am trying to assess ...
3470 Obviously the GFA thought it was relevant because they withdrew the application that they had filed in 2018 and substituted a new one for a much smaller stadium using the UEFA rules that they could use. They must have thought it was relevant as to cost. He is saying he has been told that it is not such an impact, but he has not seen the financial feasibility study, so I am trying to establish did he get that information from the GFA. If he does not want to give me that information, that is 3475 okay if that is how helpful he wants to be. People can decide how they make their minds up on that issue.

Mr Speaker, can I ask him again on the residential configuration, which he says he is not involved in? We now know what the residential configuration is. The last time I asked him he said it had not been devised, but we now know that it has been devised because the information is in 3480 the design and access statement. He says he has not been involved in the configuration – again, I take that at face value – but he will be aware that there are planned 92 apartments as part of the development: 68 one-bedroom apartments, 18 two-bedroom apartments and six others, which I presume are much bigger than that because they are not three or four bedroom apartments, because those are blank. Again, someone must have decided that that has to be the basis of this 3485 development so that it is profitable. Is he saying he does not know and was not involved in those discussions, and so when he reached his decision he had no influence on these issues?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, if the hon. Member has all the information that he is asking me for, then he should not be asking because he is not supposed to be asking things that are in 3490 the public domain. He says he has read it all in the submission that has been made. He started saying that if I do not know, he knows. Well, if he knows and I do not know, why does he ask me to tell him? Is it so that he can criticise me for not knowing? Is that the purpose of the question?

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I asked him a different question. I tried to lead up to it without 3495 trying to outflank the hon. Member on the basis that he suggested I did, which is to expose him for saying he did not know. On the contrary, what I said to him ... I have asked him this question before and he said the configuration had not been done. Since I asked him that question, the design and access statement has now been published, and from the design and access statement
I can see the figures. What I am saying is having seen the figures ... These are very precise figures:
3500 68 one-bedrooms. Why 68 and not 75? Someone has formed the view that this has to be the basis for profitability and I am trying to understand whether he was consulted on these figures – and if he was not, why wasn't he? He must have made his mind up on some basis when he committed savers' moneys up to £100 million to this project.

3505 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: It is impossible to satisfy the Member because I have gone through a series of questions with the premise throughout that there are a number of parties interested in this, and therefore if somebody comes tomorrow and says, 'I am going to put £80 million on the table – you do not need to be in, but I want 169 instead of 168,' there will not be 168, there will be 169. Or does he think we will tell them, 'No, because Mr Azopardi read that there were 168 he is going to be very upset if we put in one more, so take the £80 million away.'

3510 At this point in time, that is the proposal. On the basis of that proposal, which may change depending on who comes in or does not come in, the cost of what is being sold today is quite substantial given the prices of the market. The reality is that a complex that would have that level of density ... You do not need to do a detailed feasibility study to get a reaction if it is this going to produce a volume of money that looks credible, and the answer is it does, but it does not have to be exactly like it is, because at the point we are now, we are open to alternatives, and of course the GFA knows our position is that we want this to happen. We will be there if it can make money and produce a return for the Savings Bank. If other people come in, provided they do not delay the thing too much by wanting to come in, we will get out. If they do not come in or the thing is taking too long, we will not get out. We will do the funding of preliminary works to try to make sure that avoidable delays do not happen, and then we would expect to be reimbursed if we are not the ones that do the funding at the end. So when I have said we are looking to start doing some of the site clearing and stuff like that, we are willing to fund it on the basis that we will get our money back if we are not there.

3525 Mr Speaker: Can I just interject here and suggest that we are now moving in a situation where this is developing into a debate, so I would ask the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition to ask one or possibly two more supplementaries and then we will close it?

3530 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can I just say that if we are taking time ... I appreciate the answers, but I have asked, as far as I can see, nine questions on my six questions, so –

Mr Speaker: I fully accept that, but we are really not making any progress. We seem to be going over and over the same ground. This is why I am saying that if you have a new supplementary, then yes, you may continue, but if we are going to go over the same ground over and over again it serves no purpose.

3540 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I do have more questions and they are different ones. If we are not making progress, with all due respect it is also maybe partly, if not wholly, due to the answers I am getting and the style of the answers, so perhaps we have shared blame there.

It is not that I am saying to the hon. Member that the configuration should be ... I am not expecting him to turn round, if he gets someone interested in the development and he then points to the design statement, to say, 'No, it has to be 68, it cannot be 75 apartments.' That is not what I have suggested. What I am quite perplexed at, actually, is that there has been a configuration done, there has been a design and access statement done. It is very specific. It is not residential area, 15,000m, it is 11,738m. It is very precise. Someone has decided that that should be the configuration. He has made a decision on the basis of it. He says he has not seen the financial feasibility study and I take that at face value. He has made his decision and put his shirt on without seeing all that, and that is fine, that is his decision, but can he help me in understanding who decided the configuration of the apartments that was put forward as part of the planning application? Does he know who did the configuration? It was not him, but does he know who?

3555 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: And it is not my business to know who it was either. That is all I can tell him. I do not know if the piece of paper he has indicates who submitted it, but what I am telling him ... As you correctly say, Mr Speaker, he is going to get the same answer from whichever angle he puts the question. I do not mind – I am quite happy to do an all-night session; I have done them many times in this House.

3560 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, did he have a discussion at all with the GFA about whether the UEFA rules would permit a smaller stadium with residential development? Did he have any discussion at all with the GFA about the size of the stadium?

3565 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, I did not have a discussion about it, and there was no indication that there was any problem with the stadium being 8,000 or 5,000. When I discussed it with them, they put to me all the things that were relevant, and that was apparently not something relevant until he raised the issue. When he raised the issue in his question I asked is there a problem or is there a difference between the two, and I was told that given the complex, 8,000 or 5,000 in the cost of the total complex is not significant. I asked because he put a question.

3570 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, is he having regular meetings with the GFA in relation to this project, given that they have put forward a planning application? The planning application was put in by GFA National Stadium Ltd. He has already informed us that that is the entity that will be running the project. Is he having regular meetings with the GFA on this project? He seems, actually, completely left-fielded on the detail of this, even though he supported it publicly with the football shirt on.

3580 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I have supported a lot of projects in the National Economic Plan, but I am not like the former leader of the GSD, who told Parliament that he saw himself as a project manager and he would go down to select the colour of the umbrellas in Casemates. I remember, on one particular occasion he said he was deciding on the painting of Joshua Hassan House in Secretary's Lane, and when the people who were doing the painting got fed up with his changes, they put, one day, paint on the side of the wall where the sun was shining and the one that was in shadow, and it was the same paint, and he chose one of the two from the same tin. I do not get that involved. I do not get involved in the detail, I have no intentions of getting involved and I have no intentions of going through the many projects we are going to have in the National Economic Plan, which I will be rolling out and which will be transformative for Gibraltar, and I am not going to be spending all my time having meetings – even though I work seven days a week – so that I can get all the details of everything that would satisfy him, in the knowledge that he will not be satisfied anyway.

3590 Their strategy is that whatever it is they are told, they ask for more – a voracious appetite for information, insatiable. Well, I am sorry, the answer is what I have told you is what I am going to tell you, and that is it. If I have more information to give you at a later stage, I will. At the moment, the situation is that we are looking at a project which has been reflected in what the hon. Member has read from the perspective of the GFA, who are the owners of the stadium company. There are other people with interest. We have to see what happens and how this finishes, but at the end of the day it will only happen if it is viable – and I am convinced that it is viable, without having to get a feasibility study, because it makes a lot of sense.

3600 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, it is not that I have a voracious appetite. Of course I want the information, but the reason why we want the information is because he has taken a decision of importance in relation to savers' money, and what we are trying to do is fulfil our role here and hold him to account on these matters. Does he not accept that that is what we are trying to do, and it is not for any other agenda? Does he not accept that?

3605 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: No, Mr Speaker, I do not accept it at all. I think what they want to do is rubbish what we are doing so they can say that we do not know what we are doing, that it is crazy that the bank's money is going to be lost, that the savers should take their money out, that there should be a run on the bank and, hopefully, on the back of all that, win an election. Well, okay, good luck to him.

3610 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

3615 Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I will be very brief. Just one supplementary on Question 85, which was asked by the Leader of the Opposition. If I can ask the Minister if he could explain the difference between the answer he gave the Leader of the Opposition and the answer he gave to my Question 558/2022, in which the official answer, i.e. the written answer on the script, was:

The financial analysis of the viability of the Victoria Stadium complex development has been conducted as an exercise with input from people with expertise from the property market and assessed by a former partner of EY and has had input in terms of the technical features which lead to assessing the viability financially from experts in construction of stadiums, including the person who was the project manager of a stadium with 60,000 seats who happens to be currently a member of the staff of GBIC, and the design team that produced the concept that has been made public which has had an input from the construction of a number of stadium projects in Portugal.

I would ask the Minister if he could help us by reconciling what he has told the Leader of the Opposition and what he told me in answer to that question.

3620 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the question that I have been asked is have I been given a copy, and the answer is no, I have not been given a copy.

3625 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, at the risk of entering the absurd, if he has not been given a copy, has he seen the financial viability plan?

3630 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, what I have told him is the explanation that was given to me as to what was going on. I have not asked to see anything, I have not been given anything and I do not intend to ask for it. So there is no contradiction. I told him what I had been told they were doing, and I shared the information that I had with him. I have now been asked whether the Government has been given a copy of the feasibility plan. No, we have not got a copy of the feasibility plan. We have not asked for one, it has not been offered and we do not intend to ask for one. Why? Because the feasibility plan that was done by the people who are doing it then may not be the feasibility plan that will be done by the time this goes ahead.

3635 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I think we are making some progress, so can the Minister just clarify —? (Interjection) Well, I know, but the Minister always leads to further questions. Just for the sake of the House, is it right that effectively what he is saying is that was then, this is now, things have moved on, things are changing, what may have been a plan at that time when he announced it may not be the plan now, and therefore in his mind there is no financial viability study to look at because it is all basically back to the drawing board in that sense? Is that what he is saying?

3645 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The picture that was seen as containing the elements that would make this a profitable entity, which the people here have, may not be the same as the picture of somebody coming out, where perhaps ... There are two issues here, I think. One is that I think the people who are in the local property market who have been involved in looking at this probably know the local market better than other people. However, the people who ... I have had two approaches. One was from the UK yesterday, and earlier I had an approach from a guy who was

3650 representing the Dubai office of an American investment fund, who said they had been very keen to do a stadium in Marbella and apparently they found they had to pave the way to do the investment – you know? – and after trying to pave the way, the paving of the way did not seem to be getting anywhere, so they pulled out. I told them, of course, that this is not something that happens in Gibraltar and they did not have to pave the way for anybody. They could look at the 3655 at the project and if they were interested ... I had the same message for both contacts. The first guy said he would go back to Dubai and talk to his principals. I explained how the local property people saw the project and I explained to him that really this was something we were very keen to happen but we did not want to prevent investors coming in if they saw this as an attractive proposition, because we had many other things that we wanted to do.

3660 The position now is that the concept as envisaged by the locals may not be what is finally done if the guy who represents the American investment fund is the one who persuades us that that is the best thing for Gibraltar, or the guys who have come out from the UK come up with something different. There are things that need to be done anyway, whoever does it, and we are going to invest money in doing things that will make no difference to the configuration of the project, just to make sure that things are happening and we do not wait longer than we need to wait to get 3665 the programme started. As far as I am concerned, if we do it, then fine, we will have already paid for some of it. If somebody else does it, they will come and we will show them how much we have spent in getting things done and then we will recover that money.

3670 There are, at the moment, the vision of the local property people ... The guy who came representing the investment fund from the States brought me the scheme that he had done, which they had intended and were very keen to do in Marbella. He left a copy with me. To me football is not something that ... They all look the same to me. So we have the domestic thing and two potential outsiders. I think it is encouraging that there should be people coming in wanting to do it, because if it was ... People do not normally go around the world looking for opportunities to lose money. You can do that by buying Bitcoin with no need to go anywhere.

Questions for Written Answer

3675 Mr Speaker: Can we progress to Written Answers?

Clerk: Answers to Written Questions.

3680 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to table the answers to Written Questions W1/2023 to W7/2023.

Mr Speaker: Ordered to lie.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Commonwealth Park (Amendment) Bill 2022 – First Reading approved

15 Clerk: (ix) Bills – First and Second Reading.
A Bill for an Act to amend the Commonwealth Park Act 2014. The Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education.

20 Minister for Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Commonwealth Park Act 2014 be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Commonwealth Park Act 2014 be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

25 Clerk: The Commonwealth Park (Amendment) Act 2022.

Commonwealth Park (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill now be read a second time.

30 Commonwealth Park is a green space in the heart of town which has become much loved by families with children, individuals looking for a quiet spot and anyone wanting to enjoy some outdoor time and fresh air. Thankfully, we have been able to extend the space available for outdoor leisure and recreation through the creation of Campion Park, which is now being enjoyed by hundreds of people every day.

35 This Bill arises for two reasons. Firstly, whilst the rules made under the Commonwealth Park Act had been extended to the new park, they did not reflect its new name, Campion Park. Secondly, I am amending secondary legislation under the Smoke-Free Environment Act 2012 to prohibit the smoking of cigarettes in Commonwealth Park and I wanted to ensure this also applied to Campion Park. As a result, it is necessary to ensure the legal definitions of both parks are clear.

40 The Bill amends the name of the Commonwealth Park Act to the Commonwealth and Campion Parks Act. It also establishes in law Campion Park as a distinct park to Commonwealth Park and delineates its boundary in a plan. The Bill also amends the Commonwealth Park rules, extending their application to Campion Park.

45 Whilst this Bill is short and simple, it paves the way for a much greater objective, to keep our parks smoke free to ensure they are green spaces where people can enjoy fresh and clean air, to ensure Gibraltar can truly be a child-friendly city.

I commend this Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

50

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, this is a short Bill which has already been described by the Minister in its overall objective and we will support this Bill.

Mr Speaker: Would the mover like to say a few words?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Leader of the Opposition for his support and I am happy to proceed to Third Reading.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Commonwealth Park Act 2014 be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Commonwealth Park (Amendment) Act 2022.

Commonwealth Park (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Minister for Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

Employment (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Employment Act. The Hon. the Minister for Housing, 70 Employment, Youth and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Employment Act be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Employment 75 Act be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Employment (Amendment) Act 2022.

Employment (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, I have 80 the honour to move that this Bill now be read a second time.

This Bill introduces new powers to make subsidiary legislation for the purpose of providing the framework for the recognition of employers of trade unions, for collective bargaining purposes and for any other matter or purposes connected therewith. Although draft legislation in this area has already been subject to a Command Paper, amendments to the Act are deemed necessary to 85 ensure that sufficient vires are established in order to proceed with such regulation.

Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.
90

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I rise on this Second Reading because my colleague Edwin Reyes is unwell and he would normally have taken the speech.

I confirm our support for the Bill. The only question I would have for the Minister – perhaps he can answer when he replies – is whether there has already been a draft of regulations and whether 95 there has been any consultation with employers' representatives – the FSB and the Chamber of Commerce – and indeed with the main unions on this issue.

Mr Speaker: Does the mover of the Bill wish to respond?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, it is a pleasure to see this Bill being moved. The 100 Government considered many different ways of bringing about the recognition of trade unions in the private sector. We considered the possibility of bringing a Bill that contained all of the rules.
We thought of an amendment to the Trade Union and Disputes Act, which would provide a new part, in effect. But we have been advised that it is better to make this short amendment in the 105 employment provision and be able then to have regulations that could be adapted, because this is going to be a new area of recognition for trade unions.

The Government won an election on the basis that we would do this. This is an issue that has been ventilated in our manifestos and we are in government with the obligation to pursue this recognition. In doing so, in our capacities beyond this House – in other words, as members of 110 political parties – we have sought the opinions of unions and employers' representative organisations. As the Government, some time ago, when I was Minister with responsibility for 115 industrial relations, I commenced a process of consultation with the Chamber of Commerce, with the Federation of Small Businesses and indeed with the relevant unions – the unions that have general membership, not those that are representative exclusively of the public sector – and the regulations that will be made when they come to be made, if the House approves this Bill, have the benefit of that detailed consultation both with unions and employers’ representative organisations. Of course, the balance of convenience here may not be exactly the one struck that the unions or indeed the employers’ representative organisations might have wished struck; it is what we believe is the right balance, and indeed the right balance on which to start this new 120 regime, and that may indeed change as we see the evolution of the recognition of trade unions in the private sector.

In saying that, and in using that nomenclature, the recognition of trade unions in the private sector, I think it is important just to pause for a moment and reflect upon the fact that they are very few the employers who do not already recognise membership of a trade union by their staff.
125 Indeed, the vast majority of employers in the private sector do recognise trade unions, they engage with trade unions, and unions in vast measure behave in a responsible way and bring collective bargaining to the table, which is in the interest of both the employees the employers when both sides are acting reasonably, as the Government itself has found in its engagement with the unions that represent employees in the public sector, even when we might disagree and even 130 when we might have to take issues into dispute etc., which we seek to resolve in a way that is favourable to all parties.

Mr Speaker, I am very pleased, as Leader of the House and as Chief Minister of this Government, to see the movement of this Bill. I am very pleased to see that the Opposition will support it and I hope that in the remarks I have made in support of the Bill I have also answered 135 the question of the Leader of the Opposition. He asks me to give way, so I will before I sit down.

Hon. K Azopardi: I am grateful for him giving way. Just one small issue for clarification of what he said: have I understood correctly from his explanation that the Government will, then, not pursue the other legislation they had published some time ago?
140

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, this is the way we are advised to do it. In other words, this is the way to create the rules that will govern the recognition of trade unions in the private sector.
Instead of doing them by way of primary legislation, we are creating a hook in a piece of primary legislation which enables a regulation to be made, and that regulation, therefore, will be subject 145 to being amended, when necessary, in a way that relevant Ministers of the relevant Government at the time may consider becomes appropriate.

If we were regulating by these regulations unions’ rights to engage with the Government that holds the pen on the regulations, then you might say, ‘Well, you are not really creating an objective standard because when you have a dispute with the union you could simply amend the regulations without coming to Parliament.’ That is not the case. These are rules for the recognition of trade 150 unions by third parties, by the private sector. We are going to make these rules so that they can engage in the way that they will need to engage.

The advice we have is that it may be necessary in the future to adapt these rules one way or the other. I am sure that when the trade unions look at these rules they will say they would have wished they were a little more in the direction of their responses to our consultation. I am sure 155 that when the employers’ representative organisations look at the rules and regulations they will say they wish they were more in favour of their responses to our consultation. But I think we are striking the right balance.

I think we are creating a new area of engagement. Indeed, I think it is important to remember 160 that the vast majority of employers in the private sector already recognise trade unions, and the fact I think is also important to remember is that our Constitution recognises the freedom of association. We have a written Constitution. It specifically provides for the freedom of association to be protected, so you do not need to have protection for a group of people to come together to 165 represent their interests in the context of a particular employment scenario, because it would be contrary to law for the employer to challenge the employees getting together as an association if they wished to do so and to be engaged with a union. What that does not do is bring about the collective bargaining issue, and I think this, by doing it with regulations, does that and does it in a slightly flexible way that permits an element of engagement by the Government with the unions and with the employers' representative organisations to make changes in relation to the rules that 170 will regulate their playing field – not their playing field with us, but their playing field – through regulation. If it were their playing field with us, then I think I would have insisted that the matter should be dealt with by way of primary legislation, so that if a future Government, or indeed the current Government if it were to have a dispute with the unions, wanted to change the rules of the game of our engagement with the unions and the unions' ability to engage with us, we should 175 come here and justify it to the community in a way that could be ventilated across the floor of the House, and everybody's views represented by those elected here could be heard. But this is not the regulation of our relationship with the trade unions, it is the regulation of the relationship with between the trade unions and the private sector employers, and for that reason this is the way we propose to do it.

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, just to thank the Opposition for being in favour of the part of the Act that is, as the Chief Minister calls it, the hook on which all the other legislation the Chief Minister has just presented to us will hang.

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to regulate the operation of personal light electric transporters, to amend the Traffic Act 2005 and the Crimes Act 2011 and for related purposes. The Hon. the Minister for Transport.

Minister for Transport (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to regulate the operation of personal light electric transporters, to amend the Traffic Act 2005 and the Crimes Act 2011 and for related purposes be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to regulate the operation of personal light electric transporters, to amend the Traffic Act 2005 and the Crimes Act 2011 and for related purposes be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Personal Light Electric Transporters Act 2022.

Personal Light Electric Transporters Bill 2022 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Transport (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, I move that a Bill for an Act to regulate the operation of personal light electric transporters, to amend the Traffic Act 2005 and the Crimes Act 2011 and for related purposes be read a second time.

The purpose of this Bill is captured in the descriptive title I have just read, formally known as the long title. Essentially, this Bill brings personal light electric transporters (PLETs) within a sound legal framework.

The Bill covers personal light electric transporters and creates a framework that allows them to operate legally and safely and only by individuals 17 years of age or older. The Bill also makes some amendments to the Traffic Act 2005.

In drafting this legislation, we have taken into consideration the views of the technical experts and the public. We have consulted widely and thoroughly. The consultation process included the May 2018 consultation paper. Secondly, through the issuance of a Command Paper in May 2020 by my colleague Minister Daryanani, then the Minister for Transport, and also, throughout the whole drafting process, with extensive input from transport officials within my Ministry liaising closely with the insurance industry regarding the Bill's effect on said industry.

I should mention that this proposed legislation is not based on the law in any other jurisdiction, and in fact few countries have actually taken legislative steps in this respect, although many, we believe, are currently in the drafting process.

The Traffic Act would naturally see PLETs classified as motor vehicles as they are powered by a motor, but it is well accepted worldwide that PLETs are not equal to motor vehicles, neither are PLETs bicycles or motorcycles. Therefore, the Bill defines a PLET by reference to a schedule.

Amongst other things, a PLET will be fitted with a speed-limitation device that curtails its speed to no more than 25kmph. Any PLET that has had its speed-limitation device tampered with or is designed to travel at speeds beyond 25kmph will be strictly prohibited. This will include any PLET made available for hire or supply – or to offer to do so – that has had the speed-limitation device tampered with or removed.

PLETs will only be allowed to operate on the road and in bicycle lanes, where present, and users must be at least 17 years of age. Furthermore, users will not be permitted to tow other similar devices or carry another person. PLET users will need to wear appropriate protective headgear, deemed an important part of keeping the use of these devices safe.

The Bill will also provide powers for those who stop a person operating or transporting on reasonable suspicion that they are contravening the legislation. It also requires a person to provide their name and address and creates an offence for users who give a false name or address.

Moving to penalties, the legislation sets a penalty of level 3 fines – currently £1,000 – for all offences under the legislation, with the offence of modifying a PLET by removing the speed-limitation device or selling such device also attracting a potential custodial sentence. Meanwhile, the Bill allows for the issuing of fixed penalty notices of £300 for all offences.

Much of the delay in bringing this Bill to Parliament has been as a result of the intention to make insurance compulsory for PLETs, but this has been impossible as a result of insurance providers not having a suitable product to offer Gibraltar. Nevertheless, it is the intention of 245 Government to consider the matter of compulsory insurance if and when such a product were to become available in Gibraltar in the future. The Bill will allow the Minister to make regulations, including, specifically, regulations relating to making compulsory insurance a requirement for PLETs.

250 The Bill also amends the Traffic Act 2005 so as to exclude PLETs expressly from the definition of motor vehicles and defines PLETs in the Act. It also amends regulation-making powers to also apply to PLETs. In doing so, it will be possible to make amendments to, amongst other things, the control of traffic regulations and the Vehicles (Construction Equipment and Maintenance)

255 Regulations to provide that the rules on traffic control, such as rules on indicating and overtaking, also apply to PLETs, as well as ensuring that they are fitted with both front-facing white and rear-facing red suitable lights, or alternatively that operators carry suitable lights on their person. It is also intended to amend the Prohibition of Use of Mobile Phones While Driving Regulations 2010 to ensure that users of PLETs do not use a mobile telephone while riding.

260 The amendments to the Traffic Act 2005 have the effect of creating offences equivalent to the careless operation and reckless or dangerous operation offences of the Act which apply to motor vehicles and bicycles already. The current wording of the Traffic Act – specifically section 75(2), which sets penalties – indicates that the intention was to extend section 62 to bicycles. That is to say there was an intention to make it an offence to ride a bicycle whilst under the influence of drink or drugs. The amendment to section 75 corrects an omission in the current wording of the Traffic Act to ensure that the intention is properly reflected. In addition, this amendment goes 265 further, with a view to ensuring the safety of every road user and pedestrian and makes it an offence to operate a PLET and a bicycle whilst under the influence of drink or drugs, or whilst over the prescribed limit. It also provides the ability, as part of law enforcement, to be able to test both PLETs and bicycle riders at the roadside.

270 Finally, the schedule sets out the characteristics of a PLET. The schedule can be amended by regulations so as to accommodate changes to the nature of these devices and their evolving technology.

Mr Speaker, I have given notice that I will, at the Committee Stage, move an amendment to the Bill to insert a new clause 13. This amends the Insurance (Motor Vehicles) (Third Party Risk) Act 1986 to amend the definition of ‘motor vehicle’ in line with the amendment being made to 275 the Traffic Act 2005, namely to exclude personal light electric transporters from the definition.

The amendment also inserts a definition of ‘personal light electric transporter’ by reference to the Personal Light Electric Transporters Act, and given that the Bill will take effect as a 2023 and not 2022 Act, the amendment reflects that. An amendment to clause 1 of the Bill and clause 280 11(2)(b) of the Bill are also required.

285 Mr Speaker, the Government recognises that PLETs are a reality in today’s modern cities, and although their future is not certain, it is important to amend our laws to include these devices. Gibraltar, like so many other jurisdictions, has seen the arrival of these modern devices marketed as a greener alternative to the motor vehicle, yet without the necessary legal frameworks to be able to manage, control or police them. PLETs are known to be extensively used by cross-border workers, but are also starting to be used by the local community. We also recognise that we need to strike the right balance between safety, smart technology and providing and promoting environmentally friendly transport with meaningful regulation. I believe that the proposed regulation strikes that balance.

290 Mr Speaker, I commend this Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, again, I rise on this Second Reading because this Bill would have 295 been taken by my friend Mr Phillips, but unfortunately he had a medical issue today.

300 The Opposition has said on a number of occasions that we are supportive of the regulation of electrical scooters – I will not call them PLETs or the longer name. We are supportive of regulation. Clearly they are here, as the Minister has said, and not only are they here, their growth is exponential – they are on pavements and they are everywhere, and sometimes they are also ... I think I had occasion to say to the hon. Member in an aside – I think it was him – that I was nearly run over by one in the middle of a pedestrianised Main Street. Clearly regulation is necessary and enforcement should follow, so we are supportive of the principles of it.

305 In relation to the particular power that there is on insurance, again our position is that to the extent that it is possible, all efforts should be made for there to be an insurance regime in this respect.

Mr Speaker: The hon. Member wishes to respond?

310 Hon. D A Feetham: I wish to declare an interest. I think it is proper that I declare an interest in that I have read the Bill and made, on behalf of the Motor Insurance Bureau, which is a client of mine in my professional capacity, suggestions in relation to this Bill to the Government. Therefore, I think it is proper that I should abstain from voting in relation to this because I have had an involvement in a professional capacity.

315 May I add, Mr Speaker, that of course I have not been paid by the Government for any of the comments that have been made? None was expected. It is just on behalf of my own client that I have made suggestions and amendments to this Bill before it was presented.

Mr Speaker: Does the mover of the Bill wish to reply?

320 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, simply to thank the Members for their support. Obviously they will be supporting the Bill.

325 Just to make a comment regarding the pavements, in fact it has been illegal for these scooters to ride on pavements for quite some years. I think it was 2019 or 2018 when we legislated that we should not allow these scooters on the pavement. As you rightly say, they are coming in droves and they are extremely difficult to control, but at least this gives the enforcement bodies powers to be able to police them effectively.

Thank you.

330 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to regulate the operation of personal light electric transporters, to amend the Traffic Act 2005 and the Crimes Act 2011 and for related purposes be read a second time. Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to provide for the regulation of the law relating to adoption and for connected purposes be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.
350

Clerk: The Adoption Act 2022.

Adoption Bill 2022 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the Bill for an Adoption Act 2022 be read a second time.

355 This Bill promotes greater use of adoption, aims to improve the performance of the Care Agency and, more importantly, puts children and their well-being at the centre of the adoption process.

This Bill modernises Gibraltar's adoption law and the adoption service and, I believe, will promote the greater use of adoption.

360 The Bill replaces the current Adoption Act, which commenced in 1951 and has only been amended three times since then.

The Bill will affect all adoptions and arrangements for the adoption of children in Gibraltar and all adoption applications from persons resident and settled in Gibraltar who seek to adopt children living abroad.

365 The Bill contains an overarching provision that will apply whenever a court or the Care Agency is coming to any decision relating to the adoption of a child. This includes any decision by the court about whether or not to dispense with parental consent to adoption or to make a contact order in respect of a child. The paramount consideration of the court or Care Agency in any decision is the child's welfare. The welfare test will be brought in line with that of the Children Act, with the important addition that the court or Care Agency must consider the child's welfare throughout his or her life and that any delay is likely to prejudice the child's welfare.

In recognition that adoption may have lifelong implications, the court or Care Agency must apply the welfare checklist set out in the Bill in determining the best interest of a child when making any decision relating to adoption. This is modelled on the equivalent provisions of the Children Act but is tailored to address the particular circumstances of adoption.

380 Regard must be had to the child's ascertainable wishes and feelings about the decision having regard to the child's age and understanding, to his or her particular physical or educational needs, and, if applicable, to the relationship the child has with his or her relatives, the prospect of and benefits to the child of this relationship continuing, the ability of the relatives to provide the child with a secure home and meet the child's needs and their views concerning the decision relating to the adoption of the child.

Part 2 of the Bill underpins some important areas of policy dealing with adoption support services and independent reviews of certain determinations by the Care Agency such as the assessment for adopted children and their adoptive parents and provides a mechanism to assist them in accessing adoption support services. These assessments will speak to other government functions such as education and health services, for example, where the needs of such services are identified with the aim of identifying the most efficient, co-ordinated package of support to help adoption succeed.

Part 3 of the Bill deals with placements for adoption and adoption orders. The Bill provides that the Care Agency may only place a child for adoption with the consent of the parent or guardian under an order made by the court. Provision is also made for who is to have parental responsibility for the child and the other consequences of placement with consent and placement orders. The intention here is to ensure that key decisions are taken early in the adoption process, with court involvement where necessary. This will provide greater certainty and stability for children by dealing with consent to placement for adoption before they have been placed and minimise the uncertainty for prospective adopters. The Care Agency may only place a child for adoption with prospective adopters where the parent of the child has consented to the placement or where it has obtained a placement order. 'Placement' has been given an extended meaning under the Bill, covering both placing a child with prospective adopters and, where the child is already placed with people for other purposes, leaving the child with them as approved prospective adopters. The Bill enables a parent who consents to his or her child being placed for adoption by the Care Agency to give consent at the same time to the making of the future adoption order.

The Bill intends to align adoption law with the Children Act. The same threshold for intervention in family life will apply where the Care Agency seeks authority to place a child for adoption without parental consent as applies where the Care Agency seeks to take a child into care under a care order.

The Bill provides that where an application for a placement order is pending, the child is a looked-after child for the purposes of the Children Act until the application is determined. If a placement order is made, the child continues to count as looked after.

The Bill makes provision for applications for contact in respect of children placed for adoption and where the Care Agency is authorised to place a child for adoption with parental consent or under a placement order. Where the Care Agency is authorised to place a child for adoption or a child is placed for adoption who is less than six weeks old, any contact order under section 25 of the Children Act ceases to have that effect. There may be cases where it is inappropriate for contact to take place, even though provided for under an order.

The Bill enables the Care Agency to refuse contact for a period of no more than seven days if it is satisfied that it is appropriate to do so in order to safeguard the child's welfare.

The Bill makes provision in relation to the removal of children who are or may be placed for adoption by the Care Agency to ensure that they are only removed from placements by authorised people in the appropriate manner. Where a parent withdraws his or her consent to a placement, the Care Agency must return the child within seven days if the child has not yet been placed for adoption with parental consent with prospective adopters, or the child is placed and either the child is less than six weeks old or the Care Agency has at no time been authorised to place the child for adoption.

The Bill also deals with cases where the prospective adopters want to return the child, or the Care Agency has decided that the child should not remain with prospective adopters.

The Bill also covers restrictions on the removal of the child in non-Agency cases, such as where the child has not been placed for adoption by the Care Agency. These situations may include adoptions by the partner of a parent, cases where foster parents wish to adopt a child placed with them and adoptions by relatives and private foster parents. Where a Care Agency foster parent has given notice of intention to adopt, which they may do once the child has lived with them for one year, then the child may only be removed with the permission of the court by the Care Agency or other person, or if the child is voluntarily accommodated by a person who has parental responsibility for the child.

435 The Bill makes provision for what is to happen when the child is removed or there are reasonable grounds for believing that a person intends to remove a child or a child is withheld and not returned. If a person intentionally obstructs an authorised person exercising the power of removal, he or she commits an offence.

440 The Bill sets out the period a child must live with the applicant before they can apply for an adoption order. The Bill sets out conditions which must be satisfied before an adoption order can be made where the child has a parent or guardian. One of two conditions must be satisfied: that each parent consents to the making of the adoption order or has given advance consent to the making of the adoption order and has not withdrawn that consent and does not oppose the making of an adoption order or that the parents' consent should be dispensed with. Where the 445 parent has given advance consent to the adoption, he or she may only oppose the making of the adoption order with the permission of the court. The second condition is that the child has been placed for adoption by the Care Agency with the prospective adopters who are applying for the order and either the child was placed for adoption with the consent of each parent and the consent of the mother was given when the child was at least six weeks old, or under the placement
450 order no parent opposes the making of the adoption order. An adoption order may not be made in relation to a person who is or has been married or who has attained the age of 19.

The Bill provides that an application for an adoption order may be made by a couple or one person and the condition as to domicile or habitual residence is satisfied. An application for adoption order may only be made if the person to be adopted has not reached 18 by the date of 455 the application. An application for adoption order by a couple may only be made if both of them have reached the age of 21. However, where one of the couple is the mother or the father of the child to be adopted, an application may be made if that person is 18 or over and the other person is 21 or over.

The Bill provides that an application may be made by one person who is 21 and is not married.
460 In certain circumstances, an adoption application may be made by one person who is married. A partner of a natural parent, which includes a person married to the parent, may adopt the child of that natural parent. This means that the parent is no longer required to make a joint application to adopt his own child with his partner, as is presently the case in respect of step-parent adoptions; a very welcome proposal.

465 Part 3 of the Bill also introduces new provisions on the information that the Care Agency must keep in relation to a person's adoption, the information that it must disclose to adopted adults on request, the information that courts must release to adopted adults on request and the information that the Care Agency may release to adopted adults, birth parents and others. These provisions cover the two types of information held, protected information and information which 470 is not protected.

The Bill establishes a new system for access to protected information about adopted persons and others involved in their adoption. Under these provisions, while the registrar has a duty to maintain the Adopted Children Register and the Adoption Contact Register, the Care Agency will be the main gateway for access to this information.

475 The Bill provides for the disclosure of information held by the Agency which is not defined as protected information. This will enable the Care Agency to disclose this information to any person for the purposes of the Care Agency's functions. This could, for example, be background information about the child's progress to be disclosed to the child's birth family without disclosing the child's new identity or whereabouts.

480 The Bill allows for the provision of the disclosure of information held by the Care Agency and courts to adopted adults.

The Bill importantly envisages counselling to be available to an adopted person if he or she wishes to access it.

485 Part 4 of the Bill provides for the status of adopted children, thereby making clear how they are treated in law.

Part 5 of the Bill deals with registration issues surrounding adoption and the duties placed on the Registrar. There is a duty on the Registrar to maintain the Adoption and Parental Order Register and provide for entries to be made in the register. The Adoption and Parental Order Register is not open to public inspection or search. There will also be a duty on the Registrar to maintain an Adoption Contact Register. The Adoption Contact Register is a register in two parts designed to facilitate contact between adopted persons and their birth relatives where both parties have expressed a wish for such contact.

495 Part 6 of the Bill deals with adoptions with a foreign element and makes provision to regulate intercountry adoption. The Bill places restrictions on Gibraltar residents bringing or causing someone else to bring a child habitually resident outside Gibraltar into Gibraltar with the intention of adopting the child in Gibraltar, unless the person complies with prescribed requirements and meets prescribed conditions.

The Bill sets out the prohibition of certain payments or rewards in connection with the adoption of a child. The Bill, however, provides that payments may be made in exceptional circumstances. The intention is to allow payments to be made for reasonable expenses such as legal and medical expenses in relation to an adoption or for reasonably incurred travel and accommodation expenses where a child is being taken out of Gibraltar for the purpose of adoption.

500 The Minister may establish and maintain a register to be known as the Adoption Act Register, which will contain details of children who are suitable for adoption and prospective adopters who have been approved to adopt a child. This provision may be used, for example, to enable the register to record information about the stability of adoptive placements.

Schedule 1 makes provision for an entry of certain adoptions in the Adoption and Parental Order Register in accordance with a direction in the adoption order. Schedule 1 also makes provision for the amendment of orders and rectification of entries and markings in the Adopted Children Register and Register of Live Births.

Schedule 2 places a duty on the Registrar to supply an adopted person, on application and subject to certain conditions, with information to enable him or her to obtain a certified copy of the record of his or her birth.

515 Mr Speaker, in summary, the Bill aligns adoption law with the relevant provisions of the Children Act to ensure that the child's welfare is the paramount consideration in all decisions relating to adoption; places a duty to continue maintaining an adoption service, which must include making and participating in arrangements for the adoption of children and for the provision of adopting support services; provides a new right to an assessment of needs for adoption support services for adoptive families and others; enables the Minister to establish an independent review mechanism in relation to determinations made by the Care Agency; makes provision for the process of adoption and the conditions for the making of adoption orders, including new measures for placement for adoption with consent and placement orders; provides for adoption orders to be made in favour of single people, married couples and unmarried couples; provides for a new and more consistent approach to access to information held in the Care Agency records about adoptions which take place after the Bill becomes law, by ensuring that the release of sensitive information about adopted people and their birth relatives is protected and that its disclosure is subject to strict safeguards; provides for the Care Agency to have a role in assisting adopted adults to obtain information about their adoption and to facilitate contact between them and their birth relatives where the person was adopted before the Act becomes law; provides additional restrictions on bringing a child into Gibraltar in connection with adoption, aimed at ensuring that Gibraltar residents follow the appropriate procedures where they adopt a child overseas or bring a child into Gibraltar for the purposes of adoption; prohibits certain payments in connection with adoption; makes provision enabling the Minister to establish an Adoption Act Register to suggest matches between children waiting to be adopted and approved prospective adopters; and finally, makes provision obliging courts to draw up timetables for resolving adoption cases without delay.

Mr Speaker, for all the reasons above, I commend this Bill to the House.

540 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. Damon Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I rise in my hon. and learned Friend's stead. For the reasons the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition indicated earlier, he is unable to attend this afternoon. This has had two effects. I have not had much time to consider the Bill. I have considered as much of it as possible and as diligently as possible, but the effect is that I have not been able to write to the hon. Member with some of the points that I would have made, which is normally my style, as other Hon. Ministers know. Because we run our affairs partly in a parliamentary way, we do not give enough time, I think, to these things, to consider them in committee and all the rest of it, where I am able to advance suggestions which sometimes the Ministers accept, sometimes they do not, but we can reach an agreed position and maybe even in our speeches record what we have discussed for the benefit of Hansard. So I would ask the hon. Member to bear with me in that sense, and I have explained the reasons why.

555 As far as the principles are concerned, I think they are very laudable. This is a hefty piece of legislation. As she rightly and accurately points out, it is a wholesale replacement of the 1951 Act, which she says – I do not know – was only amended a few times, and given the passage of time, just for that reason it is a piece of legislation which I think required an overview and a reformed position, which is what I think has been achieved with this Bill.

560 The three points she mentioned which I think are relevant are that it aims to improve the performance of the Care Agency, to modernise the adoption law and to promote greater use of adoption. All of those three aims, I think, are highly laudable and something which certainly we support and commend her for bringing this initiative forward and putting it finally on the statute book. I am sure it is going to be welcomed by many people who are either in the throes of considering adoption or may consider adoption in the future.

565 The one point I would ask her to consider in terms of a broad point is whether it achieves ... because it was not clear ... it did not strike me when I was going through the provisions that ... I assume it is not something that is necessarily obvious from a reading of a piece of legislation, whether the system ... The limited experience I have professionally from when I was exposed to it – because I did it for a friend and I went through the process – is how bureaucratic the whole thing was, and as a result of that experience I realised, from speaking anecdotally to other people, how expensive it was in terms of legal fees because of the time spent by lawyers in making the applications. It results in hefty legal bills. It has always struck me that there is something immoral about the process that you have somebody, for example, who is fostering a child, leading to adoption and takes that massive step to adopt that child and give that child a better life and also has to incur many thousands of pounds in legal costs and legal bills. The point I make about that is whether she is able to say whether any of that will be streamlined so that we have a cheaper process and a more effective and efficient process leading to adoption.

575 Mr Speaker, again, I ask the House to bear with me, just going through the points as I go through the pages. There is a definition here for 'agreement':

includes an arrangement (whether or not enforceable);

580 This is a theme that arises in some of the points I will be making. It is not clear from my perspective – but again, it could be because I do not have any professional experience in relation to this – what that, in fact, means. There is no definition of what 'an arrangement' is. All it says is '(whether or not enforceable)'. I would like her, if she could, to give me an explanation in relation to that.

585 In clause 3(3) – we are still dealing with the interpretation clauses – there is a reference to what ‘a couple’ means and it provides three different avenues. The third one is:

two people (whether of different sexes or the same sex) living as partners – and these are the words I would like her to focus on – in an enduring family relationship.

That may be borrowed from different legislation. Now, as I am speaking, I am thinking about it, but it is not defined in this particular statute. As I said, that is a theme I find, and maybe she can explain it all by saying it actually refers to different statutory provisions in different Acts.

I take her, Mr Speaker, to clause 4(1), which, in effect, sets out the test. It says:

Whenever a court or the Agency is coming to a decision – and it is important here, I think, to emphasise that this test applies to both the court or the Agency coming to a decision – relating to the adoption of a child, the paramount consideration of the court or the Agency must be the child’s welfare, throughout the child’s life which I think she made an allusion to in her speech.

If I can take her to the same clause, clause 4, but subclause (4), it says:

In coming to a decision relating to the adoption of a child, a court or the Agency

– once again, both – must always consider the whole range of powers available to it in the child’s case whether under this Act or the Children Act 2009;

But then it is only the court – so there is a separation here between the court and the Agency – that applies this test in its decision-making process:

and the court must not make any order under this Act unless it considers that making the order would be better for the child than not doing so.

I am not too sure that there is a massive difference between one test and the other, but I do not understand why making the order would be better for the child than not doing so only applies to the court and not to the Agency. I think it will benefit the interpretation, should it come to that, of this Act if she was able to provide an explanation for that. I have already said in my introduction that I do apologise, that in normal circumstances I would have given her notice of this issue by writing to her, but I have only come across this now, when preparing in advance of this session.

Mr Speaker, if I can take her to clause 5(3) and (4), as I see it ... Well, I will read it. It says:

As part of the adoption service, the arrangements made for the purposes of subsection (2)(b)–

(a) must extend to the provision of adoption support services to persons who are within a description designated by order by the Minister;

I would ask her there to give me some explanation as to who is being considered, because I think this is a novel provision which did not feature in the now-to-be-replaced Adoption Act 1951.

Then it says:

(b) may extend to the provision of the adoption services to other persons.

610 Again, I think as things stand now – and she can correct me if I am wrong – adoption services are provided exclusively in Gibraltar by the Care Agency, but is it the intention that that provision is going to be provided by other agencies, other entities? And if that interpretation is correct, who is she thinking of?

In relation to clause 5(4), it says:

The Minister may provide any of the requisite facilities by securing their provision by other persons who are within a description designated by order of persons who may provide the facilities in question.

615 Again, I think it is a similar point: who is going to be providing these services in respect of which the Minister, by order, would be providing facilities?

If I can then take her ... because I think it is linked to clause 9(3), which deals with voluntary adoption agencies ... It is not clear, because there is no statutory definition of that entity and I am not sure if there is any connection with the provisions that I have just referred her to.

620 Moving on, there are many references to the powers – and I have just referred to some of them specifically – that a Minister has, but then in other provisions – it may just be a drafting point, but it may be a point that she can consider in the future – it says ‘the Government shall continue’, and I wonder why that is the case. Why is it the case that as far as some provisions are concerned the powers rest with the Government, and yet as far as other provisions are concerned – in fact, I would hasten to add, most of the provisions – relate to the powers of the 625 Minister to give directions and orders and things like that?

Moving swiftly along – and this, in fairness to her, is a point that could be raised, but I would ask her to flag it. Maybe she can look at it at Committee Stage. In clause 8(1)(c) – this is simply a grammatical point – it says ‘any person who the Agency are aware ...’ I think it should say is, as opposed to are aware ‘is a parent of an adopted child’.

630 This may be something, as an Equality Minister, that will attract her attention. There are also various references – I will not take her through them, but there are some references in terms there is gender neutrality by reference to ‘he’, and in some cases she adopts that style and in other cases it is ‘he’ or ‘she’. So maybe there should be some more uniformity in relation to that. Again, I have spotted some of them, but I am sure I have not spotted all of them, and I do not 635 intend to go through them for the purposes of this contribution.

In clause 10(1) there is a reference to a qualifying determination. I would ask her to explain what this is, as again I have not been able to identify in the time that I have had available any statutory ... Yes, it is clause 10(1) and it talks about a qualifying determination. It is in the middle of the clause. I will not read the entirety of the clause. It is not very long, but I do not want to dwell 640 on that too much, other than ask her, if she can, to offer an explanation in relation to that.

In clause 12(4) – again, this I think links in with the point I made earlier that this may be as a result of a cross-referencing of legislation that one needs to do, but again it is not necessarily clear that the Bill asks you to do that. It is suggestive of assumed knowledge. I give her another example, and if she could assist in the interpretation of it ... It talks about a mandatory order in clause 12(4).
645 Is that an order in respect of which an application has to be made to the Supreme Court, as opposed to the Magistrates Court? Again, it is not clear.

I think I have now understood it, but in clause 13(4) it says:

An officer of the Agency may only be so authorised with the consent of the Agency.

I am assuming that that needs to be read in conjunction with clause 13(3), which says:

An inspection under this section must be conducted by a person authorised by the Minister.

650 I am assuming that if that person is an officer of the Agency, although the Minister orders that officer – him or her – she or he can only conduct the inspection with the consent of the Agency. Again, it is not very clear. They look like standalone provisions, but the only way you can interpret them intelligibly is if you read them together.

Again, this is a grammatical issue: in clause 13(5)(b) it says ‘which they think fit’, and perhaps it should be ‘which he thinks fit’.

655 Mr Speaker, if I can take her to clause 15(1) – I know she is taking a note of all this, so I hope the speed is okay – this is an important section in the sense that it is cross-referred to further along in the Bill and it talks about consent given by parents and guardians. Consent is not therein defined, and I had no objection to that immediately but there is, I think, a helpful definition of consent in clause 49(9)(a), and I wonder why there is a helpful definition of consent in that clause, 660 but not one in clause 15. Perhaps the solution is to cross-refer clause 15 to clause 49.

A similar point to clause 15(3)(b) when it talks about a placement order: again, ‘placement order’ is not defined, yet there is a definition – again a helpful definition ... I think it would assist those who need to interpret this to cross-refer that clause 15(3)(b) to clause 17 because there is a full definition. Indeed, clause 17 deals with placement orders in a lot of detail.

665 If I can take her to clause 16(2) by way of flagging clause 16(2)(a). In the second sentence it says ‘may be consent’. I assume ‘be’ can be deleted, as indeed it should be deleted in the following subparagraph (b). Again, it says ‘may be consent to adoption’ and it should be ‘may consent to adoption’.

The other references are to ‘care order’ and ‘looked after’. Again, I think that is nomenclature that somebody who is involved in these matters would immediately understand, but – the same point – it is not specifically defined in this particular piece of legislation.

Mr Speaker, could I ask for some assistance also in clarification, if I may, before I go to clause 20, which is what I was going to go to on to now? There is also, I think, an error in clause 19(5)(b) when it refers to ‘the authority’. I think, if there is going to be consistency, there should 675 be a reference to the Agency with a capital A, because that is defined.

Moving along to clause 20, again, in subclauses (2) and (3) I would ask for an explanation, because it basically says at section 20(1) – clause 20(1) at this stage:

This section applies while—

- (a) a child is placed for adoption under section 15 or the Agency is authorised to place a child for adoption under that section; or
- (b) a placement order is in force in respect of a child.

Then it goes on:

- (2) Parental responsibility for the child is given to the Agency.

680 – presumably in those circumstances, I have taken that to mean. Subclause (3) seems like a standalone provision, but I think it needs to be read along with the other provisions. It says:

- (3) While the child is placed with prospective adopters, parental responsibility is given to them.

I just do not know how those two correlate to each other, and I would ask her to explain that, certainly for my benefit and for the benefit of Hansard.

685 Again, there are references to prohibited steps orders, specific issue orders, supervision orders and child assessment orders in clause 24(3), which again, without wishing to labour the point or repeat myself, it basically makes the same point.

In clause 29(1) it is the same issue, which I would ask her to amend, and I think I would find agreement across the floor of the House, where again I think there is a mistaken reference to ‘the authority’ and it should be a reference to ‘the Agency’.

690 Mr Speaker, can I ask the Hon. Minister to go to clause 31(5)? I think she will understand immediately, without necessarily going through it in any detail. When there is a reference to ‘the people concerned’, I think that ought to be a reference to P – capital P – which has been defined in the clause. I think that makes sense, from my understanding and interpretation of it, and I think it would, going forward, also assist anybody reading it – if I am right, that is. If I am not correct in that interpretation, then I will be grateful for her explanation as to why that is referenced from the people concerned, as opposed to capital P, which is, as I said earlier, previously defined.

695 In clause 33 – again, it could be the same point, I am not sure, but I would ask for her assistance in relation to this – there is a reference to ‘Agency foster parents’, but then in the following subclauses there is a reference to ‘the foster parents’, and because there is no statutory definition in relation to that, I would ask her to please provide an explanation as to why that is the case. So again, whether there is a some sort of cross referencing.

700 Mr Speaker, I think this is important and I need to go through it. I know it sounds laborious. It is Friday afternoon and I hear some Members yawning, but I think it is important for the sake of the Hansard ... the yawns will not be heard, or indeed the comments being made from a sedentary position.

705 Can I take her to clause 39(3)? Can I ask her whether the notice that is referred to is in fact the definition that is referred to in the previous subclause, which talks about notice of intention to adopt? Can I ask her to clarify that and if she agrees with me on whether that added wording, given that it is a defined term, can be included in that subclause?

710 This is a point that I discussed very briefly – and it will be my final point, Mr Speaker – with Mr Feetham in relation to ... I must confess that this is a part of the Bill that I did not have an opportunity to consider in any detail just before coming here, but there is a reference, if I can take her to the very beginning, to the extra-jurisdictional effect, as I see it. It is in the interpretation clause 3. It is the final one, which is subclause (8), where it says:

References to adoption are to the adoption of persons, wherever they may be habitually resident, effected under the law of any country or territory, whether within or outside Gibraltar.

715 I am sure there is a reason for that. It just struck me as odd that there should be an extra-jurisdictional effect of this legislation, but it could be because it is relevant to the provisions that I did not get a chance to properly consider, which are at the end and which she referred to during the course of her contribution – but if she could just confirm that that my understanding is correct.

720 Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member ...? The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

725 Just so the Minister does not have to respond twice, because it is just a discrete point in relation to one section, if the Minister looks at section 75, the Minister will find the references to restrictions on bringing children into Gibraltar. This section deals with a situation where somebody wants to adopt a child he has brought into Gibraltar from abroad. The reason why I focused on this is because I, myself, have been involved in assisting two constituents who have brought children from abroad for adoption in Gibraltar. Part of the process was abroad, part of the process in Gibraltar.

730 The Minister will see from subsection (5) that a person intending to bring, or to cause another to bring, a child into Gibraltar in circumstances where this section applies must apply to the Agency for an assessment of their suitability and give the Agency any information it may require, and then, under subsection (6) the Minister makes regulations. I would urge the Minister to take this course, which is that when the Minister publishes regulations appertaining to this section, she also includes any requirements in relation to civil status. In my experience, where there have been ... not problems, but blockages, let’s say, of these types of adoptions, it has not been on the Social Services side, it has been on the Care Agency side, it has been on the civil status side, and indeed, on one of those occasions the Chief Minister very kindly intervened in order to essentially help the process along. For the sake of ensuring that people know where they stand, those regulations should be as all-encompassing as possible, not just the Care Agency requirements but also the requirements in relation to civil status.

740 I know this may be difficult because you are talking about an Agency and you are also talking about a Government Department in civil status, but perhaps a formula can be found in order to ensure that there is a funnelling towards one decision-making process, so that the process can be as efficient as possible.

745 Mr Speaker, those are just the comments that I would make.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak? The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, two of the areas that hon. Members opposite have raised deal with areas of my direct ministerial responsibility, one public finance, and the other one the civil status issues that have been raised by the Hon. Mr Feetham a moment ago.

The CSRO have an obligation to ensure that all those who seek to register as British citizens or who seek to register as residents in Gibraltar are entitled to do so under our laws. I seem to recall that in your long and illustrious career in the Civil Service you spent some time in that department and you probably know its operation better than me. Given my responsibilities for that department, I have seen that the people of that department operate with a particular diligence in ensuring compliance with legislation, in particular when we are dealing with people coming from outside into Gibraltar – in other words, those who are not already permanently resident in Gibraltar and can show their residence in Gibraltar – but when we are dealing with a person who is being imported, in the best sense of the word, into Gibraltar we have to exercise particular diligence. That can happen on two particular types of occasions, although it can happen on other types of occasions. One is when a person seeks to marry an individual from outside of Gibraltar, and the second, of course, in cases of what we might call international adoption.

In the first instance, when I was elected there was almost a complete bar, as a matter of policy, in respect of people being able to marry those from outside Gibraltar and then bring them to Gibraltar. It was a very high hurdle. I took the view, which was then translated also in relation to our view in respect of marriages between all sexes on an equal basis, that the Government should not act in a way that is a bar to people falling in love, and therefore we asked the CSRO to be more discerning about how they dealt with this issue in a way that I think has now dealt with that issue.

770 When it comes to adoption, which is the issue the Hon. Mr Feetham raised and the reason why I gave all of that background, one has to be particularly careful because a third party who is of age and is coming to Gibraltar to marry or is marrying a Gibraltarian abroad and is coming to reside in Gibraltar can express for themselves whether they are in that marriage because they wish to be or whether they do not wish to be subject to all the issues of abuse that there might be, psychological or otherwise. A child, however, is not necessarily able to express to the satisfaction of the authorities whether or not he or she wishes to be adopted. Indeed, the child might not even be able to speak yet. Of course, those who are pursuing an international adoption are invariably – I will not say most often, almost invariably – doing something which is extraordinarily positive for that child and they are doing it out of a wholesome desire to help and of love, nascent or otherwise, but the protection that there must be of that child's interests includes the process which CSRO is a part of, and this Bill also is a huge part of ensuring is dealt with properly at a judicial or quasi-judicial level.

780 So CSRO have to be very careful. Mr Feetham asked me to become involved and review matters from a policy perspective also, and I hope that I was able to assist in that case, as I have in others. It is nonetheless the Government's view that making the gateway bigger is not necessarily the right way to protect children, that we must continue to exercise the controls that we exercise, so that should there be an individual who is not pursuing an international adoption for the right reasons, or where the international adoption, although being pursued for the right reasons, is not

 hugely important for the future of that child; even if properly ring fenced in Gibraltar, they have to be able to go outside with an adoption that is going to stand scrutiny outside of Gibraltar – we have to be very careful before making that in any way less rigorous. Rigorous should not be onerous, rigorous should not be difficult, but rigorous must be rigorous. I hope that addresses the issue that the hon. Gentleman has raised.

795 In relation to the issue of public finance that was raised by the Hon. Mr Bossino, it is this. He talked about the cost of adoption procedures involving lawyers. Of course, here the only guilty party is the lawyers, because they are the ones who raise the bill – and I am one of them too. But the Government has taken the view, led in great measure by the Hon. Minister for Equality, who was pioneering when it came to the issue of fostering and we did a lot of work in pushing 800 fostering – as Minister for Social Services, as she then was – that we did not want to do anything that stood in the way of a fostering that was going well becoming an adoption, and indeed we also wanted to help those who went down the international adoption route and where all that had to be dealt with in the context of CSRO procedures had been dealt with etc.

805 And so the Government, in spending public money – something for which we are routinely criticised by Members opposite – one of the things that we have done, which they did not do and which I think they should continue to do if they ever form a government in Gibraltar, is to continue to spend money in funding the cost of adoption, in particular in cases where the individual being fostered and then adopted is a child in care, but also in other instances by way of a grant to those who are pursuing the adoption, so that they can meet the legal fees. That is something we have 810 done. That is something that has increased the cost to the public purse on a recurrent basis. It is not waste, it is not corrupt, it is not any of the things we are accused of doing when we spend public money, which hon. Members are wrong to point to. This is the right way to use public money if only ... Let me just give you this headline. If the adoption goes well and the child who is fostered is taken out of public care and into a family home where he is cared for by parents, 815 adoptive or foster, we stand a much greater chance that in the long run that person will not be somebody who needs our long-term attention through the courts, the Prison, social care etc. It is the right thing to do, and the amount of money that we spend, maybe a few thousand pounds – they do not like it when we spend public money – maybe even more, is an excellent investment in the future of that Gibraltarian that will keep him away from potentially us spending a lot more 820 money on him or her in the future.

Mr Speaker I hope I have dealt with the issue the hon. Gentleman has raised and made clear that the Government remains committed to the funding of those issues so that those who do this community the huge service of fostering, who open their homes as they open their hearts to these children, should enjoy our support, not just morally but also financially.

825 Mr Speaker: The hon. the mover of the Bill.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Mr Bossino opposite for his praise in respect of the legislation, in that he recognises how substantive the legislation is and 830 of course recognises that it is a wholesale review. There was significant praise for this change at the beginning of his speech and I thank him for that.

I did not entirely understand his preamble, where he expressed that it was a shame he had not had sufficient time to consider this Bill when it was published in October. I understand that Mr Phillips is not here, and that is understandable and it is regrettable that he is not here. I would 835 like to make the point, however, that whereas the Members opposite do hold shadow portfolios, when it comes to Parliament questions there is no limit to that shadow portfolio and therefore I do not see how that does not extend when it comes to this. In any event, I appreciate the hon.
 Gentleman has not looked at this matter in depth and I will deal with the points that he has made.
 The points he has made are not really points of significant substance. A lot of the points he has 840 made deal with typos and such issues and I will deal with those at the Committee Stage, but I will go through the other points where he has sought clarification.

The first point was in relation to bureaucracy and expense, and the Chief Minister has dealt with that. In practice, the change that this new legislation would make would be particularly in relation to children in care, because applications for adoption would be made by the Care Agency, who hold the children in care, and therefore the lion's share of any legal costs in any event would be borne by the state through the Care Agency. So that makes that significant change in that respect. But as the Chief Minister said, even before this legislation we introduced a practice in 2012 where the Government offered grants for people in situations where they wanted to adopt, because it is that important. By doing it in this way, it places an emphasis and, in a way, encourages that adoption going forward is adoption of children from Gibraltar who are in care in Gibraltar, and that changes the dynamic pre-2011, where a lot of the adoptions were intercountry adoptions and children in care in Gibraltar remained in care in Gibraltar. That will change that emphasis for the benefit of all of us, I would say.

Mr Speaker, he asked about section 3(3) and wanted clarification on the expression 'in an enduring family relationship'. This is taken from the UK equivalent and this will have been tested in the UK.

When it comes to clause 4(4), this is a reflection of how adoptions are now to be streamlined going forward.

When he asked about why there is a reference only to the court, it is because only a court can make an adoption order. The application is presented by the Care Agency, the application of the welfare checklist is obviously made by the court and the Care Agency, but an order for adoption can only be made by a court. It is very clear in my understanding of the legislation; I hope that he now sees how it is so clear.

The hon. Gentleman then went on to refer to clause 5(3) and spoke about the adoption services. He raised these questions as to whether someone would be providing a service. I would refer him to clause 3(1) and the interpretation. It very clearly says:

'adoption service' means the services maintained by the Government under section 5(1);

so it is very much the intention that the Care Agency continues to deal with these. The way it works in practice is that the Care Agency will deal with the documentation and all the preparation, but ultimately, before the matter is considered by the courts, the matter is dealt with by an adoption panel, which also includes people external to the Care Agency and includes people who are either adopters or people who have been adopted themselves so that we have the wide range of experience when considering these all-important considerations. Again, to me it is very clear what clause 5(3) says and it most certainly reflects and codifies the current practice which has been developed in great measure in the last 10 years and is now quite formalised. There has been a significant investment in training of those who make decisions on adoption, on the professional side as well as the adoption and fostering panel.

I turn to clause 10(1), where he asked about the qualifying determination. This is to quantify the determination of the prospective adopters in situations where the Care Agency believes that the prospective adopter is not suitable to adopt a child. In addition to the proposed primary legislation, I have simultaneously asked for the drafting of regulations, which will be ready by the time this is commenced and will go hand in hand. In addition to that, I have also asked for some very simple leaflets to be produced because, whereas of course we have the body of the rules and the procedure in the primary legislation, I want to ensure that everyone who is a stakeholder in this important process understands how it works and what to expect from it.

In relation to clause 13(3) and (4), his interpretation is correct, on the basis that I understand the drafting to be very clear.

The other points that he made, in relation to clause 15, are matters that we can take at the Committee Stage. Those are all drafting points that the hon. Gentleman made.

890 The substantive point he made in relation to the extra-jurisdictional adoptions is because this is looking forward and envisages Gibraltar being part of the Hague Convention.

To address the final point that the hon. Member Mr Feetham made, he would not have known at the time of my speech that I will also have commissioned the regulations and the explanatory notes to be provided to people in the system, and that will cover points ... because the whole intention of this is for the process ... We can see that this is a very substantive piece of legislation, 895 but legislation is complex to be understood by the layperson, so I want to make sure that everyone who is involved in this process fully understands what is happening.

Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to provide for the regulation 900 of the law relating to adoption and for connected purposes be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Adoption Act 2022.

Clerk: The Crime (Disorderly Behaviour Penalty Notice) Act 2022.

Crime (Disorderly Behaviour Penalty Notice) Bill 2022 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill for the Crime (Disorderly Behaviour Penalty Notice) Act 2022 be read a second time.

925 The Bill makes provision for penalty notices for disorder that will provide the Royal Gibraltar Police with a quick and effective means of dealing with low-level nuisance behaviour. The aims of the scheme contained in the Bill are to offer operational officers a quick and effective alternative disposal option for dealing with low-level antisocial and nuisance offending; deliver a swift and simple method of deterrence; reduce the amount of time that police officers spend contemplating 930 paperwork and attending court, while simultaneously reducing the burden on the courts; and increase the amount of time that constables spend on the street and dealing with more serious crime.

The availability of this form of disposal does not in any way preclude the use of any existing methods of dealing with matters. For example, powers of arrest are unchanged and may be 935 exercised where appropriate. The offences that have been included are summary offences where the most likely court outcome would be a low-level fine. The offences covered include breaches of the peace, disorderly conduct, making off without payment, noise and various alcohol-related offences.

The RGP will also be issued with guidance by the Ministry for Justice regarding the use of their discretion to issue notices in particular circumstances. For example, in relation to theft, contrary 940 to section 397 of the Crimes Act, the guidance will state that only one notice should ever be given to an individual for theft, the value of goods stolen should not exceed £100 and it is expected that in most cases the property will be recovered and, where applicable, such as in cases of shoplifting, remain fit for sale. Furthermore, a notice will not be appropriate where the theft is in breach of 945 trust, such as where a person has stolen from their employer.

Mr Speaker, the scheme contained in this Bill is based on the long-standing fixed penalty notice scheme for road traffic offences. Notices are issued to individuals and there is no requirement for an admission of guilt, nor is a conviction recorded against the subject. There is also a mechanism in place for a person who receives a notice to request to be tried rather than pay the penalty.

950 A notice must only be given to a suitable person. This is defined in the Bill as a person aged 18 or over. Where doubt exists, rigorous checks must be made to establish age. If a person lies about their age, the notice should be withdrawn and any moneys paid returned. In such circumstances, a constable may proceed in any way that was available prior to giving notice.

The Bill includes a power by secondary legislation to lower the minimum age in the future, and, 955 if that different age is lower than 18, make provision for a parent or guardian of that person to be notified of the giving of the notice and for the parent or guardian to be liable to pay the penalty under the notice. It is not intended to exercise this power at this time, but before this is done, full research and consultation will be undertaken.

In conclusion, the scheme contained in this Bill will provide the Royal Gibraltar Police with 960 another tool that will allow them to continue the work of more effectively managing their resources. We are following the UK's lead in allowing for a speedy and effective alternative option for dealing with a limited number of low-level nuisance offending in circumstances that may not warrant attendance in court, while still providing all the relevant safeguards to the victims of crime and offenders. It is a matter that has been raised with me by the Commissioner of Police following 965 inspections, and I am certain that allowing for resolution of the matters in this way will assist him in focusing his resources on more serious matters.

Mr Speaker, I commend this Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general
970 principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, the Hon. Lady has reached out to me on a number of occasions and has invited me to make any comments on any potential amendments in advance of today. I have to say that, having looked at it, I had no amendments and indeed the Opposition agrees with both the policy and the drafting of the Act. If I may say so, it strikes the right balance between dealing with offences of this sort, which are essentially minor offences but important offences to many people because disorderly behaviour is capable of impacting on the lives of innocent people in the community. It strikes the right balance between those types offences, dealing with them quickly – and swift deterrence, as she put it – with less paperwork as well for police officers, but at the same time ensuring that none of the protections in the law in relation to offences that may carry more serious penalty are infringed upon. For those reasons we are going to be supporting this Bill.

I apologise that I did not raise it with her in advance, but just in relation to section 7, where it says:

The Minister may issue guidance—about the exercise of the discretion given to constables by this Act

I presume what means – discretion given to constables by this Act – is the discretion whether to prosecute or not to prosecute. I was racking my brains as to how guidance from the Minister may actually assist in the exercise of that discretion when, quite frankly, discretion by its nature is a wide concept and perhaps one would want, in these types of cases, for the discretion to just be vested in the police officers without guidance. Sometimes guidance can be unhelpful in restricting that discretion. Perhaps she can comment on that and provide the House a little bit more detail about that, but I do not want those comments to detract from the fact that the Opposition will be supporting and that we will be commending the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Does the hon. mover wish to respond?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Gentleman again for the generosity in the way that he has dealt with this, and I am glad to hear that there is consensus throughout the House in this, which is, I would say, a very sensible and practical proposal going forward.

In relation to the point that he raises, precisely because of this point is the reason why I gave the example in my speech about shoplifting and when relevant. The point to be made here is so that we can identify what would be a type of offence that would be acceptable to the issue. So it is in relation to the offences that are scheduled.

Hon. D A Feetham: Rather than the exercise of [inaudible]

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Yes. I am happy to tell the hon. Gentleman that when this was first proposed to me, the length of the schedule was much greater than the way it has ended up.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make new provision for on-the-spot penalties for disorderly behaviour be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Domestic Abuse Bill 2022 –
First Reading approved

1020 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to make provision in relation to domestic abuse; to create an offence in relation to controlling or coercive behaviour in intimate or family relationships; to provide for an offence of threatening to disclose private sexual photographs and films; to provide for an offence of strangulation; to make provision for the granting of measures to assist individuals in certain circumstances to give evidence; and for connected purposes. The Hon. Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations.

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to make provision in relation to domestic abuse; to create an offence in relation to controlling or coercive behaviour in intimate or family relationships; to provide for an offence of threatening to disclose private sexual photographs and films; to provide for an offence of strangulation; to make provision for the granting of measures to assist individuals in certain circumstances to give evidence; and for connected purposes be read a first time.

1035 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that Bill for an Act to make provision in relation to domestic abuse; to create an offence in relation to controlling or coercive behaviour in intimate or family relationships; to provide for an offence of threatening to disclose private sexual photographs and films; to provide for an offence of strangulation; to make provision for the granting of measures to assist individuals in certain circumstances to give evidence; and for connected purposes be read a first time. Clerk: The Domestic Abuse Act 2022.

Domestic Abuse Bill 2022 –
Second Reading approved

1045 Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill for the Domestic Abuse Act be read a second time.

The Bill makes provision for domestic abuse. This is an incredibly important development on this subject and one that is designed to protect victims of domestic abuse.

Part 1 creates a new offence criminalising controlling or coercive behaviour in an intimate or family relationship where the behaviour has a serious effect on the victim. A limited defence is

1050 available where the accused believes he or she was acting in the best interests of the victim and can show that in particular circumstances their behaviour was objectively reasonable. The defence would not be available where a victim has been caused to fear violence, as opposed to being seriously alarmed or distressed. The defence is intended to cover a situation where, for example, 1055 a person who is a carer for a spouse who is mentally ill by virtue of his or her condition, has to be kept at home to take medication. The carer's behaviour might be considered controlling but would be reasonable in the circumstances. This evidential burden will apply to the defence – that is, it will be enough for a defendant to produce sufficient evidence for the matter to be considered by the jury. It would then be for the prosecution to demonstrate to the criminal standard of proof, namely beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defence has not been made out.

1060 Part 2 of the Bill creates new powers to deal with domestic abuse in Gibraltar. These include domestic abuse protection orders (DAPOs), which will be issued by senior Royal Gibraltar Police officers. The DAPOs will be issued by the courts.

Clause 6 defines domestic abuse. The definition applies for the purposes of the Act, but is expected to be adopted more generally. There are also provisions recognising that domestic abuse 1065 can impact on a child who sees, hears or experiences the effects of domestic abuse, and it treats such children as victims of domestic abuse in their own right. The definition of domestic abuse is in two parts. The first part deals with the relationship between the abuser and the abused. The second part defines what constitutes abusive behaviour. There are two criteria governing the relationship between the abuser and the abused. The first criterion provides that both the person 1070 who is carrying out the behaviour and the person to whom the behaviour is directed must be aged over 16. Abusive behaviour directed at a person under 16 will be dealt with as child abuse rather than domestic abuse. The second criterion provides that both persons must be personally connected as defined in clause 3(7).

Clause 8 creates a power for a police officer to issue a domestic abuse protection notice (DAPN) 1075 and sets out the conditions and considerations that must be met in order for the Police to issue a DAPN. The purpose of a DAPN is to secure the immediate protection of a victim of domestic abuse from future domestic abuse carried out by a suspected perpetrator. A DAPN prohibits the perpetrator from abusing the victim and, where they cohabit, may require the perpetrator to leave those premises. It may also prohibit the perpetrator from coming within a specified distance 1080 of the premises where the victim lives. As a form of civil preventative measure, the issue of a DAPN and a DAPO does not constitute a finding of guilt, but for convenience and to aid understanding of the purpose of these notices and order I will refer to the person against whom a notice is given or an order is made as 'the perpetrator' and the person to whom the notice or order is designed to protect as 'the victim'. The issue of a DAPN triggers a police-led application for a DAPO in a 1085 magistrates court. This is an order which can include prohibitions and requirements necessary to protect the victim from future domestic abuse or the risk of domestic abuse and assist in preventing the perpetrator from carrying out further domestic abuse.

Clause 9 sets out a list of the type of provision that a DAPN may contain. Such provision may include a prohibition on the perpetrator contacting the victim, including via social media or email, 1090 which would also apply to contacting the victim at their place of work, even if the perpetrator and victim work in the same place, or prohibit the perpetrator from coming within a certain distance, as specified in the DAPN, of the premises lived in by the victim for the duration of the DAPN.
Where the perpetrator lives with the victim, provision may be made to prohibit the perpetrator from evicting or excluding the victim from the premises in question, prohibit the perpetrator from 1095 entering the premises or require the perpetrator to leave the premises. It does not matter, for these purposes, whether the premises are owned or rented in the name of the perpetrator or the victim.

Clause 10 sets out particular matters that the police officer must take into consideration before issuing a DAPN. The police officer must consider the welfare of any child whose interests the 1100 officer considers relevant. The police officer must take reasonable steps to find out the opinion of the victim as to whether the DAPN should be issued. Consideration must also be given to any 1105 representation the perpetrator makes in relation to the issuing of a DAPN. Where the DAPN is to include conditions in relation to the occupation of premises lived in by the victim, reasonable steps must also be taken to find out the opinion of any other person who lives in the premises and is personally connected to the perpetrator, if the perpetrator also lives in the premises, or the victim.

1110 While the police officer must take reasonable steps to discover the victim's opinion and must take this into consideration, the issue of the notice is not dependent upon the victim's consent – this is at subclause (4) – as the police officer may nevertheless have reason to believe that the victim requires protection from the perpetrator and the issue of the notice is necessary to secure protection.

1115 Clause 11 deals with further requirements in relation to notices. Subclause (2) sets out the details that must be specified in a DAPN, which include the grounds for issuing the DAPN and the fact that the Police will make an application for a DAPO which will be heard in the Magistrates court within a 48-hour period, excluding weekends and bank holidays, the fact that the DAPN will continue to be in effect until the DAPO application is determined and the provision that may be included in a subsequent DAPO. Subclause (4) requires the constable serving a DAPN to ask the perpetrator to supply an address in order to enable the perpetrator to be given notice of the hearing for the DAPO application.

1120 Clause 12 provides that the breach of a notice is an offence.

1120 Clause 13 describes a DAPO for the purposes of Part 2, namely an order containing prohibitions or restrictions for the purpose of preventing the perpetrator from being abusive to his or her victim.

1125 Clause 14 sets out the various routes under which a DAPO may be applied for. First, a DAPO may be granted by a court on application by certain categories of person – subclause (2). Second, where a DAPN has been given to a perpetrator by a member of a police force, there is a duty on the Commissioner of Police to apply to a Magistrates Court for a DAPO – subclause (3) and clause 15. Third, a DAPO may be made by a Family Court or Criminal Court during any ongoing proceedings, and that is at clause 17. Subclauses (5) to (7) specify the appropriate court to which 1130 an application for a DAPO is to be made. Where an application is made by the Police, whether following the issue of a DAPN or as a standalone matter, the application will be to a Magistrates Court. Where both the perpetrator and the victim are parties to family or civil proceedings, it would be open to the court to make a DAPO in those proceedings. The victim may apply to the Family or Supreme Court, as the case may be. In all other cases – for example, where the applicant is the victim, not involved in existing proceedings or a specified third party, an application is to be 1135 made to the Supreme Court.

Clause 15 covers the steps to be taken by the Police to apply for a DAPO following the issue of a DAPN. This follows on from the requirement set out in clause 28(3) for a Chief Officer of Police to apply to a Magistrates Court for a DAPO once a DAPN has been issued.

Clause 16 makes provision for remand of a person arrested for breach of a notice.

1140 Clause 17 enables the court in family, criminal or, in prescribed circumstances, civil proceedings to make a DAPO during ongoing proceedings where in the course of such proceedings the court becomes aware of the need to protect a person from domestic abuse. In the case of criminal proceedings in a Magistrates Court or the Supreme Court, it is open to the court to make a DAPO on the conviction or acquittal of the accused.

1145 Clause 18 sets out the conditions for making a DAPO. Two conditions must be met, namely that the court is satisfied on the balance of probabilities – that is the civil standard of proof – that the perpetrator has been abusive towards a person aged 16 or over to be protected by the DAPO, the victim, and that the court considers that the making of a DAPO is necessary and proportionate to protect the victim from domestic abuse or risk of domestic abuse carried out by the perpetrator.
1150 That is at subclauses (2) and (3). An order may, therefore, be made where domestic abuse has already occurred and the victim needs protecting from continuing abuse or the threat of abuse where such abuse occurred outside Gibraltar – subclause (4). Subclause (5) provides that a DAPO can only be made against a person who is aged 18 or over.

1155 Clause 19 specifies particular matters that a court must consider prior to making a DAPO. These are the welfare of any child whose interest the court considers relevant to the DAPO, the opinion of the victim and, where the DAPO is to include conditions in relation to the occupation of premises lived in by the victim, the opinion of any other person who lives in the premises and is personally connected to the victim or the perpetrator. If the perpetrator also lives in the premises, it is not necessary that the victim consent to the order.

1160 Clause 20 deals with the making of orders without notice. Before making – (Interruption) (A Member: Okay.) Mr Speaker, before making a DAPO, a court would normally give notice to the perpetrator to inform them of the proceedings and of the hearing at which the ... Mr Speaker, I am not laughing at the substance of what I am reading, I am just laughing at the very funny tune we just heard. I am not quite sure what that was aimed at. (A Member: Going round.) Going round, not personal. This clause allows a court to make a DAPO without notice where it would be just and convenient to do so. The clause does not apply in the case where a perpetrator has been given a DAPN, as clause 14 makes separate provision for the making of a DAPO without notice in such cases at subclause (3). Without-notice applications would in practice only be made in exceptional or urgent circumstances, and the applicant would need to produce evidence to the court as to why without notice the hearing was necessary. It may, for example, be appropriate to make a DAPO without giving notice of the application or hearing to the perpetrator where there is reason to believe that the perpetrator may seek to cause significant harm to the victim or intimidate the victim such that he or she would withdraw the application or may deliberately seek to evade service of notice of proceedings. If an order is to be made without notice, the perpetrator must be given an opportunity as soon as just and convenient to make representations about the order at a return hearing on notice.

1170 Clause 21 sets out the types of conditions that may be imposed in a DAPO and it may include any requirements and both prohibits and restrictions that the court thinks are necessary to protect the victim from the various forms of domestic abuse set out in the definition of domestic abuse in clause 6 or the risk of such abuse. This could include, for example, specific requirements to protect the victim from physical or sexual abuse, violent or threatening behaviour, controlling or coercive behaviour, or psychological, emotional or economic abuse. The court may decide that other requirements, such as requiring the perpetrator to attend a behavioural change programme or a drug or alcohol treatment programme may be necessary to protect the victim from domestic abuse. Subclause (4) specifies that the DAPO may prohibit the perpetrator from contacting the victim, and this relates to all forms of contact, including online contact, to prohibit the perpetrator from coming within a specified distance, as specified by the DAPO, of the premises lived in by the victim. The order may also prohibit the perpetrator from coming in a specified distance of any other premises specified by the court or any other premises of a specified description. This will include, for example, any place where the victim may commonly be found, such as the victim's place of work, place of worship or children's school. Subclause (5) specifies that where a perpetrator and the victim share living premises, the DAPO may prohibit the perpetrator from a victim or excluding the victim from the premises, prohibit the perpetrator from entering the premises, or require the perpetrator to leave the premises. Such provision may be made irrespective of who owns or rents the premises.

1185 Clause 22 makes further provision about requirements that may be imposed by orders. The requirements attached to a DAPO must not, so far as practicable, conflict with the perpetrator's religious beliefs or interfere with the perpetrator's work, attendance at an educational establishment – so, for example, a prohibition on the perpetrator entering a defined area would not normally cover his or her place of work – or conflict with another court order. If it is not practicable to avoid the conflict, given the necessity to protect the victim the court may still impose the requirement. Where a DAPO imposes requirements on the perpetrator, it must specify the person who is responsible for supervising compliance.

1195 Clause 23 provides for the duration of orders.

1205 Clause 24 provides that it is an offence to breach any requirement of a DAPO without reasonable excuse. In the case of a DAPO made against a perpetrator who was not given notice at 1210 the time of the proceedings, the offence only operates from the time he or she was made aware of the existence of proceedings. The maximum penalty for breach on conviction in a Magistrates Court is imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or a fine, or both. The maximum penalty for breach on conviction on indictment is imprisonment and a maximum term of five years or a fine, or both, and that is at subclause (5). As an alternative to prosecution for the offence under subclause (1), breach of the DAPO may be dealt with as a civil contempt of court, the 1215 maximum penalty for which is two years imprisonment or a fine, or both, except in a Magistrates Court, where the maximum penalty is two months' imprisonment or a fine. Sub clauses (3) and (4) set out that any breach has to be punished as a contempt of court and it may not be punished as an offence under this clause, and vice versa. This is to ensure that the subject of a DAPO is not punished twice for the same failure to comply with the requirements of the order.

Clause 25 provides that as breach of a DAPO is a criminal offence, the perpetrator may be 1220 arrested without a warrant by a constable exercising powers under section 42 of the Criminal Procedure and Evidence Act. Where a complainant – for example, the victim – wants a breach to be dealt with as a civil matter, that is as a contempt of court, this clause provides for a power of arrest in such cases. A person may apply to the court to issue an arrest warrant if the applicant thinks that the perpetrator has breached the DAPO. Once the perpetrator has been arrested and brought before the court, the court may either deal with the contempt of court there and then or 1225 remand the perpetrator, whether in custody or on bail, for the case to be dealt with at a later date. Schedule 1 makes further provision about remand under clause 25.

Clause 26 makes provision about notification requirements. This clause requires the perpetrator to notify the Police of their name, including any aliases and home addresses within three days, beginning with the date of the making of the DAPO. Any change of name or home 1230 address or any adoption of a new name must be notified to the Police within three days of the event. Such information will assist the Police in monitoring compliance with the DAPO and in managing risk posed by the perpetrator. The perpetrator's home address for these purposes is defined in clause 3(6) as meaning either the person's sole or main residence in Gibraltar or, where they have no such residence, the address location in Gibraltar where they can regularly be found.
1235 Subclause (7) enables the Minister with responsibility for justice by regulations to specify further notification requirements which a court may impose on a case-by-case basis when making or varying a DAPO. Where additional notification requirements are imposed by a court, the perpetrator must supply the information to the Police. Certain sex offenders are already subject to notification requirements by virtue of the provision of Part 13 of the Crimes Act, and where the 1240 subject of a DAPO is already liable to one or the other of these notification requirements the provisions in the clause do not apply, to avoid unnecessary duplication. However, if the notification requirements under one or other of these enactments or another DAPO cease to apply to the subject of a DAPO, then the requirements of this clause will instead apply.

Clause 27 sets out further provision about notification. It sets out how the subject of a DAPO 1245 must notify the Police and how notification must be acknowledged and police powers to verify the perpetrator's identity when they attend a police station to notify.

Clause 28 provides that it is a criminal offence to fail to comply with the notification requirements without reasonable excuse.

Clause 29 sets out how a DAPO may be varied or discharged, who may apply for such a variation 1250 and discharge and to which court the application should be made.

Clause 30 sets out the relevant court at which proceedings in relation to the variation and discharge are to take place.

Clause 31 sets out the circumstances in which an affected person may appeal against a decision of a court in respect of a DAPO.

1255 Clause 32 makes further provision about appeals to provide that in any case where the Commissioner of Police is not the appellant subclauses (1) and (2) provide that the court must afford them the opportunity to be heard before determining. The Commissioner of Police would automatically have such a right to be heard in any case where they are the appellant.

1260 Clause 33 provides that proceedings before a Magistrates Court or Supreme Court in respect of the making of a DAPO on the conclusion of criminal proceedings or in respect of a variation or discharge made in the circumstances ... Subclause (2) provides that a Magistrates Court or Supreme Court may, in deciding whether to make an order on the conclusion of criminal proceedings, consider evidence which was inadmissible in the criminal proceedings. Subclause (3) enables a Magistrates Court or Supreme Court to adjourn proceedings – for example, after passing sentence on a perpetrator – to enable further inquiries to be made before determining whether to make an order. Subclause (4) provides that where a perpetrator has been convicted of an offence but is conditionally or absolutely discharged, it is still open to the court to make or vary an order in respect of that person.

1275 Clause 35 gives the Minister with responsibility for justice the power to issue guidance to the Police and other persons eligible to apply for a DAPO by virtue of any regulations that may be made under clause 14(2)(c). Such persons are under a duty to have regard to the guidance when exercising functions under this Part.

1280 Part 3 provides for guidance on the establishment and conduct of domestic homicide reviews, so that statutory agencies can learn lessons from them. The relevant authorities have a duty to have regard to the guidance issued by the Minister for Justice when establishing or conducting such a review. The relevant authorities are listed as the Commissioner of Police, the Chief Executive Officer of the Care Agency and the Gibraltar Health Authority. It is envisaged that the guidance will encourage multi-agency reviews in relevant cases and will provide details as to leadership, format, timing and participants, depending on the individual circumstances of the case. The Minister has the power to direct a review to be established in a particular case, specifying who must establish and/or participate in such a review.

1295 Clause 39 creates a new offence of non-fatal strangulation or suffocation of another person. The use of choking or strangulation as a form of domestic abuse or violence is well documented as the fact that such behaviour may be undercharged or minimalised if there is no physical injury caused. This offence is not limited to persons who are connected. This clause inserts a new section 167A to the Crimes Act. The new section 167A will provide that a person commits the offence if the person intentionally strangles another or they commit another act that affects the person's ability to breathe and that act constitutes a battery of the other person. 'Strangulation' or 'strangles' are not specifically defined and have their ordinary meaning. 'Battery' is a reference to the common law offence of battery, an act that affects the ability of the other person to breathe and constitutes a battery can include but is not limited to suffocation. The new section 167A(2) makes clear that it is a defence for a person accused of the offence to show that the other person consented to the strangulation or other act that affected their ability to breathe. This subsection has, however, to be read in conjunction with the new section 167A(3), which provides that the defence set out in the new section 167A(2) would not apply when the person suffers serious harm as a result of the strangulation or other act that affects their ability to breathe. 'Serious harm' is

1310 defined in the new section 167A(6) as amounting to grievous bodily harm or wounding within the meaning of section 166 of the Crimes Act, or actual bodily harm under section 176. In short, a 1315 person cannot validly consent to having serious harm inflicted on them. The new section 167A(3)(b) clarifies that serious harm must be intended by the perpetrator or that the perpetrator is reckless as to the other person suffering serious harm. This means that where a person intends to inflict harm that amounts only to a battery and the other person consents to that act, but where 1320 serious harm occurs, a valid defence of consent would only be available where the prosecution can prove that they intended to cause serious harm or were reckless as to serious harm being caused. The new section 167A(5) sets out penalties for the offence. The maximum penalty on summary conviction is 12 months' imprisonment and/or an unlimited fine. On conviction on indictment in the Supreme Court the maximum penalty is seven years' imprisonment and an unlimited fine.

Clause 40 restates the statute law of the general proposition that a person may not consent to the infliction of serious harm and by extension is unable to consent to their own death. It also reflects the exception in relation to consent in cases involving the transmission of sexually transmitted infections insofar as the law has been established.

1325 Turning to Part 5, the Bill deals with special measures and protection for victims and witnesses in court. Clause 41 amends Part 19 of the Criminal Procedure and Evidence Act to extend the eligibility for assistance given to intimidated witnesses in criminal proceedings to complaints of any offence where it is alleged that the behaviour of the accused amounted to domestic abuse.
As a result, complaints of the offence, including domestic abuse, are to be automatically treated 1330 as eligible for special measures on the grounds that they are in fear or distress about so testifying.
Special measures apply to witnesses who are giving evidence in criminal courts, and these measures include giving evidence by live link, removal of wigs and gowns, and video-recorded evidence.

Clause 42 relates to special measures in civil proceedings and provides the Chief Justice with 1335 the power to make rules of court enabling the court to make special measures direction in relation to a person who is a party or witness to civil proceedings where that person is at risk of being a victim of domestic abuse.

Clause 43 provides that Part 3A of the Practice Direction 3A of the Family Procedure Rules of England and Wales applies in Gibraltar with such modifications as may be required and provides 1340 that victims of domestic abuse will be automatically eligible for access to special measures.

Part 6 relates to information sharing and gives the Minister for Justice the power to make regulations to permit the sharing of information with schools. This is intended to provide for an Operation Encompass model for Gibraltar. Operation Encompass is a police and education early information safeguarding partnership enabling schools to offer immediate support to children 1345 experiencing domestic abuse and will give the Minister for Justice the power to make regulations for these purposes. Training for all relevant stakeholders in this regard was undertaken in November last year.

Part 7 contains regulation-making powers and repeals the Domestic Violence and Matrimonial Proceedings Act.

1350 Mr Speaker, bringing this Bill to the House has entailed many years of work and consultation.
There have been numerous changes to this Bill. There has been input from lawyers, focus groups, stakeholders, interested parties and lots of conversations with victims and, importantly, with survivors of domestic abuse. This is an incredibly important piece of legislation and is in honour of everyone who has been a victim of domestic abuse in Gibraltar.

1355 I commend this Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, the Opposition is going to be supporting this Bill.

1360 It is often said that the law is a living thing. We all, in this place, strive to make improvements to our laws, and indeed that is part of our responsibility as being the legislature of this small community of ours.

1365 When we were in government, we introduced the 2011 Crimes Act, which at the time was a seminal piece of legislation. Some of the offences that you see reflected in this Bill today, which I have no hesitation in describing as a phenomenally important piece of legislation, at the time had not been proposed or conceived either in Gibraltar or internationally and in the United Kingdom in particular, because although we do not follow the United Kingdom slavishly in every single case, many of the ideas for our legislation do emanate from the United Kingdom.

1370 As the Hon. Minister also said at the end of her intervention, should there be any concerns about this piece of legislation, which in my view there ought not to be, the fact that she has published a consultation paper, the fact that she has consulted with lawyers and with other interest groups and allowed people to make comments on the basis of that consultation paper contributes to the quality and, if I may say so, thoroughness of the Bill presented by the Minister today.

1375 There is no point in me going through this Bill also in detail, but I want to focus, just to explain some of the offences that are created by this Bill, on some parts of it. For example, this Bill tries to close the gap – as the Minister has described, I think, elsewhere, not in the course of her intervention – between offences that we have and patterns of controlling or coercive behaviour. Some people who may follow football – as I do, Manchester United in particular – will have followed, for example, the trial of quite a famous former player of Manchester United who was charged with coercive and controlling behaviour. Ultimately, he was not convicted – it was not an acquittal because there was a hung jury in relation to it – but that is what we are talking about.

1380 Just to make it clearer, the type of behaviour that could amount to controlling or coercive behaviour is, for example, a partner isolating you from your friends and family; monitoring your time and how you spend your time; monitoring your time online and your communication tools – introducing spyware onto phones, for example; taking control of aspects of your everyday life, such as where you can go, who you can see, what you can wear and when you can sleep; and controlling your finances – although I have to say that my wife comes very close to this type of behaviour. They are offences. It creates an offence in relation to behaviours that can really create a nightmare situation for the person who actually suffers this kind of behaviour. Therefore, in our respectful view, it was needed and we certainly commend the Minister for introducing this legislation.

1390 It also creates new powers to deal with domestic abuse in Gibraltar, and these include domestic abuse protection notices issued by police officers in urgent circumstances, but also domestic abuse protection orders, which are a court-issued version of the notices, including in family, criminal and civil actions.

1395 In our view, the Police and the courts are going to be able to deal with domestic abuse in a much more efficient and focused way, and hopefully will allow all of us as legislators and the Police as the enforcement agency – and the courts, of course, where these things are going to have to be proved – in our own way, to attempt to stamp out this kind of behaviour, which has and should have no place in society and in this community.

1400 Mr Speaker, for all those reasons, I commend the Bill to the House. The Minister, I think, in her press release said she felt proud about the work that she had done in relation to this and I think she should rightly feel proud because it is a very good piece of legislation indeed, and therefore I too commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

1410 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, while I applaud many of the measures contained within this Bill, as one out of a grand total of two women in this House of 17 representatives I feel I have to put a feminist slant on this debate for the benefit of half of the population of Gibraltar.

1415 I would like to remind the House that while both men and women may experience incidents of interpersonal violence and abuse, women are considerably more likely to experience repeated and severe forms of abuse, including sexual violence. As an example, in the UK, for the year ending March 2022, 6.9% of women suffered this violence and 3% of men. This translates to 1.7 million women and 699,000 men, more than double are the women. They are also more likely to have experienced sustained physical, psychological or emotional abuse or violence that results in injury or death. Women experience higher rates of repeated victimisation and are much more likely to be seriously hurt or killed than male victims of domestic abuse, are liable to experience higher levels of fear and are more likely to be subjected to coercive and controlling behaviours.

1420 Domestic abuse perpetrated by men against women is rooted in women's unequal status in society and is part of the wider social problem of male violence against women and girls. In light of this pervasive problem, I feel this Bill does a disservice when it does not make any reference to gender-based violence in its definition or making special provisions to protect women with measures aimed at countering the many biases that continue to exist – the biological, social and economy imbalances that make violence against women an endemic problem for humankind. In fact, by continuing to operate in this seemingly neutral, politically non-committal way, we are failing to make a stance that the women in our society sorely need, to the benefit of the small but loud bunch of male-rights activists out there whose role it is to tear down any kind of feminist progress.

1430 Mr Speaker, the Bill has great elements and I do thank the Minister for her work, so I will be voting in favour of it, but an erroneous recognition of the problem will inevitably create other problems in the long term.

Thank you.

1435

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

1440 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, can I rise to thank the Hon. Minister for the introduction of this Bill? It has taken a lot of her time in government. She has sought the assistance of other Ministers at different times, but she has borne the complete brunt of the preparation of it with her advisers, and although the title might not suggest it, it is a labour of love manifest in a Bill that is about domestic abuse. It is a piece of work that I know she has taken great care to produce in the best possible way, as we do with every Bill but in particular in relation to this Bill because of the potential consequences of not having the protections that it will afford, or not having modernised the protections that it will afford.

1445 Mr Speaker, can I – this is starting to become a habit – join Mr Feetham in that respect, in welcoming the work that the Hon. Minister has done, and can I thank him for the recognition that he has given across the floor of the House to the Hon. Minister in that respect?

1450 I agree with the hon. Lady, Marlene Hassan Nahon, that the brunt of domestic abuse is suffered by women, not just in this country but in most countries, and in my view it is abhorrent that it should be denied and that the veneer of violence happening in a domestic setting being applicable equally to men as it is to women is just not true. That is the sort of veneer that Vox tried to put on the issue in Spain in the way that they present the issue. Of course there are men who suffer abuse in the home setting, of course there are, but the overwhelmingly vast majority of cases of abuse are against women. That is not to deny that there are even instances of abuse in same-sex marriages or partnerships, but the overwhelming vast number of instances are instances of abuse by male of female partners. On that, I believe that we are all in this House agreed.

1455 Having said that, when legislating, as we are in this House, we have to legislate in keeping with the constitutional parameters. One thing is to recognise the statistic that there is one particular characteristic that can afflict the majority of the cases that are going to be dealt with. Quite another is to legislate in that way when we all also recognise that there are instances of violence in this sort of setting which are also affecting all sexes. Our Constitution requires us not to legislate in a way that would be seeing a sexual entity rather than an individual of any type. So gender-based violence legislation is complicated. There are some instances where it is physically necessary ... For example, in instances of female vaginal mutilation. There you are dealing with a gender-based issue, genital mutilation. You are dealing with a gender-based issue and you are not doing so in a sexist way. But we have to be very careful, where we are dealing with the creation of offences of abuse against individuals, against citizens, that the legislation is gender neutral, although the enforcement of the legislation will no doubt reflect, as the hon. Lady has said, that the vast majority of these offences are committed against women in particular circumstances. We cannot deny, as the hon. Lady has taken us through, that there are also instances of abuse affecting children of all sexes in the home setting, where they are witnessing what is overwhelmingly and predominantly the violence of men against women, but that is also abuse of the children, and the children of both sexes.

I think this is an incredibly complex piece of legislation that delivers against an incredibly important area of our law. We have seen the most heinous incidents of violence in the domestic setting in Gibraltar in the past 15 years – they have been the most awful – and indeed in the past 10 years in our period of our tenure, we have been in office and seen, under successive Ministers for Justice, two instances of the most heinous offences, seeing the loss of life of two women and, in one instance, the loss of life of a woman and her children and also the alleged killer, the man. So legislation that helps us to deal with that and, to an extent, try to nip it in the bud is legislation I am very happy to see will have the full support of the House. It could not be otherwise, and in giving this legislation the full support of the House we are giving the Minister our full support to the fantastic work that she has done in the past months.

Mr Speaker: The hon. the mover of the Bill.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Gentleman Mr Feetham once again for the generosity of his praise of this work. I am very glad and grateful that he has recognised this piece of work. Obviously, as a former Minister for Justice he understands the level of work that this entailed. I am glad that he reminded me of the process of the consultation and the Command Paper, because it was as a result of the consultation that followed the publication of the Command Paper that the substance of the Bill changed significantly. If we look at the Bill in its form today, we can see that it is very different from when the consultation paper was issued and it has been, in large measure, because of feedback we received at the time, and because then we also had the intervening period of COVID there were developments in the UK and we have included those developments and those amendments.

The hon. Gentleman referred to the offence of controlling coercive behaviour and how this has developed. It is already, and has been for a considerable period, an offence in the UK. It relates to non-physical violence, and that is why, whereas at the beginning when we started our strategy we referred to incidents as domestic abuse, we have changed the nomenclature and updated it to ... Sorry, initially we referred to it as domestic violence, and we have changed the communications to domestic abuse to make sure that everybody is aware of the coercive behaviour. In fact, because we have been working on this for such a considerable period of time and I wanted to make sure that everyone was ready to be able to deal with the legislation ahead of it succeeding in this House, back in 2019 I commissioned training specifically on coercive controlling behaviour, and in the autumn of 2019 every single police officer from the police constable to the Commissioner of Police has undertaken training on coercive controlling behaviour. This is because, as an offence, it is very difficult to prosecute and it is very difficult to identify. One of the principal reasons for this is because victims of coercive controlling behaviour in many circumstances do not themselves realise that they are victims of coercive controlling behaviour. The emotional abuse is such that they no longer realise it is wrong and that they are victims of abuse. That training that we originally started has been ongoing. We have also, as part of the package that I commissioned in 2019, had a train-the-trainer package, so it means that, thereafter, training for primarily the Royal Gibraltar Police but also the inter-agency training that we do as part of the Domestic Abuse Strategy is delivered by people who have been trained in Gibraltar. We had a very moving conference in November on domestic abuse, where we had two victims and survivors of domestic abuse speak out. They spoke specifically of their experiences of domestic abuse, and both said that at the outset neither of them had recognised that they were, in fact, victims of domestic abuse and it was not until they spoke to other people that this was pointed out to them. The training that we have already undertaken and the training that is planned throughout the year is specifically focused on this because we anticipate, as is the case in the UK, that successful prosecutions on coercive controlling behaviour are incredibly difficult and there is no point in having the statutory framework that gives us an offence and not then having the tools in the armoury to be able to give it successful effect.

Mr Speaker, I regret the comments made by the hon. Lady. Unfortunately, I think she is trying to show in her comments that she is more of a feminist than I am, but it is premised, I think, on a misunderstanding of the legislation. This is a piece of legislation that will protect victims of domestic abuse regardless of their gender. The hon. Lady has quoted statistics that are not from Gibraltar that she has obtained, which is a shame because during our [inaudible] days of activism campaign that we had in November of last year, the statistics of domestic abuse and the gender split in Gibraltar was communicated. In Gibraltar, according to the statistics provided to me by the Royal Gibraltar Police, we have a 30/70 split of victims of domestic abuse. That means that 30% of the victims of domestic abuse in Gibraltar are men. The hon. Lady, if she wants to speak about equality and how domestic abuse impacts in Gibraltar, did not mention, as the Chief Minister said, victims of domestic abuse who are same-sex couples. Of the statistics that the Royal Gibraltar Police have in relation to reports of domestic abuse by same-sex couples, all reports and all complaints have been of male same-sex couples and there have been no reports by female same-sex couples. So, if we are going to speak about equality, let's understand what it is that we are talking about.

As the Chief Minister says, this is legislation and we have to make sure that the legislation is there and is available for all of us. The hon. Lady is right in that she says, and we all agree, that there are more victims of domestic abuse than women, but the way we deal with it, which the hon. Lady has misunderstood or overlooked, is through education, through strategy, through awareness, and not in legislation. I do not understand how the hon. Lady, apart from the exception that the Chief Minister mentioned, thinks we can legislate for domestic abuse in that way – it is certainly not legislated in that way in the UK, so it is erroneous to speak on the basis of that premise.

In order to reassure the hon. Lady so that she can be comforted that this Government fully understands its responsibilities, I can assure the hon. Lady that we have a national strategy for domestic abuse. In fact, that strategy is now being reviewed and refreshed in the context of the proposed Bill and there is a new working group. I have commissioned someone and engaged someone specifically tasked with driving the national strategy. As part of the strategy, we are looking at early intervention – that is one of the workstreams we have – and prevention, and it is through that strategy and that work that we do with women, with schools, through education, through awareness ... I am not sure whether the hon. Lady has been following the Ministry for Justice campaign that we had in November. Of course we are there to support women, we are there to support everyone, but we need to understand that ... We need to reach out to women, but reaching out to women, supporting women and educating women is something that we do in a different way. It is not something that we can do through legislation and it is a shame that the hon. Lady does not understand the difference.

Mr Speaker, I do not want to end on a negative note because this, as the Chief Minister said, has been a labour of love. It is so absolutely important that we get right the legislation and the support across the board, from training to services, to the help that we offer, to counselling help, 1565 and all of that has been considered and is spearheaded through the Ministry for Justice with input, of course, from the Ministry for Equality to make sure that we do not forget anyone, do not leave anyone behind and do not leave anybody out.

Given that this important piece of legislation is being supported by everyone, I would like to reflect that fact and thank all hon. Members for recognising this important progress that we have 1570 in our legislation.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that Bill for an Act to make provision in relation to domestic abuse; to create an offence in relation to controlling or coercive behaviour in intimate or family relationships; to provide for an offence of threatening to disclose private sexual 1575 photographs and films; to provide for an offence of strangulation; to make provision for the granting of measures to assist individuals in certain circumstances to give evidence; and for connected purposes be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

1580 Clerk: The Domestic Abuse Act 2022.

Domestic Abuse Bill 2022 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

1585 Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, we have been at it now for almost three hours and the Minister has had carriage of, I think, three of the Bills that we have dealt with now, so I 1590 propose that we should recess to give you and her a break until 10 past six.

Mr Speaker: The House will now recess to 10 past six.

The House recessed at 5.50 p.m. and resumed at 6.11 p.m.

Anti-Corruption Authority Bill 2022 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: We continue with Bills.

1595 A Bill for an Act to make provision for the establishment of the Anti-Corruption Authority and to provide it with powers of investigation and other duties, powers and functions for the investigation of corrupt conduct, and for connected purposes. The Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations.

1600 Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to make provision for the establishment of the Anti-Corruption Authority and to provide it with powers of investigation and other duties, powers and functions for the investigation of corrupt conduct, and for connected purposes be read a first time.

1605 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision for the establishment of the Anti-Corruption Authority and to provide it with powers of investigation and other duties, powers and functions for the investigation of corrupt conduct, and for connected purposes be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Anti-Corruption Authority Act 2022.

Anti-Corruption Authority Bill 2022 –
Second Reading approved

1610 Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill for the Anti-Corruption Authority Act 2022 be read a second time.

1615 The purpose of this Bill is to (1) create a domestic body to investigate complaints of corrupt conduct and also have the freedom to investigate of its own volition without there being any complaint received from any person; (2) provide this body, the Anti-Corruption Authority (ACA) with certain powers of investigation; (3) make provision for other matters which are ancillary or related to these purposes; (4) implement an obligation under Article 6 of the UN Convention Against Corruption, which is currently not provided for under Gibraltar law.

I will take each of the clauses as they appear on the Bill.

1620 Part 1 of the Bill contains introductory provisions. Clause 1 contains provisions in relation to the title and entry into force of the Act.

Clause 2 contains definitions, two of the most important being what is meant by ‘corrupt conduct’, with reference to clause 15; and ‘a public official’, which is widely defined. Some of the other definitions rely on meanings provided in other legislation.

1625 Part 2 of the Bill focuses on the establishment of the ACA, its powers, functions, duties and related matters.

Clause 3(1) provides for the creation of the ACA. Clause 3(2) sets out the scope of the ACA.

1630 Clause 3(3) sets out the membership of the ACA. We have heard the concerns that have been expressed, and given that the Government does not wish to control the composition of the ACA, we have sought an amendment to the Bill by letter today for amendments to include that the chairperson is appointed by the specified Appointments Commission and that the other four are appointed as follows: two by the Chief Minister and two by the Leader of the Opposition. There are examples of similar appointments throughout legislation.

1635 Turning to clause 3(4), it provides for the Chair to oversee the working of the ACA. Some of their members will be investigating officers who exercise powers as authorised by the ACA.

Clause 3(5) states that public officials are not eligible to be appointed to the ACA with the flexibility that further categories of persons may be added as part of the excluded persons. ‘Public official’ is already fully defined under clause 2 of the Bill.

1640 Clause 3(6) states that the initial period of appointment must not exceed three years, but under clause 3(7) any person can be reappointed unless they resign or have been removed. The person who wishes to resign can notify the Chief Minister in writing under clause 3(8).

Clause 3(9)(a) lists the reasons for the removal of any member of the ACA. There is a broad range of reasons, which is not dissimilar to the circumstances under which the Minister, under 1645 section 36 of the Financial Services Act 2019, can declare the office of Chief Executive vacant and under section 21(7), when the Minister may remove another member of the FSC. Under 1650 clauses 3(9) and (10) removals and changes of the composition of the ACA must be published in the Gazette. In clause 3(11) there is provision where, for any reason of absence or inability to act as part of the ACA, or any other reason provided in clause 3(9), there may be a temporary replacement by the Chief Minister. Where there is a permanent removal from any post, the replacement must be appointed in the same manner as the original appointment.

The remuneration and the expenses of the ACA are to be charged on the Consolidated Fund, whether these expenses are payable to a member or the expenses incurred by the ACA at clauses 3(13) and (14). This is exactly the same as for the Financial Services Ombudsman, for instance, under section 181 of the Financial Services Act.

1655 Clause 4 provides that the ACA be a body corporate with common seal with the necessary formalities. You need the chair or another member who is authorised, and in either case one other member also has to be present. The ACA must sue and be sued in corporate name, and service of any processes may be affected by leaving it or sending it by registered post to the offices of the ACA.

1660 Clause 5(1) provides for meetings at dates and times as the chairperson may determine. There has to be a quorum of three members, and matters are decided by a majority vote with a casting vote to the chairperson. Clause 5(4) provides that any act done is not affected by a vacancy or the defective appointment of any person of the ACA. The ACA has the power to regulate its own procedure at clause 5(5).

1665 Clause 6 deals with the duties, powers and functions of the ACA. Primarily, the ACA takes the responsibility of establishing and supervising processes to investigate corrupt conduct, to detect and investigate corrupt conduct, and also to receive, consider and investigate any report made to it by any person relating to corrupt conduct. It must investigate matters properly without delay, exercise the powers that it has under the Bill to facilitate the investigation, analyse the results of 1670 the investigation and transmit those and any information or material to the RGP for further investigation. That is at clause 6(1)(a) to (c). Clause 6(1)(d) to (j) contains the powers of the ACA in relation to employment, appointment, the reporting of matters, the exchange of information and power to acquire property and dispose of any property and exercise any power that may be assigned to it.

1675 Clause 6(2) provides for the investigation of corrupt conduct predating the enactment of the Bill and refers to offences for which there is already provision. The intention is that the ACA be given the right to investigate matters that concern corrupt conduct and that occurred or partly occurred before the creation of the ACA, or where some of the elements constituting corrupt conduct occurred wholly or partly before the Act. This is understandable, in our view, because if 1680 the corrupt conduct had been committed either wholly or partly before the enactment of the Bill, it would already have been a matter for the Royal Gibraltar Police, which has unfettered powers to investigate. It is irrelevant for the purposes of the Bill whether the perpetrator at the time of the offence was a public official. There is no limit on how far back complaints can be investigated as set out in this Bill.

1685 Clause 6(3) sets out the standard for the ACA's exercise of its duties, powers and functions. It must be independent, impartial and fair and have as its paramount concern the protection of the public interest and prevention of corrupt conduct, with the proviso that there is no obligation for the ACA to act where there is no basis or legitimate reason for the exercise of any duty, power or function.

1690 Under clause 6(4) and (5), the ACA may appoint a member to act on its behalf, and for this purpose the member in question must be provided with an instrument of authorisation for anything authorised or required to be done under the Act. This is to ensure adequate checks and balances within the ACA.

1695 Clause 7 provides for the ACA to keep proper books and accounts and for a statement to be prepared within nine months after the end of each financial year. The accounts must be audited by the Principal Auditor, who must report within the terms set out by clause 7(3). Clause 7(4) says that the Chief Minister must present the audited accounts before Parliament. The ACA must furnish the Government, under clause 7(5), with estimates no later than 15th January each year.

1700 Where the ACA, in relation to any investigation, requires the services of specialist persons, under clause 8 it has the power to engage consultants or experts.

Under clause 9 there is the standard provision on immunity for anything done or omitted to be done by the ACA, save for acts or omissions done in bad faith. This is an important protection to permit the ACA to engage its powers properly and without any influence or threat of repercussions.

1705 Consistent with this is the duty of the ACA to indemnify persons appointed or engaged by it against claims, except for claims related to bad faith on the part of the person on the employee, at clause 10.

Clause 11 makes provision for where members of the Authority or persons engaged or employed by it have a disqualifying interest in a matter being considered.

1710 Clause 11(1) provides that a person with a disqualifying interest must declare the interest and withdraw from taking part in the relevant matter before the Authority. The declaration or withdrawal by the person must be recorded under clause 11(2).

1715 Clause 11(3) contains a definition of what is meant by a disqualifying interest, and this encompasses not only business or professional interests, but also personal or political interests and associations and the effect or perceived effect of the interest in the person's conduct, the independence and the person's duties, powers and functions under the Bill. The intention is to make it have a wide application and the duty on the person is taken seriously. It is an offence under clause 11(4) for a person not to comply with clause 11(1) and a defence to the offence is provided under clause 11(5).

1720 Clause 11(6) provides that no act or proceeding by the ACA is invalidated by a person having an interest and breaching this clause. Clause 11(7) provides that this clause has no application where the person acquires the interest as a member of the public or where the right to participate by that person is offered to the public.

1725 As part of the ACA's investigations, it will be privy to a great deal of information, and to ensure that the process of investigation is not compromised the information which it obtains must be protected and managed with care. Clause 12(1) defines 'confidential information' and sets out the exceptions to non-disclosure of confidential information by the ACA in clause 12(2). Confidential information includes what the ACA obtains in the usual course of its duties and what is provided to them in confidence by a public authority or the Government. Due to the nature of the ACA's 1730 investigations and the public importance in apprehending offenders, it is felt that information must be handled carefully and responsibly in order not to defeat or interfere with a subsequent investigation by the Royal Gibraltar Police or a prosecution. The listed reasons for disclosure of confidential information by the ACA in clause 12 are straightforward and should be generally acceptable. The duty not to disclose confidential information binds any person appointed to the 1735 ACA, employed by the ACA or engaged by the ACA to provide services.

Clause 13(1) provides the ACA with the power to publish and issue guidance to assist the public and for the prevention of corruption. This section has been inserted to give domestic effect to Article 6 of the UN Convention Against Corruption, the Mérida Convention. As Government is taking the necessary steps to seek extension to Gibraltar of this measure, the ACA can make 1740 changes to any guidance that is published and, in preparing this guidance, has the freedom to consult appropriate persons under clause 13(3).

1745 Clause 14(1) provides for the ACA, when exercising its duties, powers and functions under the Act, to enter into co-operation agreements with public authorities in order to establish procedures for exchange of information but with the safeguards and limitations under clause 14(2) and (3). These safeguards and limitations are centred around the public authority not disclosing information without the Authority's consent and to use the information for the purpose for which the ACA has provided and for no other purpose. The Authority can refuse to exchange information

1750 if it is not satisfied that the public authority itself is subject to the equivalent confidentiality provisions and the request falls outside a co-operation agreement that the investigation by both is in relation to the same or related conduct or is necessary to protect public interest or an essential national interest. A similar provision is made in section 51 of the Financial Services Act 2019, although this provision relates to a request by a foreign regulator.

1755 Part 3 deals with the definition and scope of corrupt conduct, investigations, reports to the ACA and rights and powers of it. Corrupt conduct, under clause 15(1), is defined with reference to specific criminal offences listed in the schedule to the Bill, which refers to offences under the Crimes Act, the Parliament Act, common law offences and offences under certain parts of the repealed Criminal Offences Act to the extent that these offences may be prosecuted under section 601(2)(a) of the Crimes Act. These are offences that are mostly associated with corruption, but there is also power to add to this list of offences in the future under clause 15(2) of the Bill.

1760 For the sake of clarity, it is provided by clause 15(3) that a person involved in corrupt conduct is a person who falls within the scope of the offences listed in the schedule, whether or not they are public officials.

1765 Clause 16(1) provides that there are two routes by which the Authority can direct an investigating officer to carry out an investigation under the Bill, namely (a) a report received by the ACA from a person, and (b) where the ACA suspects the commission of corrupt conduct. Where the Authority commences an investigation under clause 16(1), it has to establish proper systems of investigation, secure the communications and evidence, process personal data in accordance with the law, and protect persons under clause 30, where appropriate.

1770 The ACA can investigate corrupt conduct as provided under clause 6(2) with reference to the list of offences in the schedule.

1775 The ACA can discontinue an investigation for the reasons set out at clause 16(4). The ACA may discontinue an investigation, namely where no corrupt conduct is disclosed, the matter has already been investigated and there is not fresh evidence, the matter is more appropriately looked into by another public authority, the investigation would be disproportionate, or for any other reasonable cause.

Every investigation needs to be conducted in private, but this does not affect the duties, powers and functions of the ACA, for instance where orders have been sought from a court.

1780 At clause 17(1) it states that where a person makes a report to the Authority about a matter that concerns corrupt conduct, the report must be made in the form and manner as approved by the ACA. Clause 17(4) provides that a report that is certified by the ACA is admissible as evidence of the contents of the original report when it was recorded.

1785 Clause 18(1) contains the power of the ACA to suspend consideration of a report or an investigation where the matter is already in the hands of the court or part of the investigation of the Royal Gibraltar Police pending the final resolution of the matter as defined at clause 18(2). Final resolution is where the RGP investigate and do not charge or, in the case of court proceedings, where a conviction has been secured and the time for appeal has elapsed or the appeal has been disposed of.

1790 Clause 19(1) to (3) says that where an investigation is commenced under clause 16, which could either arise from a report to the ACA or from the ACA's own investigations, the ACA can by notice request any person to provide information or answer questions or provide documents which the Authority can then take copies of, request an explanation for, or make a request for the whereabouts of the documents where these are not produced but have been requested. The threshold for the exercise of this power is contained at clause 19(4), and that is that an investigation has commenced and the information or documents are reasonably required by the ACA for the purposes of the investigation. The request is not binding on any person. It is voluntary and there is no compulsion other than the ACA can seek orders from the court if it does not obtain the evidence and information it is seeking and is necessary for its investigation. Any evidence that is provided by any person can only be used as evidence against that person in a prosecution for an offence under the Bill or in a prosecution for another offence where an inconsistent statement 1800 is made by that person. Clause 19(6) says that any disclosure made by any person in relation to an inconsistent statement may not be used against the person unless evidence is adduced or a question is asked relating to it by that person or on their behalf.

The ACA has the choice and right to apply, under clauses 20, 21 and 23, for production orders, orders for entry and warrants for search and seizure from the Magistrates Court. These sections 1805 are quite similar to section 149 onwards of the Proceeds of Crimes Act 2015. There are also useful and comparable provisions in Chapter 3 of the Competition Act 2020, where investigating officers have specific powers in relation to investigations.

Clause 20 deals with production orders. The ACA can apply to the court for a production order. The evidence for the application has to be on oath and the court needs to be satisfied that the conditions in clause 23 are met. The application for the order must also comply with the 1810 requirements under clause 24. The court can order production where there is an investigation, a person is subject to an investigation and there are reasonable grounds to believe that the person has possession of evidence, the evidence is likely to be of value to the investigation and it is in the public interest that it is produced. The order can require that the evidence be produced to a police officer or to the Anti-Corruption Authority, or require that a person give access to the evidence. Privileged material or excluded material is protected from production. The person has to comply with the order within seven days unless the court believes a longer period is necessary. Privileged material and excluded material are protected under clause 20(7) to (9). Other than these 1815 protections, no other restriction would protect the information, under clause 20(10). The ACA can take copies of evidence produced and can be retained for the duration of the investigation or until the conclusion of any court proceedings.

The power in clause 21 is triggered when the court makes a production order. A court can make an order for entry on the application of the ACA, and where the court grants the order a police officer is permitted to enter premises and seize and retain any material, take copies and use 1825 reasonable force. The order may allow any person acting under the instrument or authorisation from the Anti-Corruption Authority to accompany a police officer and exercise the powers under clause 21(3) under supervision of a police officer. For the purposes of the execution of an order, the occupier or person in charge of the premises would be provided with a copy of it. If no one is present, a copy of the order can be left in a prominent place in the premises.

1830 I would move at this stage to make a couple of amendments to clause 21(3), which have nothing to do with the substance, Mr Speaker, but for the sake of good order I am proposing a substitute subclause (3) to read:

(3) An order to grant entry under this section is an order requiring any person who appears to the court to be entitled to grant entry to the premises to allow a police officer to-
(a) enter the premises specified in the order and seize and retain any material found in the premises appearing to be of a type in respect of which the order was granted or take any other steps that may appear to be necessary for preserving, or preventing any interference with, any material appearing to be of the relevant type;
(b) take copies of, or extracts from, any material appearing to be of the relevant type; and
(c) use any reasonable force that may be necessary.

I have provided written notification of this amendment to the Hon. Speaker.

1835 Moving on, clause 22 provides that an application for the production order or order for entry must be made in private without notice, and the Chief Justice can make rules of court in relation to production orders and orders to grant entry. Persons who are affected by any order made or the Anti-Corruption Authority itself can apply to the court to have these orders set aside or varied under clause 22(3). The Court can discharge, vary orders or dismiss an application at clause 22(4).

1840 Clause 23(1) gives the Authority the right to apply for a warrant of search and seizure from the court and, as in the case of other applications under the Bill, the information or evidence has to be on oath. The court can make an order where there is an investigation, there is material on any

1845 premises that has a value to the investigation and it is in the public interest to obtain the evidence and where it is not proportionate to make a production order for the reasons in clause 23(4). The reasons in clause 23(4) are that it is not practicable to communicate with the person against whom a production order or order for entry could be made or would be required to comply, and the investigation could be prejudiced if the Authority cannot get hold of the material. The court can grant a warrant under clause 23(6) for a police officer to enter, search the premises, seize the 1850 material, take copies of extracts and use reasonable force. The Authority can, under an instrument of authorisation, allow a person to accompany a police officer and exercise the powers under 23(6) under the police officer's supervision. The warrant can authorise a person acting for the ACA under an instrument of authorisation to accompany a police officer and exercise any of the powers under clause 23(6) under the supervision of the police officer.

1855 Clause 24(1) sets out how the application needs to be made in private and may be made without notice. An order made under clause 23 will not grant anyone the right to seize privileged or excluded information. Apart from these provisions, no other restrictions will apply to the disclosure of the information. The warrant can be in force for a month, and the order may make provision for the police officer to do other things and give proper effect to the order. The material can be retained for as long as the investigation continues, and the occupier of the premises or the 1860 person in control of the premises must be given a copy of the warrant.

In clause 25(1) and (2) the ACA and any affected person has the right to apply for the discharge or variation of the warrant. The court has the power to discharge and vary the warrant or dismiss the application.

1865 Clause 26(1) one defines 'officer of the Crown' and under subclause (2) makes provision for the Authority to require a Minister or officer of the Crown who is able to provide evidence in relation to the investigation to produce documents, furnish information or give access to the material. There are important safeguards and limitations to this right, which are set out in clause 26(3). This provision is also contained in section 18 of the Public Services Ombudsman Act, where the Ombudsman, as one knows, is also given the right to investigate reports or complaints. Under 1870 clause 26(4) nothing in the Act affects the withholding of information on public interest immunity grounds. No information or answers may be sought relating to proceedings before the Council of Ministers or Committee of Ministers. A certificate by the Chief Minister is conclusive evidence of the matter under subclause (3).

1875 There is also an appeal route to the Supreme Court for persons who feel aggrieved by orders made by the Magistrates Court under sections 22 and 25, and this is under clause 27. The Supreme Court can dismiss the appeal, allow the appeal or quash the order appealed against, or remit the matter to the Magistrates Court for further consideration. The Supreme Court has the power to grant a stay or other relief until the appeal is concluded. The Supreme Court can make any appropriate order as to costs under section 27(5).

1880 Clause 28 is pivotal to the whole procedure under the Act. It provides that the Anti-Corruption Authority must refer any matter to the Royal Gibraltar Police and forward any relevant evidence at any stage of an investigation where it appears to the Authority that a person has committed corrupt conduct or any other offence. The Anti-Corruption Authority does not have to wait until the matter is fully investigated by its officers.

1885 Part 4 of the Bill makes provision for protection measures. Clause 29 facilitates access to the Authority of persons who cannot understand English or suffer an impairment. The ACA has the duty to provide an interpreter or appropriate person to facilitate communications between the person and the Authority. This provision is also relevant to the considerations and aspirations under the UN Convention on the Rights of People with Disabilities.

1890 Under clause 30(1), the ACA is allowed in appropriate cases to notify the Commissioner of Police where the safety of a person assisting the ACA is prejudiced or where they may be subject to intimidation, harassment or retaliation. The Commissioner of Police is duty bound to make arrangements for their safety or protection from intimidation, harassment or retaliation. The scope of this protection measure is wide and includes persons making reports, assisting, 1895 complying with a request from the ACA or with an order from the court, or assisting in some other manner.

Clause 31 provides protection for the person assisting the ACA under clause 30. Clause 31(1) says persons assisting cannot be deemed to be in breach of their duties or contract and have the right not to suffer detriment by reason of assistance they provide the ACA. Under clause 31(2), 1900 any person who has been subjected to a detriment has a right to present a complaint to the Employment Tribunal on the basis that a report under clause 17 or assistance in relation to an investigation under this Bill is a qualifying disclosure within the meaning of the Employment Act.

There is a statutory obligation on a police officer or the Authority under clause 32 to return material which is gathered or obtained as a result of a request under clauses 19, 20, 21 or 23 if 1905 any items seized or produced to them are subject to legal professional privilege (LPP) or are excluded material. If it is possible to separate the items of LPP or excluded material from lawfully obtained material under clause 32(3), the person whose duty it is to return the material must ensure the separated item is returned as soon as practicable. The material must be returned to the owner or the person who has control or custody of it before it was seized or produced.

1910 Part 5 of the Bill creates offences prohibiting specific conduct which would interfere with the powers, duties and functions of the ACA. They are aimed to target different forms of conduct by a variety of perpetrators.

Clause 33 has two main limbs of criminal liability. Clause 33(1) creates a liability for a person within the Authority obtaining a benefit for themselves or for another person in exchange for 1915 neglecting their duty, doing something or omitting to do something, taking advantage of their position or facilitating an offer under any law. The penalties at clause 33(1) reflect the seriousness of the wrongdoing.

Clause 33(2) makes it an offence for a person outside the ACA to confer, procure or promise to any person appointed to the ACA or any other person a benefit in exchange for the person 1920 appointed to act, as under clause 33(1). As in the case of clause 33(1), serious penalties are created for any person found guilty of the offence.

Clause 34(1) creates an offence where a person receives a request from the ACA or an order from the court under the Bill to make a false or misleading statement with the necessary intention or recklessly. Serious penalties are also imposed under clause 34(2).

1925 Clause 35(1) creates the offence of falsification, destruction, disposal or concealment of evidence. Where a person knows or should know that a report has been made or there is an investigation, and falsifies, conceals, destroys or disposes or causes or permits these acts where they know or should have known that they are or would be relevant to a report or an investigation, they are guilty of an offence. The person would not commit an offence if they can provide that 1930 they had no intention to commit any of these acts.

Clause 36(1) creates the offence of improper disclosure of information obtained through an investigation. There are three scenarios that trigger this offence, namely where a report is made under clause 17 or an investigation under clause 16 has started, a request is made under clause 19 and this has not been refused, or an investigation under clause 16 has started, applications have 1935 been made under clauses 20, 21 or 23 and they have not been refused and the person knows or would be expected to know that disclosing any information would prejudice any of these scenarios. A defence under clause 36(2) is provided for a person who did not know or could not reasonably have known that the disclosure would be prejudicial, or has lawful authority or reasonable excuse for disclosing the material. There are also serious penalties for this offence.

1940 Clause 37 creates the offence of disclosure of confidential information and is triggered when a person contravenes the provisions of clause 12 or clause 14(2).

For completeness, Mr Speaker, clause 38 provides corporate liability and liability in relation to partnerships for an offence created under the Bill.

1945 Part 6 of the Bill contains miscellaneous provisions, the first one, clause 39, being that the Chief Minister can request a report from the ACA and that a report, once approved by the Chief Minister, is presented before Parliament. The report can either be connected to the Authority's 1950 duties, functions and powers under the Act or otherwise. The report is submitted by the ACA in draft to the Chief Minister, who may require it to amend or exclude matters for good reason. Under clause 39(3), the ACA must prepare, within three months after the end of each financial year, a report under the matters stated in (a) to (d) and hand it over to the Chief Minister within two weeks after it has been finalised, and the Chief Minister must lay in Parliament each report referred to.

1955 Clause 40(1) is a regulation-making power for the Chief Minister to make regulations for various purposes, including the exchange of information between the ACA or equivalent overseas authorities outside of Gibraltar, and also for the implementation of international agreements and conventions. This is a very common form of regulation-making power which is currently contained in various Acts. A case in point are sections 104 onwards of the Proceeds of Crimes Act. Finally, clause 40(2) defines what is meant by ‘overseas authorities’.

1960 Mr Speaker, on the basis of the explanation of the Bill, I commend this Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much.

1965 The GSD side of the Opposition are going to be abstaining in relation to this Bill. In explaining why we are going to be abstaining, can I say that other than observations that I am going to be making in relation to the Code of Conduct for Ministers and Members of Parliament, I am going to attempt to leave to one side any political points that perhaps I might be tempted to make in relation to who said what, when, in what manifesto and in what year, and I am going to try to simply focus on the substantive issues and give the substantive reasons as to why we are going to be abstaining.

1970 There are essentially two reasons why we are going to be abstaining. The first reason is that in our view this Bill adds an extra layer of bureaucracy which will inevitably lead to extra expense for, we say, little gain. In short, we say that this Bill does not go far enough. The second reason is the way that members are appointed and indeed removed leaves room for political influence and political interference despite the amendments that the hon. Lady has or is intending to move at Committee Stage.

1975 Just drilling down in relation to that first overarching reason that I have provided, the Bill creates an authority to investigate and indeed receive reports about corrupt conduct. If you ask the average person in the street are they concerned about corruption in public life, many will say yes – but not only now; I say that historically as well. I do not necessarily want my intervention to be perceived as an imputation of corruption on the Government side. I am talking about Governments generically. But when you drill down about what he or she, that person in the street, understands by corrupt conduct, it may not be the same as what we or lawyers would understand by the term, and it certainly does not fall within the meaning of corrupt conduct as defined in this Bill. That does not mean that those concerns, in my view, are unjustified – in fact, we share, as an Opposition, some of those concerns, as I am going to be developing and explaining to this House during the course of my intervention – or indeed that we should ignore them. On the contrary, we should, in my respectful view, be trying to ensure that public trust in politicians and those in public life is restored, difficult as it is in this day and age where social media may blow out of all proportion or indeed distort facts beyond that which is true.

1980 Of course the public are concerned about bribery, whether of politicians, public officials or those in commercial organisations – which is covered by this Act; I will return to the meaning of corrupt conduct in a moment – but what they are concerned about and what they may understand by ‘corruption’ is tráfico de influencia, trading in influence –

1995 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, will the hon. Gentleman give way for a second?

2000 I often use words in Spanish also, but in the context of this debate, where we are looking at British legal concepts, can he translate that for the Hansard, so that we do not end up with a Hansard that has just a Spanish reference and not an English reference? That is all I would say at this stage.

2005 Hon. D A Feetham: Yes, I think he did not quite hear what I said, because I said trading in influence.

Hon. Chief Minister: I did not hear you say that.

Hon. D A Feetham: Yes, I did say trading in influence. So tráfico de influencia – or in English, trading in influence – cronyism and nepotism, undeclared conflicts of interest.

2010 The fact is that Gibraltar, either on its own or through the application of United Kingdom legislation, has legislated against corruption in various forms since the late 19th century. The Crimes Act 2011, for example, was a seminal piece of legislation. It imported many of the offences in the UK landmark Bribery Act 2010, but it did not expressly deal with nepotism and cronyism, trading in influence or undeclared conflicts of interest, abuse of entrusted power for private or political gain.

2015 Members may say that all of those things, cronyism and nepotism included, may be caught by this Act, and it is true that bribery takes many forms, but one of the most difficult to pin down in the context of bribery is bribery in the context of exchange of favours. Everywhere in the world, there will always be some individual or organisation that may try to promote the interests of a public official or a business person through privileged connections or status. This person may then be expected to return the favour – for example, providing potential contractors with confidential bidding information on rival bids, choosing a particular contractor rather than others more suitable. Money does not necessarily have to exchange hands, but it is still a huge concern.

2020 Cronyism and nepotism, where favours are given to decision makers, friends or relations to extract unfair advantage is, in my view, what people out there are concerned about. Again, I say that not as a criticism of the Government; I say that historically. There is no legislation in Gibraltar that comprehensively prohibits that type of conduct, and it is a huge lost opportunity that we come to this House establishing an Authority to deal with corrupt conduct but restrict the investigation capability of the Anti-Corruption Authority simply to bribery, election, fraud, election offences and certain conspiracy offences – in other words, offences that exist already in our statute book and that the Police are already charged with investigating. What we ought to have done is taken this opportunity to look at some of the other types of conduct. It is not easy to create new offences in the context of what I have described, but it is not impossible and it is the way we ought to be proceeding, in my respectful view, as a Parliament.

2035 I also say that, because there is a concern about all of those types of conduct that are not included within corrupt conduct that would be caught by this Bill, the codes of conduct and disclosure obligations of Ministers and MPs are important. I remind the House that in Press Release 610/2015 on 8th September 2015, the Government said this. (Interjection) I did say that I would make no political – (Interjections) Except for this one. (Interjections) I did give a health warning, Mr Speaker, at the very beginning – except for this one. I quote:

The Government is pleased to have broken new ground with the publication of the two Codes. There has been no attempt to regulate the activities of Ministers and Members of the Gibraltar Parliament ...

Over seven years later, and the code has still not been implemented. And here we are, talking about the establishment of an Anti-Corruption Authority, and we in this place do not have a fully implemented code of conduct that governs the activities of all of us – not just the Government but all of us. That, in my respectful view, is not a satisfactory state of affairs and opens all of us 2045 collectively – all of us, because in our capacity today we are here as legislators – to, in my view, deserved criticism.

The Government has a duty to promote high standards of behaviour amongst MPs and public servants. If the code is still not effective, if we do not deal with nepotism and cronyism, trading and influence or undeclared conflicts of interest, we cannot really, with any degree of seriousness, 2050 be tackling issues relating to corruption by simply creating an Authority. I accept that it is easy to criticise, as opposed to also suggesting alternatives, but that is why, in 2019 in our manifesto, we had suggested the creation of a commission for standards charged with the investigation of many of these issues.

Corrupt conduct in this Bill is defined by reference to the schedule, and the offences in the 2055 schedule are limited to offences of fraud and bribery under the Crimes Act 2011, offences relating to election practices in the Parliament Act, common law offences of misconduct in public office, and cheating the revenue, together with accessory liability. These offences can be investigated by the Police and can be prosecuted by the Prosecution Service today. No one has suggested that the current structures of investigation and prosecution are inadequate, and save that fraud offences 2060 are complex and potential improvements can be made in relation to how those are investigated and indeed tried – which of course is a different debate entirely because the way that fraud is investigated and tried, we could be talking here for another two hours in relation to that – in our view, quite frankly, no one has properly explained why these specific offences that are defined as corruption for the purposes of this Bill are not adequately or properly investigated or prosecuted 2065 today by the Police. To add just another layer on top of that, with respect, appears, in our view, to be unfocused.

What I would urge the Government to do in order to meet the points that I have just made is either create, or at least undertake to explore to create offences of nepotism, cronyism, trading in influence or undeclared conflicts of interest, and then undertake to add them to the schedule.
2070 I accept that if that were to happen, then of course it would meet the point that I have made during the course of my intervention.

The alternative is to allow the remit of the Authority to be wider than just investigating the offences that are included within the schedule, because there was an opportunity here for this Authority to not just investigate specific offences, but perhaps investigate types of conduct that 2075 may at the moment fall short of offences that we have in the statute book. Of course, our preference is for a much wider look at this in terms of looking at creating other offences relating to the types of issues that I have spoken about, but even if you do not do that, at least allow the Anti-Corruption Authority to perhaps investigate issues that amount to cronyism, nepotism, traffic of influence, all those types of issues, and perhaps issue sanctions against individuals in public 2080 office, even politicians, if that sort of thing has taken place but it does not amount to a criminal offence.

That deals with the first overarching point. The second one is this, and it relates to the way the composition and the removal of Anti-Corruption Authority ... is devised in the Bill. The Bill, at section 3(3), at the moment provides for the chairperson to be appointed by the Chief Minister.
2085 Under the amendment, it is now going to be the Special Appointments Commission. And then, in relation to the four other persons, which in the Bill is the Chief Minister in consultation with the Leader of the Opposition, that is going to be changed with the Chief Minister appointing two, as I understand it, and the Leader of the Opposition appointing two. Our preference is for there to be no political involvement in the appointment of the people to the Anti-Corruption Authority.
2090 Whether it be the Chief Minister or the Leader of the Opposition, in our respectful view, if the route is the Special Appointments Committee, it should all be the Special Appointments Committee. It is important because we believe that those who sit on an authority such as this ought to be completely and utterly independent in any way, shape or form, appointment included, of any kind of actual or perceived political interference.

2095 The amendments which relate to appointment do not deal with an important issue, and that is the removal of anybody on the Anti-Corruption Authority, because under subsection (9) it is the Chief Minister who may at any time remove a person appointed under this section. It then says 'on any of the following grounds', and there are a number of grounds (a) to (k). The second, (b) is the failure to carry out duties, powers and functions. First of all, it is a discretionary power, but 2100 secondly, it is a tremendously wide power and potentially subjective as well, because what he, as Chief Minister, thinks is a failure to carry out a duty or a power or a function may not be what we on this side or anybody out in the street thinks is deserving of somebody getting the sack. May I therefore, for those reasons, urge the Government to at least consider an amendment and, rather than the Chief Minister, the Special Appointments Committee may, for example, exercise that 2105 function as well – the removal – rather than the Chief Minister?

What we are essentially urging in relation to this aspect of our concerns about the Bill is for the amendment that the Government is currently bringing, replacing the Chief Minister for the Special Appointments Committee for the appointment of the chairperson – which I believe is progressive; at the end of the day, it is the chairperson who is going to be responsible for overseeing the work
2110 of the Anti-Corruption Authority and ensuring that its operation is in accordance with the provisions of this Act under subsection 3(4) – to be extended to the other four individuals, rather than the Chief Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, we get rid of political involvement in that, and for the Special Appointments Committee to also be the body that effectively deals with removal. I do not urge any amendment in relation to the grounds for removal.

2115 Mr Speaker, it is for those reasons that we on this side of the House are going to be abstaining, but being a reasonable Opposition, as we are, we will, of course, hear what the other side say in response to the points I have made and others will be making during the course of their own individual interventions.

2120 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, the new Anti-Corruption Bill is a welcome and most necessary step. The Government has been postponing this for over a decade. I appreciate that taking this step is both a recognition that the problem exists and an attempt to address at least 2125 parts of it. Please note, though, that when I refer to job title or brief, I refer to the office and not the individual.

It is not easy to admit that there is a corruption problem when you have been in charge for 11 years and therefore for which you are directly or indirectly responsible, and for this rare exercise of honesty we are very grateful. For a Government that has either created or been 2130 tolerant of a corruption problem that it recognises as real, it is also a bold move, by presenting this Bill, to effectively admit that the authorities currently tasked with curbing corrupt behaviour are ineffective. This Bill does not emerge in a vacuum. All of the behaviours that it cites are already considered either illegal or at least politically offensive.

Let's not forget that there is already an Anti-Corruption Authority in Gibraltar: the RGP. It is already part of their remit to control many of the issues that this new Authority will also tackle. In fact, it will still be the job of the RGP to prosecute investigations undertaken by the new Authority. The fact is that judging by the need for this new Authority, the Government is saying that the RGP 2135 is currently incapable of fulfilling its remit and is therefore either compromised or underfunded, or both. It is also my view that some of the problems that affect the levels of corruption in Gibraltar are systemic and therefore difficult to tackle without making enormous changes to our political and economic system. This makes the task of legislating against corruption immensely challenging.

2140 That said, there are clear problems with this Bill. The way I see it, these are the main ones.

The biggest problem in Gibraltar tends not only to be a problem of legislation but a problem of enforcement. To adequately enforce laws that can effectively take on the centres of power in 2145 Gibraltar we need authorities that are, firstly, independent. This is the first systemic issue. Most people in Gibraltar are compromised by an omnipresent administration that is also the key player in the economy, with enormous scope for the exercise of discretionary power in the provision of grants and subsidies, government contracts, jobs, public housing, etc. In Gibraltar, if you attack

2150 the Government, the Government can make your life extremely difficult. Even with the protections granted to whistleblowers, there is too much scope for the arbitrary exercise of power and resources to guarantee that there are no repercussions.

In Part 2, section 3 of the Bill, it states:

The Anti-Corruption Authority consists of the following members-

(a) the Chairperson appointed by the Chief Minister;

(b) four other persons appointed by the Chief Minister in consultation with the Leader of the Opposition and, who, in the opinion of the Chief Minister [satisfy a series of criteria].

2155 Apart from the independence problems I have already mentioned, this Bill clearly gives too much power to the Chief Minister and, if you dig a little deeper, perhaps also to the Leader of the Opposition. Why is the chairperson appointed by the key figure that the chairperson has to scrutinise, Mr Speaker? Can you see a Chief Minister appointed Chairman of the Anti-Corruption Authority investigating potential corruption directly affecting the Office of the Chief Minister? Why is everybody else elected between the Leader of the Opposition and the Chief Minister? Can you see this Anti-Corruption Authority investigating, for example, undue links between 2160 Government and the interests of powerful law firms, for example?

There are plenty more nooks and crannies within this Bill that afford the Chief Minister excessive discretionary powers that could be used to manipulate the work of the Authority. For example, under the all-encompassing and loosely defined pretext of the protection of security, public interest or governance, the Chief Minister may deprive the Authority of information, answers or documents necessary to investigate corruption allegations, by applying the same 2165 criteria. The Chief Minister may also tamper with reports by censoring parts of the information provided to the Authority. The Chief Minister also has the power to amend the list of offences susceptible to investigation, which means that in practice the Chief Minister will have the power to define what constitutes corruption and what kind of corrupt behaviour this Authority can 2170 investigate.

I know that it is completely inconceivable that the Chief Minister would make use of these discretionary powers for anything other than the protection of the general interest. Of course he would never move a finger to protect his supporters, funders, colleagues or employers. Surely he would never apply these loopholes to use this Bill as a weapon against his perceived enemies. But 2175 maybe, just maybe, we should legislate in a way that does not trust the wolf to guard the sheep. We should not give the man or woman in charge the ability to escape proper public scrutiny or weaponise our Anti-Corruption Authority if we want to really tackle the corruption problem that obviously exists.

We need authorities that are adequately resourced. Without adequate resources, no authority 2180 can properly do its job. Investigating corruption allegations is a complex and costly affair, but it can also bring substantial returns. In fact, the World Bank calculates a surcharge of some 10% to the cost of all business in highly corrupt countries. In Gibraltar, most regulatory authorities are left largely toothless and easily manipulable by chronic underfunding. In order to stop this, we need adequate levels of funding to be guaranteed as part of law. Will this new Authority and the 2185 anti-corruption branch of the RGP be given the safeguards and the funding to ensure that they have the necessary reach and muscle?

More things that should be tackled in this Bill, but are not. Government does many of its deals behind an iron curtain of government-owned companies or companies owned by Government 2190 puppets, the details of which it often refuses to disclose to the general public. This toxic embrace between the public and private spheres and the opacity that it creates for the taxpayer will not be solved by an Anti-Corruption Authority of the kind that is being proposed. We need an anti-corruption policy that somehow directly outlaws the opaque use of any public money, particularly the crony capitalist use of these private companies to funnel public funds to party acolytes. With this current setup, deals are perfectly legal and there is no way we can know the important details

2195 of what is happening behind the scenes. This new law does not appear to put an end to these practices, particularly when you take into account the lack of independence issues that will arise from it.

Mr Speaker, for all these reasons and for the many others that have been raised by my hon. colleague to my right, I shall also be abstaining when voting for this Bill.

2200 Thank you.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Albert Isola.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, thank you.

The hon. Lady who has just finished, if I can start with her, makes comments such as ‘systemic corruption problem’. As a matter of fact, as the Hon. Mr Feetham has said, and as she said herself, if there is a corrupt practice or if there is evidence of corruption, then a report is made to the Police, investigated and prosecuted today. How can the hon. Lady say ‘a corruption problem which is systemic’ and not have done her civic duty and reported that matter to the Police to be investigated as a criminal offence? It is a criminal offence today.

2210 How can the hon. Lady say that all of our regulatory authorities are under-resourced and underfunded? I have worked with probably the two largest regulatory authorities and I can assure her – and she will see it from the Estimates – that they are not under-resourced and they are not underfunded. Interestingly, those two authorities that I work with investigate activities of companies, and if they discover any criminal conduct, whatever it may be, corruption or otherwise, they report it to the Police for the Police to prosecute. Isn’t that, in a funny way, what the Anti-Corruption authority is seeking to do as one of its functions – receive complaints, receive information, investigate, and if they find evidence of a corrupt practice, report it to the Police to be prosecuted by the Police?

Hon. D A Feetham: No, this is part of it.

2225 Hon. A J Isola: That is precisely what the system is designed to do and is already doing in many other areas.

Mr Speaker, for my hon. Friend Mr Feetham to start off by saying, ‘I am going to leave politics aside,’ and then embark on, ‘We are going to abstain because we think it adds a level of bureaucracy and we do not agree with the list in the schedule, but if you add a few more other bits to the schedule, then it could begin to look more like what we think should be there.’ Surely ‘it does not go far enough’, which is what the hon. Member has just said, means it is a step in the right direction, which is what the lady said when she started her intervention this evening. The first thing she said was, ‘I welcome it. It’s a step in the right direction.’ What would be absolutely legitimate for the hon. Member to say is ‘We believe this is a welcome step, we believe this is progress, but we think we should go further.’ That would be legitimate, but to abstain in taking a step that I think everybody in this House should welcome because of the intent behind the legislation ... I do not understand how you can say you are going to abstain in the establishment, for the first time, of an Anti-Corruption Authority.

2235 The hon. Member says we still do not have a fully implemented code of conduct. It is true, we do not, but the hon. Member used to be the Minister for Justice in the previous Government. Where was the draft code of conduct? Below the belt? (Interjection) Mr Speaker, it is an absolutely fair point. For the hon. Member to have been a former Minister for Justice, to not have brought any legislation whatsoever on anti-corruption or a code of conduct –

2245 Hon. D A Feetham: That is not true.

Hon. A J Isola: – and when the step is taken, it is not enough ... Okay, but support it, for goodness sake, because that would be legitimate. (Interjection by Hon. D A Feetham)

Mr Speaker, when you look at the schedule, all the hon. Member is doing is suggesting that we should be adding other activities to that schedule. Well, let's have that discussion, but let's accept the step that we have made. Let's welcome the step that we have made.

This is why I say that politics has got in the way of common sense, because surely it is best for the jurisdiction to have an Anti-Corruption Authority. Surely it is better for the jurisdiction to have a place where ... because according to the hon. Lady, the place is rampant with corruption but nobody makes a complaint anywhere. Well, let's give the establishment of the Authority the public awareness so that people feel empowered to come and make complaints, to give information, to start investigations. But the suggestion that because we have not gone far enough they are not going to support it ... I just do not understand on what basis that can possibly be the right position to take.

The hon. Lady spent quite some time saying how on earth can the Chief Minister appoint the chairman. There is a letter, which all Members have, that shows that it is not the Chief Minister who is going to appoint the chairman. Not only is there a letter before all of us, but the hon. Lady the Minister for Justice explained the reasons why we are making that change. So has the hon. Lady not read the letter? Or did she not listen to the hon. Member, the Minister for Justice? It is a specified Appointments Commission that will appoint the chairman, not the Chief Minister. Why? Because it was a valid point, validly considered and changed to make sure there is no issue in that respect, there is no interference in that respect. In fact, it was welcomed by Mr Feetham. Of course it was – common sense.

So I really struggle to give any credence to the suggestions that we are creating, as Mr Feetham said, an extra level of bureaucracy, with cost, but if we add more items to the schedule, then we will be okay. Well, let's have that discussion, not the political abstention on a step forward, which just does not make sense.

I think this is a very good first step in the establishment of an Authority to do precisely what the hon. Lady has described this evening, and I have to say the mix between an Anti-Corruption Authority and establishing it and the act of corruption ... When we have anti-money laundering laws, which we have over the past years been focusing very heavily on in this House, it is not because we are accepting that there is an money laundering problem and that is why we need anti-money laundering laws; it is to stop any money laundering that we have the laws. This is precisely the same. This is not this Government saying there is corruption, so we need an Anti-Corruption Authority. Nonsense! It is precisely to ensure that we maintain good standards of conduct, it is precisely to ensure that there is no corruption, that we want people to be alive and aware so they can make complaints and we can stop it, not the reverse.

I think it is very unfair of the hon. Lady to stand up and say that we have a systemic corruption problem. If that is what she believes, I would expect her to make a report to the Commissioner of Police and ensure that those acts are fully investigated and ultimately – if it is true, which I do not believe – prosecuted.

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Is the Leader of the Opposition going to be speaking? Who is? Roy Clinton then, yes.

2290

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I think we can all agree that the Bill is on a very serious topic that is the subject of much debate, not just here but around the world. And, of course, if we are going to introduce legislation in this place and we are trying to tackle either a real or perceived problem – and it may be more perceived than real – we have to make sure that in the eyes of the people we serve it is indeed credible.

I obviously identify with all the remarks by my hon. Friend the Hon. Mr Feetham, and indeed the hon. Lady.

If I had to characterise this piece of legislation, I would use two words: toothless and caged. This legislation is toothless. The Hon. Minister for Financial Services says, 'I work with the regulators, and if they find criminal conduct they go straight to the Police.' Fine, but what he fails to mention is that those organisations have the ability to sanction. They have the ability to remove licences and they have other powers by which to sanction individuals. This Bill, as far as I can tell, has no power to sanction anyone for anything, other than to refer it to the Police if there is evidence of a criminal offence. So what, in fact, is this organisation doing? What value is it actually adding to the public? Is it perhaps that we should, as a Parliament, have a public relations campaign and tell the general public, 'By the way, do you realise that you can report corruption to the Police? These are the criteria and this is the bar you need to reach.'

As my hon. Friend said, I think the general public have a different view of what they think of as corruption, and they do not necessarily look at it at a criminal level. The bar may be set perhaps too high to meet the test to be deemed corruption in that sense. There are many different ways in which, in the modern world, you can actually achieve the same result without money moving, and it may be very difficult to prove to the satisfaction of a criminal court that that offence has been committed. However, if you had a body that considered, as has happened in the UK in the past, where – certainly in my experience in banking, where they are talking about tax – they start talking about the spirit of the law, not actually the letter of the law but the spirit of the law ... Perhaps what we should be looking at is a wider concept, rather than narrowly defining it in what are existing legal terms and an existing legal framework. So in that sense this legislation is toothless. It does not actually add anything to anything.

In terms of being caged, the method of appointment is very much in the control of this place. As the hon. Lady has said, that will not necessarily assuage the concerns, real or imaginary, of the general public. I think we should perhaps have been a little bit more inventive in coming up with this legislation and perhaps had a little bit more discussion across the floor if we genuinely wanted to achieve consensus, because it is a very important topic.

And so, Mr Speaker, on that overall theme, I would say toothless and caged, but specifically in terms of independence, I am going to drill down to one very narrow point, which is in respect of the public financing of this, and that is that the hon. Lady refers specifically, I think maybe once or twice, to the public ombudsman structure. I was looking specifically at the funding of this statutory body and I refer Members specifically to Part 2, clause 3(13) and (14), which reads as follows:

The Anti-Corruption Authority must manage its affairs and any remuneration and expenses payable to a member shall be a charge on the Consolidated Fund.

Members will know that a charge has very specific meaning in public finance. It is an item that goes straight out of the Consolidated Fund without any reference to Parliament. We do not vote on charges. But subclause (14) then says:

Expenses incurred by the Anti-Corruption Authority in the discharge of its functions shall be payable out of the Consolidated Fund.

The wording is entirely different. 'Shall be a charge' has a very different meaning to 'shall be payable out of', so you have this bizarre scenario where the appointed members are a charge, a bit like the Chief Justice, but then the expense of the Authority is subject to political discretion.

I do not think that is perhaps what the Minister for Justice was intending in drafting this legislation, because she did specifically refer to section 4 of the Ombudsman Act, and if you read section 4 of the Ombudsman Act, it has two clauses under Remuneration and Expenses:

4.(1) There shall be paid to the holder of the office of Ombudsman a salary, expenses and allowances at such rates as may, from time to time, be determined by resolution of the Parliament.

2340 That raises one interesting point: who determines what the remuneration is of the members of the board? It is silent. We have nothing on that. And then secondly – and this is the important point:

(2) The salary, expenses and allowances of the office – not the holder, the office – of the Ombudsman shall be a charge on the Consolidated Fund without the need for appropriation.

2345 That is very different wording to what we have here before us. If you look in the Estimates Book, for the Ombudsman it appears on page 16 as Head 6, Emoluments and Other Charges, and then the full expense appears in Appendix A as a statutory body. I am sure this is what the hon. Lady intended with this, but that does not appear to be the effect of the wording that has appeared in the legislation. Of course we are abstaining, but from a public finance point of view it seems to be undermining the independence of the statutory body, in that only the cost of the board members is a charge, but the expense of running it is a political discretion. That cannot be right, so I would urge the hon. Lady, if she is adamant to continue with this Bill, to look at that because it may not give effect to what she thought it was going to do, and that is fundamental in a body which has to be not just seen to be independent but has to be financially independent. You cannot have the members being paid without political interference, but then it cannot even pay the rent on its offices without a political sanction. I think that probably is not what the Minister intends.

2355 Mr Speaker, I limit my contribution to that because, as I said, my hon. Friend has quite clearly laid out our position, as has the hon. Lady. As I said, if I had to sum this up: toothless and caged.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Gilbert Licudi.

2360 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, thank you.

There may be some points that I make which have already been touched upon briefly by my colleague Mr Isola, but there are some points that need to be stressed.

2365 Of course it is legitimate in a democratic society to have a difference of views on what legislation is or is not needed, so we can have a debate as to whether this Bill is necessary or unnecessary. What the Opposition cannot do legitimately, in my view, is say, 'This should not be done because we would not have done it.' Mr Feetham does not quite say that. He does not say this should not be done, he says this should be done but it should go even further – not that it should not be done.

2370 What the Government has decided is that this is the right way to proceed, at least at this stage, and that this is the way it should be done, but importantly, it is the Government giving effect to a commitment that it made a number of years ago and on which Members opposite, year after year, speech after speech have been saying, 'When are you going to do it?' Now that it is being done, they get up and they are not happy, and they abstain instead of saying, 'We agree that this should be done and therefore we are going to support it, but we would have done it in a different way and we would have gone further.' That is a legitimate position for the hon. Members opposite to take, but that would necessarily involve saying, 'We agree that this is a step in the right direction.'

2375 In fact, the hon. Lady touched upon this. I thought her contribution was going to be different, given that she started by saying this is a welcome step – a welcome and necessary step is what she says. Having described this as a welcome and necessary step, she says, 'but I am abstaining'. Well, if it is a welcome and necessary step, it is something that she ought to support. Why on earth she is not supporting it I fail to understand, given the contribution she has made.

2380 What she said – and quite an extraordinary statement – is that this Bill is an acknowledgement that the body charged with tackling corruption is ineffective. That, with the greatest respect to the hon. Member, is an absurd proposition to make. That is a slur on the Royal Gibraltar Police. What is it she is saying, and on what basis is she making that statement? Is she saying that the Police have received 20, 30, 50 reports of corruption and they have not done anything about it, they are totally ineffective, they have not got the expertise, they have not got the officers, they have not got the equipment, they have not got the software? Is that what she is saying? And if she is saying that, on what basis is she saying it? What is the evidence?

It is all very well to come to this this House and make these grandiose statements, but they have to be backed up. Hon. Members opposite often say that their job is to hold the Government to account, but each of our jobs is to hold to account what each Member says, and the hon. Member has to account for what she says in this Parliament. It is quite extraordinary to come here and make a serious slur on the Royal Gibraltar Police without a shred of evidence to back it up. That is shameful conduct in this House.

Mr Feetham – a point already made by my hon. colleague, Mr Isola – when he says it does not go far enough and then he says trading influence, cronyism, nepotism, undisclosed conflicts of interest and all of that should be added to the schedule –

Hon. D A Feetham: Offences should be created.

Hon. G H Licudi: Yes, that is precisely the point, offences should be created, so it is not just a question of legislating in relation to public conduct because, as the hon. Member knows – and it is important not to confuse the two issues – there are principles of public conduct, generally known as the Nolan Principles, the seven principles of public conduct, which deal with all of these issues, but those generally find their way into a code of conduct which can be breached and for which there can be sanctions. That is very different from criminal conduct, and that is not what this Bill is about. This Bill is about corrupt conduct in the criminal sense, and therefore bringing all those other matters, unless you make them criminal offences ... That is, of course, a debate that can be had, but the last major piece of legislation on criminal offences was the Crimes Act 2011. And who was the architect of the Crimes Act? The Hon. Mr Feetham (Interjections) – a seminal piece of legislation, as he described it at the time in this House, which was not actually implemented until we came in, until we had that new dawn in December 2011 –

Hon. A J Isola: A proper Minister for Justice.

Hon. G H Licudi: We had another Minister for Justice – I forget who he was – who brought in the Crimes Act, but of course not taking away any credit from Mr Feetham. Mr Feetham created that legislation. He prides himself on it and really we do not have to derogate from that at all.

Mr Feetham has said today we are missing an opportunity, we are creating legislation which could have done this. But what about that opportunity? Why hasn't he explained, if he feels the way he feels, that cronyism, nepotism and all that should be criminal offences ...? If he feels that way, why weren't they included? Has he changed his view, or is it that nepotism and cronyism have to be a criminal offence when the GSLP Liberals are in government but not when the GSD are in government? Then it is just about politics. (Hon. Chief Minister: Discrimination.) It is all about making political points for the sake of political points rather than conviction. If the hon. Member was really talking about conviction – and this is a matter of conviction – then he would have done it, but he did not. But now that the GSLP Liberals are in office, they should do it, and all of this should be criminal offences.

Mr Clinton, in again a rather extraordinary intervention, describes this as toothless and caged and asks what value this is adding to the public. That approach is totally inconsistent with the approach that Mr Feetham has taken, which is not that this does not add value, it is just that it is not valuable enough. In other words, there is value in this. That is the approach that has been taken by the official Opposition, and Mr Clinton has just got up and shot that to bits, saying this 2435 does not add any value at all. Perhaps they could get their story right from one speaker to the other.

When he talks about this being toothless – and let us remember that the official line from the official Opposition is that this does not go far enough because there should be other offences, not just legislation, in terms of conduct in public life added to the list – what is it precisely ...? I did not 2440 hear him say it and perhaps he could elucidate and tell us what he is thinking and what he is proposing. What is the tooth, given that this is toothless, that this is lacking, particularly in the context that cronyism etc., according to them, should all be criminal offences and added to the list?

Let's assume that Mr Feetham is right. We have a piece of legislation like this, which is good 2445 enough, but then it adds seven, eight, 10 pieces of additional offences. And this is toothless because it does not provide for sanctions by this administrative body. What is Mr Clinton suggesting? What is the Opposition suggesting? That in respect of criminal offences, which is what this deals with and what Mr Feetham has acknowledged, the list is not long enough. What is Mr Clinton suggesting that an Anti-Corruption Authority as a statutory body should do? Should it
 2450 be setting out sanctions? Should it be now hearing criminal cases? Should it now be acting as judge and jury and everything else, and then issuing whatever criminal sanction? Is that what he is suggesting, an alternative form of criminal jurisprudence and criminal procedure being created in Gibraltar? He does not seem to have an answer to that. I am happy to give way for the hon. Member to say precisely what he is proposing in respect of all these criminal offences. How do 2455 you create a statutory body and give it the power?

What this is designed to do is for the statutory body to receive reports or make investigations of its own volition because it considers that it is necessary. It has the power to interview, it has the power to go to court to seek certain orders, it has the power to collect all the evidence that it needs, and then, having taken a view, it can pass it on to the Police, who will decide, after further 2460 investigation, if necessary, whether a criminal procedure should be adopted. I would suggest that that is the only way this can work, even with the long list that Mr Feetham has suggested should be added to the schedule. Again, we have a situation where hon. Members get up and make these statements but do not think them through, do not think of the consequences of making those particular statements, and they honestly have no answer to that.

Mr Speaker, this is something that has been in the offing for some time. It is a complex piece of legislation. It required work and it required thought. When I was Minister for Justice, this was a piece of work that I started dealing with, and then others have been involved. Not being a frontbench Member of the Government, as I see it the Government is to be commended for taking this brave step of setting up an Authority which will have the power to carry out investigations, 2470 which will have the authority to request evidence and seek orders if necessary, and then to refer, where appropriate, to the RGP, which is empowered, which does its job properly and which also ought to be commended, and certainly we do so from this side of the House.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. (Banging on desks)

2475 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Damon Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, we have had our internal discussions and we have adopted a view on how to vote because of our misgivings. It is no secret that we exchanged statements in the press when this Bill was first announced and we have, in many respects, already argued some 2480 of the points that we have made and some of the points that no doubt the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition will be making on our behalf, certainly on the side of the Opposition, but one thing that we did comment is let's see if we can be persuaded by the hon. Gentlemen opposite. It is within the realms of possibility. (Interjection) The reality is this is a debating chamber, and unless you come here with a fixed and determined view for political reasons, as the Hon. Mr Isola is referring to, then you are not going to allow yourself to be persuaded. I must say, genuinely 2485 speaking, that I am disappointed. The contributions we have heard up until now from that side of the House have not persuaded us, and – (Interjection) There is a possibility that we change our minds by the time the hon. Gentleman to my right speaks. There is a possibility. Maybe the speakers who are lined up to speak now will be more persuasive than the hon. Gentlemen who have just spoken. That is a possibility.

Let me say this, Mr Speaker: the reality is that this is a political issue and, as a result, we are approaching this labouring under a very strong dose of cynicism because of the track record of the hon. Gentlemen, so their arguments need to be even stronger to persuade and change our minds in relation to this issue, because actually ... I think the Hon. Mr Isola mentioned, and I share that view, the message that Gibraltar could be sending out to the wider world as a jurisdiction ... At the end of the day, this is going to be passed with a Government majority. It is inbuilt and we know it is going to pass – unless we are able to persuade some of them to vote with us, but I very much doubt it. The hon. the backbencher, who is not subject to collective responsibility, may vote in our favour, but even then we do not have the numbers. The reality is it would have been nice if it had had the unanimous support of the Parliament because this is an important piece of legislation, as the Hon. Mr Clinton said earlier, but unfortunately ... It is not an entrenchment, it is as a result of the history of their behaviour. When the Hon. Mr Licudi talks about a new dawn, that new dawn should have ushered in the introduction of anti-corruption legislation. It did not. They flip-flopped. Not only did they delay and actually not do it during the lifetime of that Parliament, in 2015 when they went to the people it was not in their manifesto, it was not in their programme of government, and then it was in 2019 and they have left it, coincidentally – and with a dose of cynicism again – to the election year. Because of that, this just comes across as an exercise of window dressing and a box-ticking exercise.

2495

2505

I will tell the hon. Gentlemen who have spoken up until now why they have not persuaded us. I think the Hon. the Chief Minister, in the past, has said, when we have debated this issue in public, ‘The offences are already there. If you have a complaint to make, make it. You can make it to the Police.’ The Hon. Mr Licudi, in criticism of Ms Hassan Nahon ... criticises her very aggressively and vigorously about casting a slur on the RGP. That suggests that the RGP is doing its job and there is no reason to doubt or question that. Then what is the point of this legislation, other than to do the box-ticking exercise in advance of a general election which will be called during the course of the next 12 months? This is why I ask the speakers who are going to come after Mr Licudi and Mr Isola to be more persuasive. They need to come up with more. The Hon. Mr Feetham has suggested specifics that can be done to perhaps make us say, ‘Let’s back this legislation. We want to do more, but let’s back this legislation and then, as a society, as the political class currently in this Chamber, we can speak out in one voice, in unison, all united, that this is good for Gibraltar.’ But we cannot bring ourselves to do so.

2510

2520

Mr Licudi talks about a commitment. I have already talked about the flip-flopping nature of their attitude. And then he says that we have been complaining ‘When are they going to do it?’ But what is ‘it’? This nonsense ... It is a damp squib legislation, based on the arguments, submissions and contributions put forward by Mr Licudi and Mr Isola, because they are both saying these are offences set out in the schedule that are already criminal offences which the RGP can investigate. Indeed, if the RGP investigates, the role of this commission is redundant by law. This is what this Bill says, (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) so how many ...? And Mr Isola talks about ... I have just heard the Hon. Chief Minister talk about the FSC. I do not know the exact point he was making. What is this, other than ... what, a post box to receive reports and complaints, at expense? And manning it, having employees, having people investigating – for a post box?

2525

Hon. A J Isola: It is a good idea.

2535

Hon. D J Bossino: It is a nonsense. It is not a good idea as it currently stands. It is not enough. (Interjections)

Hon. D A Feetham: In fact, what I said was that.

2540 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, the Hon. Mr Feetham shows me his notes of his speech and he talks about an extra layer of bureaucracy, suggesting that he has not described it in positive terms. What is the point? An extra layer of bureaucracy, an extra expense – expense we can ill-afford because the hon. Gentlemen are having to use money from the Savings Bank because we have no money in the coffers.

2545 What is the point of this, other than to tick the box? COVID and Brexit, no doubt – you forgot about that excuse. (Hon. Chief Minister: Excuse?) Yes, it is an excuse. It may be an excuse which he can rely on legitimately, but it is an excuse, Mr Speaker. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) Maybe they do not want to listen to what I have to say. (Interjections) I am listening to what they have to say (Interjections) and I am telling them why we are not persuaded. In fact, the perennial thought I had whilst I was listening to these two gentlemen was that they are digging a bigger hole for themselves precisely because of that RGP point, precisely because we have a list there which 2550 is a nonsense because the list already lists criminal offences. So what is the point?

Hon. D A Feetham: How many reports have there been to the RGP in the last [inaudible] years? (Interjections)

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, the Chief Minister's powers, in our view – and this is a bit more granular, but I think it still deals with the principle of this because there has been an attempt at slightly diluting those powers with this amendment, which quite frankly, yes, is a welcome step in the right direction, but it is a small amendment. It does not deal with the fundamental point 2560 (Interjection by Hon. A J Isola) because they have allowed themselves to include the Specified Appointments Commission to be the body which appoints the Chairman, and then they introduce – presumably as a sop to us, to try to get us to vote in favour ... I do not know, but again, I am afraid to say, with a dose of cynicism, as far as we are concerned, about every action they take – the Leader of the Opposition participating in the appointment of the four other members.
2565 But nothing is done – and the Hon. Mr Feetham has addressed this – about the removal powers, which stay with the Chief Minister. No attempt has been made at amending that provision.

I am not going to repeat the point that my hon. Friend has made in relation to that, which I concur and agree with because he suggested that maybe we should have the Appointments Commission also removing, but I would go slightly further. There is a list offences there which 2570 quite frankly, if they are committed ... It is absolutely and utterly bizarre that a person, for example, convicted of a criminal offence punishable by a term of imprisonment, is capable of continuing to be on the Authority, because as it currently stands the Chief Minister may, ergo can, exercise his discretion or her discretion – I am not personalising it to him; it is whichever Chief Minister we have in the future – and decide that that individual should remain or that that individual is guilty of misconduct. Yet the Chief Minister of the day decides, 'No, I think I am going to allow this individual to remain,' and that individual is actually going to be investigated for issues of misconduct. It is completely bizarre, and that shows that there has been an attempt at creating this sort of arm's-length situation, but the arm is very short, quite frankly. The arm is very short. The Hon. Chief Minister shakes his head and I look forward to hearing his contribution and seeing 2575 if he is able to convince and persuade us, but I very much doubt it.

One final point, Mr Speaker, talking about – (Interjection) Yes, of course.

Hon. G H Licudi: Before he makes his final point, I wanted to make a point on what he has said and give him a chance to respond to this before he sits down.

His main thrust in this contribution is what is the point of this legislation. That is essentially ... He has mentioned it several times: what is the point of this, because you have a list of criminal offences that can be investigated by the RGP? The main thrust of Mr Feetham's contribution was this does not go far enough because the list is too short. In other words, there should be other criminal offences added to that list which are criminal offences that are necessarily investigable 2590 by the RGP. So if there are more criminal offences that can be investigated by the Police, then there is a point, but with the list as it is, there is no point. With respect, Mr Speaker, this argument makes no sense whatsoever.

2595 Hon. DJ Bossino: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman has misunderstood the bones ... I know that he knows he is making a point on the basis of a misunderstanding. (Interjection) I know that he knows that. He is clever enough to know what point we are making.

I will explain, just for my final point, why we say that the Chief Minister still holds too much power. Under clause 39(2), reports are submitted in draft to the Chief Minister. (Interjection) They are submitted in draft to the Chief Minister, and there are elements of it where maybe ... I might 2600 be persuaded ... where he decides that material should be excluded because it would not be in the public interest. But then there is wording here which says where it would not be appropriate or it is necessary to exclude, and the individual who decides that is not the Authority and is not the Commission, which we have suggested maybe could be included in this decision-making process, it is the Chief Minister himself. I am not talking about Fabian Picardo, I am talking about 2605 any future Chief Minister. We hope that a future Chief Minister will be a different Chief Minister sooner rather than later – (Interjections) Well, I have made no secret about that. I am quite relaxed about that. I make no secret about that, that it will happen sooner rather than later.

2610 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words on this Bill, given the way things have evolved and the way the discussion has progressed, making the point also from the outset that I am not a lawyer, so I will be dealing with this perhaps slightly differently than my colleagues who have spoken before. But certainly I have 2615 to endorse every word that has come from my colleague Samantha Sacramento – and I congratulate her on her presentation of the Bill – and also from my colleagues, Minister Isola and Gilbert Licudi as well.

Let me say, first of all, that what we are doing in presenting this Bill is implementing our manifesto – that is to say our policy, the policy that we stood for election under, and what we are therefore obliged to do in government.

The House knows that in 2011 we had proposed the establishment of an Anti-Corruption Authority in our manifesto. At that time we were criticised and attacked by the hon. Members opposite for proposing it. Their view then was that they had full faith in the RGP and the Attorney General to administer the provision of the law and therefore the Authority was not, in their view, 2625 necessary. The PDP at the time also took the view that there was no need for an Anti-Corruption Authority at all. In fact, they went further and said it would serve only to create alarmist headlines which would undermine the attraction of inward investment into Gibraltar by creating the impression that there must be rampant corruption in Gibraltar if there is a need for a special Anti-Corruption Authority. We took the view at the time, on the advice of the RGP, that we were not 2630 going to proceed with that then. We then were re-elected in 2015. The view was put at the time that, as I said, this was not something which was necessary. We then said in our 2019 manifesto that we would establish an Anti-Corruption Authority regardless. That, Mr Speaker, is what we are doing today: implementing the policy of the Government, implementing our manifesto and doing what we set out to do.

2635 So this whole business and area topic of an Anti-Corruption Authority has an interesting history, and in my view the Opposition have pitched their arguments too high to have criticised us for a clause in the Bill which has already been changed and which the Government has proposed to change, as my colleagues have already pointed out, and that is the question of the appointment of the chairman under clause 3(3)(a) of the Bill. The appointment is changed from the Chief of the Chief Minister. So I think there is a point to be made that when boards, bodies and organisations of this kind are set up – and I remember previous Chief Ministers making the same point – somebody has to do the appointing. They cannot just appoint themselves. So one of their main points in relation to this, which seems to have been the manner of appointment, we think has been taken care of by the amendment of which they have received notice and which was also announced and put forward to the House by my colleague the Minister for Justice.

They have, in my view, been ungenerous and too party political in the way they have decided to approach this issue, because the reality is we need to start somewhere. We do not have an Anti-Corruption Authority. They did not set up an Anti-Corruption Authority in 16 years in office. They never deemed it was necessary. Even in opposition, when we came into government, they still did not deem that it was necessary.

So we need to start somewhere, and as my colleague Minister Isola said, this is a good start. Legislation, I do not need to tell anybody in this House, is not set in stone. There is always scope for amendments, for changes, for improvements. Nobody, certainly not us on this side of the House, is claiming to be infallible. There is always room for improvement. If they felt so strongly about it, the Bill was published on 1st December and we tabled amendments to the Speaker on 17th and 20th January, they had those six weeks that follow publication of a Bill to contact my colleague the Minister for Justice, to put forward ideas and suggestions to try to persuade the Government to do something different. That could have happened before the Bill came to the House and there could have been scope for some constructive, positive opposition or constructive, positive co-operation between the Opposition and the Government.

I think the case in point here is the schedule we have on page 33 of the Bill and the listing of offences in the schedule. Hon. Members, as I have understood it, are saying that this does not go far enough and there is scope for adding or creating new offences. That is something the hon. Members could have put to my colleague in the six weeks that the Bill has been published, and there may have been an attempt to try to see whether we could find some common ground on that issue too. If that is the only concern in relation to the schedule, that too may have allayed some of the issues and concerns that they have raised here this evening.

So in persuading them to try to vote for the Bill on the basis that it is not set in stone, I sadly do not want to conclude that nothing will ever be enough and whatever we promise, pledge or do, it will not be enough, because I think they have come here with a mindset. The fact that they did nothing in the six weeks before the Bill was taken by this House to try to see whether we could accommodate some of their concerns suggests that. But there is still scope, I think, if they accept what we are saying, that this is not set in stone, it can be changed, it can be amended, there is room for improvement.

It is not perfect, we are not infallible, but this is an important and essential first step to get the ball rolling, and I think I would ask them to ponder those remarks and see whether they are prepared to do something different. Otherwise, Mr Speaker, sadly, it is simply opposition for the sake of it.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am not in politics for the sake of it, and I do not do opposition for the sake of it. I come to issues on a principled position and I hope that by the time I sit down, people will see that we have a principled position on these issues, which I will explain.

I will pick up the points that different speakers have made as I go along, but I want to start quite broadly because I want to explain, as my hon. and learned colleague Mr Feetham has already explained, our broad position, which is really twofold: that it does not go far enough and that there are flaws in the drafting. Let me explain that, so that people understand as they listen to this debate.

The issue of corruption controls does not get resolved by setting up an Anti-Corruption Authority alone – let's start there, it does not – although an Anti-Corruption Authority, an 2695 authority of some form, should be set up, because that is our view. We call it the Commissioner for Standards. We are not wedded on the label. An Authority is an integral part, but it does not resolve it alone. If one is set up – and one should be set up – it needs to be effective, and so the controls need to be wider, its jurisdiction deeper and the powers stronger. When you analyse this Bill, it falls short at a number of hurdles, but it also falls short because it does not go far enough.

2700 Our position is that of course we want comprehensive controls on corruption and abuse – we have said that, it is our policy position – but our view, because it falls short, is that there must be the creation of much wider jurisdiction, rules and standards under the same umbrella of corruption controls to give the Authority that wider jurisdiction. Again, our point broadly is that if they are serious, they should go further.

2705 I hear the Deputy Chief Minister say he doubts our desire to co-operate or participate in that because we have not contacted them in the last six weeks, but the feeling of scepticism is mutual for some of the reasons the Hon. Mr Bossino has mentioned, because we have seen processes before where things we thought we shared common ground on do not progress. For example, the well-known examples of the establishment of Select Committees on important issues, which never meet, whether it is special needs, the environment or parliamentary reform. So we view each other – let me put it that way – with a degree of scepticism, well worn over so many years of politics. That does not mean that we cannot co-operate, but it does mean that that we view each other in that way.

2710 It is also a matter of fact that when he talks about the period of six weeks, we can talk about the period of 12 years. Whether the Members opposite like it or not, it is a fact that this is being debated today, in January 2023, in the 12th year of their administration.

2715 Mr Speaker, for me to explain the principled approach that we take in relation to corruption controls, we need to take a step back and I need to explain our position in the context of our international standards in relation to corruption controls and why we say this does not go far enough if we are really going to grasp the corruption controls agenda, the controls and abuse agenda. I want to explain that, and the starting point, if I may, is the UN Convention Against Corruption, which Members opposite will be familiar with, which has in its scope a much more widely defined set of principles than just a body to criminalise or to pursue an investigative action in relation to criminal offences.

2720 The Anti-Corruption Authority is a body, under this draft that we are considering today, that will have jurisdiction to investigate certain criminal offences. That is one of the things the UN Convention Against Corruption says a country should do, but it is only one. There are many other things that need to be done and there are standards across the board that need to be dealt with, whether they refer to public sector supervision or interference of government officials with third parties who want things from the Government – ultimately, that is what it is about – the use of power, influence in the award and supervision of contracts or jobs or money, and regulatory accountability and standards.

2725 In the foreword to the to the UN Convention Against Corruption, the Secretary General of the United Nations talks about corruption having corrosive effects on societies, undermining democracy and the rule of law, distorting markets and eroding the quality of life. We can discuss and disagree in this House whether these principles that are in the Convention are met, but they are certainly much wider than criminality.

2730 I did think the hon. Lady's contribution opposite, the mover of the Bill, was helpful in giving us a guided tour of the Bill, so I am not going to criticise her. Her contribution was helpful in that way, but I was struck by the fact that she said the creation of the Anti-Corruption Authority was, I think she said, compliant with Article 6 of the UN Convention – and indeed it would be – which seeks the creation of an Anti-Corruption Authority. But of course the UN convention on corruption controls is not just about the creation of an Anti-Corruption Authority. I will give examples, so that people can understand the point I am making.

2745 Under Article 7 of the UN Convention, you are supposed to adopt, maintain and strengthen systems which are aimed to control any degree of corruption in the recruitment, hiring, retention, promotion or retirement of civil servants – in other words, the appointment of public sector officers.

2750 Under Article 8, you are supposed to set up codes of conduct for public officials, to fight corruption.

Under Article 9, there are all sorts of controls that you are supposed to set up to deal with transparency, competition and objective criteria and decision making.

Under Article 10, states are asked to enhance transparency in public administration in relation to the organisation and function of decision-making processes.

2755 Under Article 12, there are supposed to be controls involving the private sector, enhancing accounting and auditing standards in the private sector.

2760 Mr Speaker, it is a long Convention, but the point I am making with these examples is that it is much deeper than just the establishment of an Anti-Corruption Authority to investigate offences that are already created. The Convention itself is much deeper and wider. It is about transparency, accountability, lack of opaqueness and public access to all this. So for us to seize that agenda of corruption controls, if we are really on the same page, it needs to be a deeper, wider and stronger Bill, legislation that is much wider in its jurisdiction, much more ambitious in its scope.

2765 My learned and hon. Friend Mr Feetham makes the point that trading influence is not a criminal offence and it is not scheduled to the Bill, but again, the Convention itself asks states to make it a criminal offence, and precisely this is part of what people talk ... maybe anecdotally, but this is the stuff that should be tackled if we are going to set up real controls that meet the issue that people are concerned about.

2770 The United Nations Convention Against Corruption is not the only document that sets out international standards. The Commonwealth Secretariat published, in 2021, 25 benchmarks on good anti-corruption practice. It is a number of benchmarks to deal with corruption offences, investigation and prosecution, asset recovery, transparency of asset ownership, political lobbying, public sector organisations, public officials, issuing permits, procurement, contract management, financial management, concession management, asset management – many more things than simply establishing an authority to be responsible for corruption. Establishing an authority happens to be one of the benchmarks, one of the 25, but it is only one out of the 25, and that is why this Bill does not go far enough, because it is not ambitious enough. It does not deal with the issue. This is not decisive.

2780 You have not dealt with the issue of corruption controls by setting up an Authority (Interjection) that, carbon-copy, has the same jurisdiction as the Police, but under section 18 of the Act needs to stop investigating if the Police are investigating, and therefore has nothing to do if the Police are already investigating. It does not deal with the issue. If you want to deal with the issue, deal with the other 24 benchmarks. Let's come up with legislation that is ambitious in its project, that actually deals with everything that we are supposed to, that is compliant with international standards.

2785 The Commonwealth Secretariat document, in its introduction, says this:

Corruption undermines the proper functioning of society. It corrupts government, parliament, the judiciary, law enforcement, public sector functions, private sector commerce, and dealings between private individuals. It results in poor public services and in over-priced and dangerous infrastructure. It damages organisations, resulting in reduced project opportunities and financial loss. It harms individuals, resulting in poor education and health, poverty, hunger, and loss of life. It prevents the proper rule of law so that the innocent and vulnerable bear the consequences while the guilty escape sanction.

It goes on to say:

In all countries, to a greater or lesser degree, corruption continues to erode all areas of society. Public officials embezzle public funds. Government ministers award contracts to political donors. Lobbyists improperly influence members of parliament. Law enforcement officers are bribed to tamper with evidence or bring false charges. [Etc.]

Obviously, this is a document written for the entire Commonwealth, and I am not suggesting in any way that any of these examples arise in Gibraltar, but the point is that if we are going to establish corruption controls against some kind of internationally acceptable set of standards, we need to be aware of what they are, and those benchmarks that are recommended by the Commonwealth are recommended as good-practice anti-corruption measures precisely because they are intended, as it says in the document, to help governments and public sector organisations assess their laws, regulations and policies to achieve the right standards.

When you look at the benchmarks produced by the Commonwealth Secretariat for the Commonwealth countries – and at the end of the day there are 54 Commonwealth independent states, and we are part of the Commonwealth family and like to think that we have common values and so it is important to look at these standards – it is obvious that it is much wider than simply setting up an authority. Several of the benchmarks are to ensure that there is adequate anti-corruption regulation in relation to activities which impact on the public, which would harm or produce loss to the public, including public services, or the financial system, or asset ownership, or political lobbying, financing, spending and elections, independent monitoring and auditing of public sector contracts. So it is about transparency and breaking down the opaqueness that we are concerned about on this side of the House. We have made it obvious by many of our contributions.

When you look at the specific benchmarks, benchmark 2 of the 25 is about setting up an authority responsible for preventing corruption, but there are so many other benchmarks on corruption controls that are not even touched by this legislation. At the end of it, when you make the balance sheet analysis on this legislation, it is poor and unambitious if it really wanted to deal with the issue.

Benchmark 10 requires public sector organisations to take particular action on anti-corruption. Benchmark 11 is about public officials.

Benchmark 12 is about issuing permits.

Benchmark 13 is about procurement, contract management, financial management, concession management – none of this is dealt with – independent auditing and breaking down the web of transactions.

If there is going to be real and effective adherence to the international standards, this Bill is not it. This Bill is a half measure – not even a half measure; it is a poor shadow of a half measure.

More recently still, in England there has been a report on propriety in governance that talks about the revolving doors on Ministers and the appropriateness of certain conduct being followed by Ministers in relation to appointments or business or lobbying. Again, these are lessons to be learned, but every time you look at these things and you then put next to them the Anti-Corruption Authority Bill that the hon. Members have produced – with great fanfare that they are ticking the box of compliance with their commitment to people in Gibraltar, as if to pretend that this therefore deals with the issue of corruption controls – the verdict is that actually it does nothing of the kind when you set it against the international standards, because in fact you realise that this is a pretty poor attempt. Yes, it establishes an Authority, which is one of the benchmarks, but it establishes an Authority that is ineffective, controlled to a very large extent in its powers, not strong enough, without wide enough jurisdiction, not dealing with offences that should be created and very limited in task because it is only about criminality. So the reality is that when you look at all those issues, that is why we are concerned, and we are right to be concerned.

The hon. Member Mr Licudi says they are carrying out ... I think he said they are carrying out their policy. I am not sure if it was Dr Garcia. (Interjection) Both of you – yes, I thought I heard it from both of you. I accept we cannot force the Government to go down the route that we would like, but equally I do not think it is right for Members on that side to chastise us for taking the view that because we do not think it goes far enough, we do not agree with you, and therefore that is a legitimate point of view as well. I do not criticise the hon. Members for taking the view that they only want to do an Anti-Corruption Authority of this type – ineffective; if that is what they want, so be it – but I think we have a legitimate position in saying that if we do not think this goes far 2840 enough, for the reasons I have explained and other colleagues on this side have explained, we are not going to vote for it. We are not going to vote against it, but we are abstaining because we do not think it goes far enough and the drafting in itself is flawed. I think it shows a terrible lack of understanding of the principles on corruption controls to think that this somehow does the trick, because it actually does not.

2845 The same goes, with all due respect, to the contribution by the Hon. and learned Mr Isola. He does not understand, certainly, that this is a half measure and we do not support it on that basis, and it is a total caricature of the position of the Hon. and learned Mr Feetham to say that if we were to tinker with the schedule, somehow this was going to be enough. Of course it is not going to be enough, because the Bill needs to be much wider, deeper and stronger, and that is the point we keep making. The Bill is, to a very large extent, as my hon. colleague said, window dressing in 2850 that sense. If you believe that you are giving the signal to the public that somehow the corruption controls are being dealt with, it is, if that is what is intended, window dressing, because it does not deal with the issue. It does not regulate conflicts of interest or cronyism or trafficking of influence at all. It does not deal with any kind of tendering or contract issues or transparency in financial management. It is a half measure. The Government has been brought, in our view, kicking and screaming to this issue, and it does not go far enough.

2855 The Hon. Dr Garcia made an allusion as to our position in 2011. It is correct that we were not in favour of the establishment of an Anti-Corruption Authority in 2011. We did not think it was necessary. But in the context of the current situation, yes, we do think there should be an effective Anti-Corruption Authority. Things have moved on, as well. The hon. Members can smile and smirk, 2860 but things have moved on. And things have moved on for them, by the way, because their party was in government in 1988 and they were elected in 2011 on the basis of doing things in a quite different way, so things have moved on in the same way things moved on for us as well.

2865 Our firm view is that if Gibraltar is going to deal with the corruption agenda on a proper basis, it has to be against the backdrop of international standards, establishing controls that are at arm's length of the Government so that there is proper balance, so that there are real checks and balances in the controls in a small community – in any community, big or small – as the Commonwealth benchmarks illustrate. It is for those reasons that we abstain on the Bill and it is for those reasons it does not have our support.

2870 This was an opportunity for a much deeper attempt at resolving the issue. After all, when Dr Garcia talks about the six weeks where we did not respond, if they have had almost 12 years to come up with this Bill he must understand that that is why we cannot see how they are serious about addressing the international benchmarks that exist in this area.

2875 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it is late on a Friday, but I am afraid to tell Members that I wish to respond to a lot of what they have said and pursue the purpose of this Parliament. A parliament, as I have often had cause to remind hon. Members, is defined by the word 'parliament'. The word 'parliament' means to parley, which is to debate, and to debate to try to reach an accommodation or an understanding.

I am not one of those people who believe that we come to this House with our inbuilt majority simply to do that which we set out to do, and we have demonstrated that today in the moving of the amendment that the hon. Lady has put before the House already and which I will take a little further this evening, hoping that hon. Members will then feel that they are able to join us in supporting this Bill.
2885

As I will demonstrate during the course of my address, what we are doing in this Bill is not failing to comply with the UN Convention because we do not do everything in the UN Convention, not failing to comply with the Commonwealth principles because we do not comply with all of the Commonwealth principles in this Bill; what we are doing is putting the last of the building blocks 2890 necessary for Gibraltar to be in compliance with the UN Convention and with the Commonwealth principles.

So the position that has been set out by the Leader of the Opposition in summing up for the official Opposition is actually logically, legally and factually wrong, because what he has suggested, as I will demonstrate when I go through their speeches, is the complete opposite of what the 2895 Commonwealth principles are there for and what the UN Convention does. I will also demonstrate that they have said the same things in the past. I think what I will also be able to demonstrate to hon. Members is that their memories, even of what happened six weeks ago, is starting to fail.

Abstaining on something as important as this Bill, especially given the issues that the hon. Members have set out, I think is no more than a political tactic, so I hope to persuade them either 2900 to support the Bill as I will propose it should be amended, or to have the courage of their convictions and vote against the Bill, (A Member: Hear, hear.) (Banging on desks) but not simply to abstain, because that is clearly no more than a political device deployed in an election year.

Of course, what hon. Members cannot do is get up and say this is a widely drawn Bill – that is how Mr Feetham suggested to us that this Bill was drafted, widely – but just not deeply enough.
 2905 Of course this Bill will not detract, and neither will any other Bill in this House, from the powers of the Royal Gibraltar Police to investigate and prosecute offences – of course not – but we see that, as Mr Clinton alluded, in other areas where the FSC is able to investigate matters but the Royal Gibraltar Police can take over those investigations and, in some instances, will be alerted by the FSC, or another regulator that we may have in our laws, to the investigations when there is a need 2910 to prosecute criminal offences.

The Bill that we have drawn is complementary to the powers of the Royal Gibraltar Police. What we are not going to do, neither would hon. Members want us to do, and indeed I will remind them that they told us we should not do, is create a parallel police force, a new jurisdiction, and – 2915 given where some of the arguments were taking us, after Mr Bossino in particular – a new kangaroo court where people would simply have allegations thrown at them and they would not have the guarantees of due process etc., that our well-tested and well-established legal system provide to them.

What we are doing, as the hon. Lady said in her intervention, is ensuring compliance, now full compliance, with the UN Convention on Anti-Corruption and Anti-Bribery. We already comply 2920 with the Convention on Anti-Bribery in particular, because, as Mr Feetham reminded us, our Crimes Act, drawn by him, and therefore, because it was drawn by him, a seminal piece of legislation which, in effect, brought together lots of other pieces of legislation in one book – it is that seminal ... He defended it in 2011 as already ensuring compliance with the UN Convention.

This Bill is so widely drawn that we even go down the rabbit hole of providing anti-corruption measures in respect of corrupting the Anti-Corruption Authority. It is all there in section 33. That 2925 is how widely drawn the Bill is. If Mr Bossino has not seen it yet, he should have regard to it.

I will descend to particulars in dealing with the issues that hon. Members raised specifically, but there is a key point about the power of the Chief Minister, a power of the Chief Minister in this Bill, that I am not going to defend, because as hon. Members will see when I come to 2930 particulars, I will seek to persuade them through agreement with some of their points that we should change some of them. But this Bill, when it gives power to the Chief Minister, is drawing that power in exactly the same way as our laws already give almost exactly the same power to the Chief Minister, whoever the incumbent may be, to redact reports, make determinations as to the public interest, decide whether things should be stopped or things should be continued, and that 2935 is a power that has been the power of Chief Ministers – power with a small p; we are Gibraltar, we have no seat in the Permanent Council of the United Nations – power such as it may be for Chief Ministers from the times of the AACR.

We shall look at those powers, but that model is not exclusive to Gibraltar. It is even the model in the United Kingdom, where the words ‘Chief Minister’ become ‘Prime Minister’, where in some 2940 instances it is set out in legislation identical to ours, or where it is set out ... not set out in conventions where the Prime Minister has that power. It is all right and a model for the rest of the 2945 world for Boris Johnson to have the power to dismiss the person who finds that he has failed to act properly, and yet here, where it is very unlikely – and I shall not speak about myself, but hon. Members have, I am grateful, depersonalised it from me ... where all of my predecessors would not deserve an allegation that any of them had acted in a way where they would be protecting themselves in respect of anti-corruption, yet here it is somehow unfair that it should be the Chief Minister. Well, the buck has to stop with someone. Or is it that we are still in the age where we have the chip that if the buck stops with Bwana in the Convent, it is fine, but if the buck stops with Fabian in Convent place, it is not fine?

2950 Mr Speaker, I put it to the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition in particular that he has led thinking in Gibraltar to suggest that we should not simply think that putting in the hands of the United Kingdom appointed officials is better than putting in the hands of the Gibraltarian elected politician. If somebody has to make a determination as to what is in the public interest of Gibraltar, should it be the Governor appointed by the United Kingdom, or should it be the person ...? I know they do not like that it was me, and that is what the political game is about, but should it be the person who has topped the poll of confidence of the people of Gibraltar, who enjoys the confidence of the majority of the people elected by the people of Gibraltar to this place, and who in this particular instance, by the way, got a majority of two to one votes to those who were not elected to government?

2960 Why is that relevant? And this is not about the last election, but why is it relevant? Who should be making the determinations as to the public interest? I put it to hon. Members that there should only be two persons who should be making the determination as to the public interest in the final end game of decision making in Gibraltar. One should be the senior elected politician representative of the people of Gibraltar and the other should be a judge. In some instances, judges have to make determinations as to the public interest, and in some instances, in fact, the determination made by the senior elected politician of this community – that is to say the Chief Minister – as to the public interest is even subject to review by a judge, who also makes a determination as to the public interest and can judicially review a decision or can, in any event, sometimes review statutorily a decision in the inherent jurisdiction of the court. We do not need to discuss those issues. We know that is the case. Of course it should be that way. But I will descend to particulars and I will try to create consensus across the floor of the House, because I want to send a signal not just to this community, but beyond it, that we are able to act together and in consensus on these issues.

2975 Certainly the result of the election that gives the power to a Chief Minister under our laws – our laws before 2011, our laws before 1996 and our laws before 1988 – should give power to a Chief Minister whatever the result of the election should be, surely. And so there cannot be a different barometer for the moment when the person sitting here is speaking from St Peter's chair – Sir Peter's chair, sorry – or when the person sitting here is speaking from Fabian's chair, because that would be almost to take the view that extreme right-wing republicans are taking now, that one president is good and can do and another is not and cannot do, and none of us in this House, neither Mr Azopardi or myself, or any of the people we represent, I am sure, or the hon. Lady, stand for that. Power to a Chief Minister is as good when one party wins an election as when another party wins an election, whether or not we like what the power does or who will do it. Of course we have different views, but given that we four in particular have been in politics together for 30 years, none of us would think that we would abuse that power.

2985 Let us analyse, therefore, what it is we are going to be doing with this Act that has caused hon. Members to suggest that it would be so different. If they want to change it, of course, as the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister has said, they could have proposed a change, but they did not propose any change when we published this Bill.

2990 I want to talk generally about a small part of the political history of this issue because it is fundamental in understanding the speeches that hon. Members have made. The Deputy Chief Minister rightly said, 'We published the Bill in December; you did not get back to us.' I say more: we published the Bill in December and what we got from hon. Members was a press release saying

2995 that this was too little, too late, it does not go far enough, it is flawed, they have no faith in us given that we tolerate opaque financial and governance practices, that we fail to clamp down on conflicts of interest, waste, abuse and corruption, and we had 11 years to act and we did nothing.
At the next election they said they will have a comprehensive package of reforms and that will be
it. So I am afraid that the Deputy Chief Minister failed to reflect that, short of engaging with us, they actually went out of their way to say they would not engage with us.

3000 Indeed, Mr Speaker, if the hon. Member, from a sedentary position, asked me why I did not reach out to him, it is because he has also forgotten what he did in April. In April, the Hon.
Mr Azopardi held a press conference. I have, from GSD social media, a document that says
'6th April 2022 – Back on Track.' The GSD says, in this document, they will set out anti-corruption provisions, they will investigate and audit the spending of all the government-owned companies – 3005 all the government-owned companies are being audited, they all have auditors, so I do not know what it is that they are going to do that is not being done already – and how Government awards contracts, etc. And when I said then I welcome this because this is actually in keeping with our own position on anti-corruption etc., when I reached out, as the hon. Gentleman says – 'Picardo welcomes Azopardi support for Government's agenda on standards in public life and anti-3010 corruption' – I was told that they were not willing to engage with me because what I was doing was box ticking, it was late in the day. I understand that: it was April and Mr Clinton thought that the election was going to be the March before, so of course they thought it was late; they thought it was in month minus one after the election.

3015 So, automatically, when we reach out, what we get is rebuffed, not only in December when we publish the Bill and they do not engage, in April when we reach out and they turn us down. So frankly, if all they are going to do is say that we are not genuine, say that it has to be wider etc., then they are doing what they always do, they are saying we are doing and, as the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition says from a sedentary position, we are going to do what we always do. We are going to lead, we are going to be pioneers and we are going to ensure that we comply with our 3020 manifesto commitment.

The Hon. Deputy Chief Minister alluded to this, but Sir Joe actually zeroed in on it on television.
Gibraltar is the only place where the Opposition criticises the Government because the Government does what it told the public it would do in a general election and the public elected us to do. We went, in 2019, with a commitment in our manifesto to do an Anti-Corruption 3025 Authority and we went with that commitment saying to the public, 'We went with this commitment in 2011. We did not do it because we were persuaded not to do it. In 2015 we had set it out also, and in 2019 we are going to do it.' So hon. Members' criticisms that we are going to do an Anti-Corruption Authority is criticism because we are going to do what we said to the public in a general election that we would do.

3030 What I find absolutely remarkable is that they have not criticised us for not doing it within six months of being elected. Our manifesto of 2019, if they bother to look at it, gives them fodder for criticism. We actually said that we would do it within six months of being elected. How I wish that I had been here being criticised by them because our Anti-Corruption Authority was not good enough in March 2020. Instead, he and I were standing together in Convent Place dealing with a 3035 worldwide pandemic. Of course that has delayed us. Of course it has. I make no secret of the fact that we are just coming out of that very difficult period of having to deal with Brexit and the pandemic. Now we are just dealing with Brexit – bad enough already, but it is one crisis, and you can legitimately say, 'When you were elected in 2019, you knew that you had to deal with Brexit, so it would not be proper for you to say Brexit.' Mr Bossino would be entitled to say – he did not 3040 alight on this point either, which would have been a good one – 'Brexit you cannot use as an excuse because you knew about Brexit when you made the commitment in your 2019 manifesto to do this within six months.' But none of us knew about the pandemic. That is why we are delayed, and I am giving a reason to the public in Gibraltar of why we are delayed beyond the six months that we said we would comply with, a reason that even they have not taken me up on, 3045 which I could have glossed over because their speeches are over. But because we are honest with the public, we stand up for the things that we do and when we say we are going to do them, and when we cannot do them, we explain it. That is why we were not able to do it.

3050 But perhaps the strangest thing there is that in 2019 they started to agree with us. In 2011, both Mr Azopardi as leader of the PDP and Mr Feetham as putative leader of the GSD, in positioning, were telling us that we should not have an Anti-Corruption Authority. I will come to the things that Mr Azopardi has said about that later. (Interjection) But now we have done an exercise of giving the very widest powers to this Authority to obtain information, we have made Ministers specifically subject to the provisions of the Act and public servants. My view is that Ministers are subject to the Act, even without the clause on Ministers, but of course we have 3055 wanted to be explicit. No public official, no Member of Parliament can avoid the provisions – production orders, search warrants, all very widely drawn. Yes, in respect of those offences, which are the offences that are in the schedule, which I will come to. It is all very good for Members to say there should be other offences in the schedule and not say which. The Hon. Mr Feetham at least said we need to create new offences. Well, okay, I will come to that in a minute, Mr Speaker, 3060 but if they are new offences which are required, they cannot be in the schedule because they do not exist.

In respect of certificates, by the way, a certificate issued by a Chief Minister is final because there has to be finality, and certificates usually when they are referred to in a statute are referred to as being final when issued by the person who is responsible for issuing them. That does not 3065 mean that they are not reviewable. Hon. Members should at least have indicated to the public in the course of their speeches that in this Bill there is no clause seeking to exclude the jurisdiction of the court, which there could be, because hon. Members know that there are clauses in statutes that say, ‘and this shall not be inquired into by any court’. We do not say that, so even the things that I do – the redaction of reports, the granting of certificates, all of those things – are obviously 3070 reviewable by the courts.

So there is no question of us seeking to draw a narrow Bill that is not deep enough, that does not create the right jurisdiction. Indeed, if it is the public sector where there is an issue to investigate, we created during our first term in office the protection of whistleblowers and in this 3075 Bill we further protect whistleblowers who will be whistleblowing against somebody in the infrastructure of the public sector, who could be a Minister, and yet we are creating the protection for it. That is wide. That also demonstrates a confidence by this Government that there are no issues affecting any of the individuals represented here that could be drawn, despite the many things that are said outside this place by hon. Members.

Gibraltar also has to be a jurisdiction where people come to the House not to say the things 3080 that they say outside the House, where things that might be considered potentially defamatory are said outside the House rather than inside the House. Here, when we come, it is not about us; we depersonalise the debate – I think that is absolutely right – but then outside they say, ‘It is your problem, it is because of you, you are the one who is tolerating the corruption; you are the problem.’ I will come to the exact words used. Incredible.

3085 So we create the whistleblower legislation, we comply with our manifesto commitment now, and we extend the provisions on investigations of corruption and protection of whistleblowers, and we get criticised for it. I would have thought that anybody who is prepared to give a fair hearing to what the Government is doing would understand that this is a Government that is acting entirely properly.

3090 If what we are doing, as Mr Feetham suggests, is creating an extra layer of bureaucracy, I do not understand how he can reconcile that by saying, ‘but you do not go far enough’. Those were his two opening phrases: an extra layer of bureaucracy that does not go far enough. And then the Leader of the Opposition says it has to be deeper, wider, better. What? A deeper, wider, better layer of bureaucracy? You either believe in an Anti-Corruption Authority or you do not.

3095 The average person will say they are concerned about corruption now and historically, about all governments – probably true. Not legal corruption, not as set out in the Bill – also probably true; people mix many things up. But what is it that they are talking about? Standards in public life, conflicts of interest etc? Maybe that is what they are talking about. Do they not know in our law where conflicts of interest are prohibited, the many places where conflicts of interest are prohibited and have to be guarded against and where conflicts of interest are a criminal offence? Do they not know that? They are the places where they have said they are concerned about them. I refer hon. Members to section 25 of the Procurement Act. Are they not aware of that? They are talking as if they do not know that these things are in our law. I will come to the detail of it later.

A trafficking of influence, undeclared conflicts of interest: 'These things are not provided for in our law.' Yes, they are, Mr Speaker. They are explicitly and they are implicitly, and of course we also have common law rules which deal with those issues. We do not have an explicit crime of nepotism or cronyism, but we have a fraud by abuse offence. Does he remember where it is? He brought it to the House: section 419 of the Crimes Act, fraud by abuse of position. We have the common law offence of misconduct in public office, which extends to Ministers and does not require evidence of corruption. Those things are there already. We have the provisions of our procurement rules which specifically provide about conflicts of interest and the obligation to declare conflicts of interest: section 25. If those are the things that the public are concerned about, which the Hon. Mr Feetham told us are the things that the public are concerned about, then they are provided for in our laws already. They are in our Corpus Juris. That is to say they are in all the laws that apply to Gibraltar. The hon. Gentleman says there is no legislation that comprehensively deals with that. Well, common law offences are not dealt with in a statute, they are common law. Unless he has now had a conversion from being an established common lawyer to being a civil lawyer who wants everything codified and in a statute, he would not be making that point.

'Take the opportunity to look at other types of conduct' – well, Mr Speaker, the codes of conduct of Ministers and MPs, we did them. He was here. Does he remember that it was Peter Caruana who asked us not to make them binding? He asked us to look at them in select committee. I have been dying to make them applicable generally. Why? Because we have acted from the day we published them – even though not binding – in keeping with the ministerial code, and we have to extend that to hon. Members also, who have the publication of the code but have not said that they would act in keeping with it. Frankly, I do not think it is fair.

If they said these things in a press release in 2015 or we said that we had to do more in 2015, a few things have happened. Shortly after 2015 we had Brexit, and that consumed us for a while. And then hon. Members know everything else that happened, which Mr Bossino calls an excuse. That is why we have not made the codes binding, but what have they done since 2015? Have they brought a motion with the codes of conduct saying we now adopt them? No, they have not brought that motion. They have not been dealing with Brexit. They have not been dealing with the intricacies of COVID. If this was so important, as they say it is because it is now stopping them from supporting us because the codes are not applicable, why haven't they brought a motion? Any Member can bring a motion. It is what I would do, bring a motion and say, 'When the time comes, that is what I will do. As Leader of the House, I will bring such motion.' Could the Government have voted against a motion saying that the code the Government said should be binding should be binding? Of course not. We stopped it from being binding because they asked us to stop it from being binding. These are just excuses not to support this Bill.

In 2019, they were going to put a Commissioner for Standards, they said, Well, okay. They went to the general public with that, to the electorate, and they got one vote for every two votes we got. Actually, the Commissioner for Standards in the UK has not been a body that has performed particularly well. We just have to see the resignation of Lord Geidt, the toothless nature of it, in particular when the person being investigated is the Prime Minister, which is highly unusual but it could happen, and there was no provision for what happened when the person being investigated was the primus inter pares, the Prime Minister.

The fact that all of these offences can be dealt with by the Police, says Mr Feetham, is enough to justify his cry that this is just a further bureaucratic layer, but in the United Kingdom, the issues that the Commissioner for Standards investigates which lead to a report can also, and very often do, lead to a criminal investigation. I do not need to remind hon. Members of Partygate and the fines that have been issued as a result of the views of the Commissioner for Standards etc.

‘Why are the Police not already investigating these offences, if they are happening?’ said Mr Feetham. Well, perhaps because they are not happening. Perhaps because we talk a lot about things in this community. We do not like it when others get a contract, even if they have got it fairly, just because we did not get it and perhaps there is nothing untoward about that person getting a contract. Indeed, I had an episode once, when they were in government. I thought, ‘This is terrible, that person has got the contract as well.’ I dug a little and there had been a tender. On that occasion they had issued a tender and the person who got it was the only person who had applied. The street was rife with gossip and I thought, ‘Well, fair enough,’ but there was enough rumourology there to go to the Police every day of the week and for the Police to say, he was the only one who applied.’ So maybe that is why the Police are not investigating things that actually do not merit investigation and there is a lot of talking about but very little action on.

Mr Feetham has said very clearly what we need is an offence of nepotism and an offence of cronyism. I think those are hugely difficult to define. We have in our laws issues of conflicts of interest, which nepotism and cronyism are about. Conflicts of interest are inclusive in here, they are inchoate in these definitions and we should add them to the schedule. If hon. Members are serious, Mr Speaker – I have checked my diary – I offer them Thursday at 11 a.m. in my office. We should look together at the proposed definition that they might send me, before close of business on Wednesday, of an offence of nepotism and cronyism. If it was acceptable to the Government – on which we will take advice because we obviously do not want to make criminal offences that are not good – we would put a joint motion for the next Parliament, in February, to include that definition in our laws. We would bring a Bill to this House to make nepotism and cronyism as defined – if we can agree a definition – an offence, as he has said, and we will give hon. Members an undertaking that we will add that new offence to the Schedule of this Bill as soon as they have become offences after the six weeks have passed, and they will be passed with the Government majority before the Easter recess. There you go: the offence of nepotism and cronyism.

3175

If you were serious about what you were saying, I challenge you to vote in favour of the Bill on that basis, and I challenge you to produce a draft of a law that makes nepotism or cronyism a further criminal offence, because we say it is already a criminal offence. And if you say it is not your job to do that from opposition, okay, it is not your job to do that from opposition, but then you are not serious about contributing to this. We have very senior silks on the other side, Mr Speaker. Of course they can turn their pen to drafting something, although we would have to ask ourselves why there is not, in the United Kingdom, in Canada, in Australia or in Hong Kong already an offence of nepotism or an offence of cronyism. The answer is very likely because those things are already inchoate in misconduct in public office, in the offences against conflicts of interest which are already in our law, and on the offences of fraud or abuse of position.

If they say that they can deal with that and bring a proposal, please let me know, so that I block out the 11 o’clock slot in my diary for two hours on Thursday. I will not hold my breath because when I offered them this in April, they said they would not meet with me on this issue – they turned me down – to bring about the changes that they might not want to bring about. Yes, they did, Mr Speaker, they turned me down, (Interjection) let’s be very clear.

Under section 3 – (Interjection) Yes, I have the hon. Member’s press release, if he wants me to share it.

Hon. K Azopardi: He probably has my letter, too, and my letter invites him to write to us with proposals, which he never wrote to us on.

Hon. Chief Minister: His letter says that what I am doing is creating a circus, and that is why they turned down the olive branch, because they are not interested. They are not interested today in doing what they said was necessary. They are not interested in crafting a law to make nepotism or cronyism an offence. I challenge Mr Feetham, if he says it is possible, to do it. And second, they are not interested in engagement. They are interested only in party political posturing, whether or not Gibraltar, therefore, has an Anti-Corruption Authority or not, although it is one of the final building blocks for us to comply with the UN Convention. I know what I am saying is exactly true.

(Interjection)

3205 Mr Speaker, let me now deal with something else they have said. Section 3, which is the appointment provision: we proposed, given what they said publicly, that, okay, we should have the Specified Appointments Commission appoint the Chairman of the Anti-Corruption Authority, and then the Leader of the Opposition could appoint two and the Chief Minister would appoint two. That is as politically neutral as it comes. They said that is not enough. By the way, Mr Feetham 3210 should note it is not the Special Appointments Committee, it is the Specified Appointments Commission.

The Government is prepared to agree that all five members should be appointed by the Specified Appointments Commission. We have no issue with it. We are prepared to change the amendment so it is the five members appointed under the Specified Appointments Commission.
3215 We are prepared to agree that you produce a draft of the offences of cronyism and nepotism that stands up to scrutiny and is not more bureaucracy – in other words, not just what our law already provides on conflicts of interest, what our law already provides under section 418 and what is already provided for under misconduct in public office – and we are prepared to allow that the five members be appointed by the Specified Appointments Commission. That, at least, they could 3220 have written to us about.

Hon. G H Licudi: Or proposed an amendment today.

Hon. Chief Minister: Or proposed an amendment today, indeed. When the hon. Member got 3225 up, he could have said, 'I propose an amendment', which could have gone further than that of the hon. Lady. But I am open to the fact that they just thought that politics was about confrontation and not about trying to work together, and that now they will reflect and, given the offers I am making, they will support the Bill, they will help us with the drafting of those offences and they will support the amendment that I will put, so that all members are appointed by the Specified 3230 Appointments Commission outside of the hands of any Chief Minister, not just this one.

The hon. Lady got up to say that we had been postponing this Anti-Corruption Authority for over a decade. Well, the last time I checked my history, she had stood for election in 2015 with the political party that had told me in 2011 that an Anti-Corruption Authority was not necessary. Her policy in 2015 was not that I was postponing things by not doing it, but that I was doing the 3235 right thing by not doing it, so you can hardly suggest, Mr Speaker, that I was procrastinating or postponing this.

And of course this does not emerge in a vacuum, she says. I accept that. That is why we proposed it in 2011, that is why we talked about it in our manifesto of 2015 and that is why we recommitted to it in 2019. We are not saying, however, that the RGP is incapable of complying 3240 with its commitments. We are creating a dedicated body in great measure because the Commonwealth principles require it, because the UN Convention requires it, because it is one of the parts of the infrastructure of having effective anti-corruption provisions and complying with those conventions internationally.

And so, Mr Speaker, given what I have said about the Specified Appointments Commission, I 3245 hope she also is able to accept the points as to independence, because the points as to independence disappear. She appeared in her address, as Mr Isola said, to have ignored the amendment which the Hon. Minister moved in her first speech, but now that I have told her we are going to go even further than that and the Chief Minister is going to have no power to appoint anyone, it is all going to be in the Specified Appointments Commission, I hope she will be able to 3250 support it, because she said one of the key issues is that the chairman is appointed by the person he has to investigate or criticise. I am going to do away with that point for her, because the chairman will be appointed by the Specified Appointments Commission, but actually it would be 3255 a very sad day indeed if the chairman of an Anti-Corruption Authority had to criticise the Chief Minister. In most instances, one would have thought he would be criticising people in the public sector, if necessary, if that was relevant, or elsewhere, but not the Chief Minister – in the United Kingdom it has happened once, although today the Prime Minister has once again been fined and has been subject to a criminal sanction – and I say that of all Chief Ministers in our history, all of them.

3260 On the question of the redaction of reports in the public interest, I refer to what I said at the beginning of my speech. Who could be a better judge of whether a report needs to be redacted in the public interest than the Chief Minister? The Chief Minister is the person in the hierarchy of politics in Gibraltar who has the overview of everything. He has the overview of all the Departments, he has the overview of the public finances. There is no one with an office as privileged as the one I hold today – except maybe the Deputy Chief Minister, because he sits with me daily on all of these issues – that has the overview across Departments and across Ministries, and therefore all of the areas of public responsibility of Gibraltar. Who should redact, if not the Chief Minister?

3270 It is very unusual that there should be a redaction. I have never redacted a report in the time I have been in office. A former Chief Minister decided not to publish a report, although it had been paid for by the public purse. Hon. Members might remember the GBC report. I said, ‘The minute I am elected, I will publish it,’ and the minute I was elected I published it. Reports sometimes have to go through the Maxwell process, where individuals are entitled to redact things about themselves if they are mentioned in it. That is not what we are talking about here. Those redactions are the legal process of redaction, where an individual is entitled to do that. But who better than the Chief Minister? Okay, on appointments it should be the Specified Appointments Commission, but on redactions how can it be anybody other than the Chief Minister? And even then you can appeal and go to a judge, and a judge can look at what a Chief Minister has proposed should be redacted and say it should not be redacted.

3280 Then she said, ‘Don’t trust the wolf to guard the sheep.’ That, I have to say to her, is a very unfair characterisation of this or any former Chief Minister of Gibraltar. The Chief Minister of Gibraltar is not a wolf. Far from it, Mr Speaker. The Chief Ministers of Gibraltar – and I think all of them – have shown commitment to the people of Gibraltar, who are the ones in whose interests we would redact a report if we ever had to redact one.

3285 The reference she made to an iron curtain of government-owned companies on which we do not give information is one which I am afraid I just cannot accept. Yes, we might not give all of the information that hon. Members want. Hon. Members want almost all of the information they would have if they were in government, or more, because sometimes they ask us for things that Ministers are not involved in, that are being done by civil servants, and they want that level of detail. But, in fact, Mr Speaker, in your usual ability to assist in the debate, your booklet on Speakers’ Rulings is extraordinarily useful because the hon. Lady says an iron curtain of government-owned companies where we do not give information, and in the second ruling contained in your booklet on Speakers’ Rulings, Speaker Vasquez, one of our longest-standing Speakers, in 1980, when the GSLP was not in government, said this on 24th January:

I think I have ruled on this once before. The Minister is answerable for his Ministerial responsibilities and not as chairman of any particular firm.

That is helpful. The next sentence of this ruling is even more important:

3295 I think I must rule on this one, that he is not entitled to part with information which he has exclusively as chairman of the company and not as part of his Ministerial responsibility.

– the Minister –

So this iron curtain is one that comes from a ministerial position in 1980 and as ruled by the Chair.

Mr Clinton then moved on to say that we may be able to save some part of the Bill, and I thought he was going to be positive, although then he turned very negative and called it all toothless and caged. Well, I think Mr Licudi dealt with a lot of those issues. But he did make a point. He said we should have been more inventive. Well, he was the one who did the press conference in April that led to the non-meeting when I offered it.

The point he made about section 14 of the Ombudsman Act is one that we are prepared to take on board, so we shall also move an amendment – and I am sorry Mr Clinton is not here to hear me, but I assume he is hearing from the antechamber – to deal with the issue he raised there. We shall amend section 3(14) so that the last part of the section will read ‘shall be a first charge on the Consolidated Fund’, so that we are taking the reference to payments being made by way of vote to the first charge language that he referred us to.

He then also talked about the issue of nepotism and cronyism. I will be very taken by Mr Feetham if he is able to produce a draft of a law that deals with that; he may have more time to research these things than I do.

I am pleased to see Mr Clinton back, and I am sure he has heard about my amendment to 3(14). (Hon. R M Clinton: No.) Oh, sorry, Mr Clinton. I have suggested we will move an amendment to 3(14) to make it a first charge on the Consolidated Fund, as he has suggested, and I hope that, therefore, will, together with everything else I have said, persuade him to vote in favour of the Bill.

On nepotism and cronyism, it is also true, I am sure, that one man’s cronyism, one man’s nepotism, is another man’s good government – surely, because let’s be very clear: the things they say they are complaining about in their statements outside of this House, grant of tenders etc ... At least there are tenders. What we inherited at Midtown was the direct allocation of the two naval grounds to one particular group of property developers by the party that they represent. (Hon. K Azopardi: Direct allocations.) I am sorry? (A Member: Direct allocations.) We have not done direct allocations. (Interjection by Hon. K Azopardi) No, we have not. Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman is saying from a sedentary position that we have done direct allocations. We have not done any direct allocations. We have not. (Hon. K Azopardi: Yes.) No. I am happy to give way to the hon. Gentleman if he wants to tell me about a direct allocation.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, there have been questions in this House that in the Bayside/St Anne’s plot and in the Eastside plot the person adjudicated those plots had not submitted any expressions of interest in the processes that were run, and therefore they were direct allocations. What else were they?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I think the hon. Gentleman has taken leave of his senses. We gave the football pitch to the GFA without going to tender because it was the GFA. We have given it to an institution in Gibraltar. (Interjection) And on the Eastside –

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker –

Hon. Chief Minister: Sorry, if he wants me to give away –

Hon. K Azopardi: Yes. I am not talking about the Victoria Stadium, I am talking about the Bayside/St Anne’s plot –

Hon. Chief Minister: Oh, I see.

Hon. K Azopardi: – where there was not an interest expressed by that entity because it did not exist, you gave it to them, and the Eastside. Yes.

3350 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, there is a description that refers to the genitalia of the male cow that is the best way to describe what the hon. Gentleman has said. Let us be clear: tender processes were run in respect of the Bayside/St Anne’s plot. They did not submit one, but they came with an offer of more, and what the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition is suggesting is that it is a direct allocation to give a plot of land that has gone to tender to a party that has bid more 3355 than the highest tenderer. We call that looking after the interests of the taxpayer, because that is what a tender is for. A tender is to ensure that we get the best value for the taxpayer, and when we saw that it was possible to get it, we did. Moreover, on the Eastside, exactly the same thing happened and what we got was more per square metre for the taxpayer in respect of those plots than had ever been offered in a tender.

3360 Hon. R M Clinton: How do we know?

Hon. Chief Minister: We know because in the tenders they submitted less. That is why it is obvious.

3365 Hon. R M Clinton: How do we know that?

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, look, if you distrust us, to lie to this House – because I have now put on the record of this House what this position is – if you ever win government, come and look. I am very happy to see the hon. Member on Wednesday morning and show him all of the bids that 3370 came in, so that he can see that I have not misled this House. We cannot publish them because we cannot publish the names of people who submit bids that are not successful. We have taken advice on that because people insist that they need ... a lot of their covenants are based on that.
I would never mislead this House. Mr Clinton, by saying, ‘How do we know?’ suggests that I might be thinking of misleading this House, something I would never do, even implicitly, but on 3375 something that I know empirically because numbers are numbers and this number is higher than that number, I can tell hon. Members there have never been direct allocations and we have always given to the highest bidder.

But what did they do? They gave Midtown, two naval grounds, on direct allocation with no previous tender – in other words, it is not that they gave it to one because they had run a tender 3380 process and this was more; they never ran a tender process. Indeed, to the same group they gave a contract with a value of £1 billion and did not run a tender process, and when I asked how does this comply with the procurement rules, I was told that the Government would not answer, and the Speaker at the time said to me, ‘I am sorry, Mr Picardo, I cannot compel the Government to answer.’ When I was elected, I exercised my right to check the file – I cannot see some things in 3385 the former Governments’ files but I can see others – and I saw the advice that said they had acted in breach of the procurement rules. One man’s cronyism and nepotism is another man’s good government or another man’s golden legacy.

That brings me, conveniently, to Mr Bossino, who is the one who talked about the golden legacy of the GSD when he was elected here before 2015, the first time he decided that now was 3390 not for him and it was all about the following election. He started by saying that they could be persuaded. Well, I have agreed to the provisions of the nepotism and cronyism Bill being proposed, if they propose it. I have agreed that all appointments should be under the Specified Appointments Commission. I have agreed to change that this should be a first charge on the Consolidated Fund under section 3(14). But when he says that one of the reasons they are not 3395 going to support us is because they look at this in the context of our track record, it grates a bit with the fact that they said they were going to depersonalise this, because why is our track record relevant?

We arrived in 2011 wanting to do an Anti-Corruption Authority. I still have the report in the Chronicle on 26th October 2011, where for the first time they were making common cause, Mr Feetham and Mr Azopardi, Mr Feetham saying we comply with the UK Bribery Act, we comply with the United Nations Convention, and Mr Azopardi saying creating an Anti-Corruption Authority is telling the world that we have a corruption problem and you should not do it, the Police have all these powers and we do not need to do these things. I have it here. 'Half-baked ideas' and 'checks and balances' – that is what they said. There is his press release: 26th October 2011. And now, because of our track record, it needs to be done and it needs to be done deeper and wider.

The fascinating thing is that the United Nations Convention is dated 2003. It was signed in 2003, it was accepted by all the parties in 2005, and in 2011, when I was saying that we had to do an anti-corruption convention to comply with the UN Convention, they said, 'No, we already comply.' And yet today they take the view that, actually, not only do we not comply but even with this Anti-Corruption Authority we will not comply because it is not wide enough, not deep enough – all the words that have lots of meaning and none.

In 2015, we set out our position. In 2019, the position that appertains now is the one that I have told them about already. So the delay that he talks about, the new dawn that should have ushered in the Anti-Corruption Authority he forgets was what they said should not happen, and what we said in 2015 was, 'Fair enough.' We were persuaded by what our opponents said and what the Police said at the time.

So it is not that we have left it to the end. In fact, we should have done it within six months, but I have explained why we did not. But as usual, the hon. Gentleman does not think through the points he makes. He does not even look at my 2019 manifesto so he is able to criticise me.

Mr Speaker –

Hon. Member: Will he give way?

Hon. Chief Minister: Well, I am now dealing with Mr Bossino. I dealt with you 15 minutes ago. Mr Speaker, we are never going to finish. It is Friday night. If I give way, he is going to have to buy 12 Heineken for us all later, because it is going to be that time, so he will allow me to continue, if he does not mind. I have given way to the Leader of the Opposition, Mr Speaker.

Mr Bossino said, 'What is this? Is this going to be a post box?' Well, their manifesto has two-thirds of the same thing in the context of an anti-corruption ... 'Anti-corrupt practices', they talk about on page 85, and then they say they would:

Establish an independent Public Offices Commission whose remit would be to ensure standards in public office, investigate and address any issues of conduct or misbehaviour of anyone in public office. [...] The law will be able to deal with any allegations of corruption or offences involving, for example, the allocation of land, contracts or tenders ...

– except we have those laws already. Our laws on the procurement of things already provide for issues relating to land, contracts or tenders. They do not seem to know it, because they are going with a manifesto promising to do that which is already in our laws.

I noted, by the way, Mr Speaker ... it may be a glitch, but their manifesto is no longer on their website. I do not know whether they are just trying to do that to avoid us all going back and embarrassing them. Happily, I download these things and we have them for posterity. (Interjections) Probably, they want to block me. I am not surprised, they know the damage I can do when I get their material.

Hon. D A Feetham: As a hacker.

Hon. Chief Minister: No, not as a hacker, Mr Speaker. The damage I do to them, I do intellectually. It is intellectually, Mr Speaker.

3445 This idea that removal of individuals from the board they might have been appointed to by the Specified Appointments Commission – in 3(9), I think it is, of the Bill – is still dealt with by the Chief Minister. That is before I told them that all appointments would be dealt with by the SAC. Well, I am prepared to think about removals being dealt with by the SAC, but the SAC does not deal with removals, it deals with appointments, so somebody has to deal with removals. Unless it is the very 3450 evil Chief Minister, who could then remove somebody who is investigating him – the wolf guarding the sheep – this rule about ‘may remove’, even if convicted, is not autochthonous to this Bill; it is what the power of removal is like anywhere. So you have in our statutes, elsewhere, references to people who might be convicted and, if they are convicted, may be removed from something by a Chief Minister or another. So what point is he making? It is another non-point: ‘It looks bad, it is 3455 something I can potentially embarrass with; I do not think through that actually my own Government did that when it was in Convent Place.’ The GSD did that as well.

I have dealt already with the reports redaction.

A theme that developed on the other side was this idea that we were window dressing, that we were box ticking by complying with our manifesto. We consider our manifesto to be an 3460 obligation, and if we fail to comply with it, we have failed our obligations. In some instances we may have to fail to comply with it because we have not had time because of COVID, what he calls an excuse. They have again demonstrated that, for them, complying with a manifesto, by criticising us for doing this, is window dressing and box ticking. I am reminded of the GSD mantra on this. In the leadership interview on radio in November 2011, the GSD leader said, ‘For the GSD, 3465 a manifesto is a wish list.’ We shall take their manifesto with the requisite pinch of wishes when they publish it when a general election is called.

Mr Speaker, for all of those reasons I have dealt with already, I challenge them, given that the only specifics they have come to are the ones that I have dealt with, to vote in favour of the Bill or to have the courage of their convictions and vote against the Bill. Otherwise, they will be seen 3470 simply to be playing a device. A device is what the Leader of the Opposition tells us he is not in politics to play with. He says, ‘I am not here to do politics for the sake of it,’ and yet, on these issues in April and December all he did was respond with what might be considered by somebody with a less thick skin to be insults – that I am the problem today. This is what Keith Azopardi has permanently been saying. Whether it is on direct democracy or whether it is anywhere else, he is 3475 not saying, ‘I am going to abstain because I do not like this clause or that clause,’ which is what they have come here to say to our faces. When we are not there to defend ourselves, it is completely different – ‘an air of recklessness that pervades the handling of your public money, waste, abuse and sufficient controls to prevent corruption’. We bring an Anti-Corruption Bill and they say, ‘This does nothing. It’ is a layer of bureaucracy. The laws are already there on corruption.’
3480 I really could not make up the inconsistencies that hon. Members reflect in the arguments they put. It is just remarkable and it is frankly unfair on the people of Gibraltar.

So I put it to him that in fact this is just a device, a political attempt to avoid dealing with these issues, and that, given what I have read hon. Members, that their 2019 manifesto is a more radical 3485 version of our law than this is an utter nonsense. What they are going to put in is what has been shown not to work in the United Kingdom, unless they are going to appoint somebody with greater power than the Chief Minister, a Governor and a Speaker, who will then be the person that we will have to guard is not ever corrupt, because if that is the person who is going to hold all the power, somewhere there is going to have to be a control. The controls need to be wider, the jurisdiction needs to be deeper and the powers need to be stronger. When the time came to put 3490 some flesh on that, at least Mr Feetham talked about what offences were missing. What did he do? Nothing. It is not enough, he says, but he never says what more is needed. When he talks on any issue he says, ‘We are going to have a big programme to deal with this. Then, when you go to the programme, it says, ‘We are going to have a great law that will provide for this.’ Do we ever see the law? No. It is like the law that never came, that was going to provide an alternative on 3495 abortion, that was going to ensure that we were going to be able to have a law that ... but then it never came. These laws never come, because they were never really thought of. The soundbite was good, it was a good way to react to Picardo, but there is never really anything behind it.

And so, Mr Speaker, when they say that the feeling of scepticism is mutual, I am pleased at least that we both feel the same way, because in April they did not want to work with us, in 3500 December they shot us down when we published our Bill, and it is frankly remarkable that he gets up in this House and says, 'We judge you by the fact that you have not called a meeting of the Select Committee on Disability, on the Environment, on Parliamentary Reform or the Constitution.' He did not mention the Constitution, but it is also an important one. We have not called a meeting, and he knows, because we are all political geeks in the same way, that the 3505 Deputy Chief Minister and I would love to have a meeting of the Select Committee on the Constitution and be able to pursue the reforms that he drafted for me when he was in private practice, when I asked him to practise and which will form the basis of what I bring here and therefore I hope will enjoy his support, given that he prepared them. But he knows what has happened since October 2019. He knows what has happened, so if he is going to judge me because 3510 I have not had Select Committee meetings in that time, and at the same time say that I have not brought a safe and secure and beneficial treaty and I should bring it sooner, he knows that what he is saying is for the birds.

It is not too late, and this is not a box-ticking exercise because, by the way, there are many months left to a general election, and not because there are many months left to a general 3515 election is this the last minute, because I think it is only he and his supporters who think that this is our last year in government, even though there is going to be a general election. We put ourselves in the hands of the electorate. The electorate will decide, but we are making this Anti-Corruption Authority Bill not thinking that these are our last potential six, seven, eight, nine, 10 months in power. We are making this Bill for the long term, expecting to be returned after the 3520 next general election, if people give us their confidence. It will be up to them. We humbly put our performance in the past four years before the electorate and ask them for their support and ask them to return us – not late in the day and not box ticking.

Mr Speaker, it is remarkable that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition took the position he took on the Commonwealth principles and the UN Convention. All of them say that an Anti-Corruption Authority is one of the things that has to be provided for, but when you go through 3525 the rest of the list you find that much, if not absolutely all of the rest of it is already provided for in our laws, even the things the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition talked about. Let me take him through the list.

Benchmark 1, corruption offences, sanctions and remedies – already in our law. Mr Feetham 3530 has said so himself. It is why he says that this is an extra layer of bureaucracy.

Benchmark 2, an authority responsible for preventing corruption – we have not got it, so benchmark 2 we do not meet.

Benchmark 3, investigation, prosecution, asset recovery and policing – we have got it, of course we have got it, we do it all the time on many issues.

3535 Benchmark 4, the court system – we have got it and it is one of the best in the world.

Benchmark 5, Parliament – I think, therefore I am; we have got it.

Benchmark 6, regulatory authorities – we have got them.

Benchmark 7, regulation of financial institutions and the financial system.

3540 Benchmark 8, transparency of asset ownership – we do not just have it, we have an open Register of Beneficial Ownership, which even the United Kingdom does not have yet.

Benchmark 9, political lobbying, financing, spending and elections – we certainly have that.

Public sector organisations – we have that.

Public officials – we certainly have.

A provision for issuing of permits – we certainly have.

3545 Procurement rules – we have some of the toughest procurement rules in the world. Every time they criticise the procurement rules, I assume they are criticising them on the basis that we are practising the procurement rules in the same way they were, i.e. not, and giving £1 billion contracts and giving vast tracts of land on direct allocation.

Contract management – we have that; we have a Contract and Tort Ordinance.

3550 Financial management – we have that, of course we have that; we have these processes etc. in our budgetary process.

Concession management – of course we have.

Asset management – we have that.

3555 Independent monitoring – indeed, we have it, and now we even have an Independent Monitoring Authority for the things that relate to our obligations under the Withdrawal Agreement.

Independent auditing – we have an Act on the Principal Auditor and it is in our Constitution.

Anti-corruption training – we actually already have that in the Royal Gibraltar Police.

3560 Reporting of corruption – of course we have that; we have been debating it today and this will make it stronger.

Standards and certification – we also have that throughout our institutions.

Professional and business associations – of course we have that.

A hugely important part of civil society: participation of society – you could not get more of that than you do in Gibraltar.

3565 International co-operation.

The only one missing is benchmark 2, and he says he is not going to support this because it does not do all those things. Is he seriously telling the people of Gibraltar, in a way that he expects them to believe, that in order to comply with the Commonwealth principles and the UN Convention, you have to have one law that does all that? No, you have to have these things in our laws, and in our laws we have these things. The only one we do not have in our laws ... The nervous laughter; every time I catch them out, the nervous laughter. The only thing we do not have is the Anti-Corruption Authority. As we say in the courts, Mr Speaker, res ipsa loquitur. We need this Act.

3575 Hon. D A Feetham: I have never said that in my life, I have to say...

Hon. Chief Minister: I am afraid your Latin is not up to standard then.

3580 And so all of the things that are in the Secretary General's forward are the things that we subscribe to, Mr Speaker, and are the reasons why we are acting. We would have acted in 2011, we should not have listened to them, and we are acting now as quickly as we are able to in compliance with our manifesto commitments.

3585 In the circumstances, having dealt with all of those issues – including, by the way, trafficking of influence, which in my view is covered already by misconduct in public office and is covered by the rules on conflicts of interest, which we already have, but if it is not, I look forward to receiving, before the close of business, the draft that the hon. Member will provide, (Interjection) which I will, of course, get the law draftsman to provide for us – (Interjection) Oh, you are going to provide it, but you are not going to vote in favour of the Bill. (Interjection) Why am I not surprised? (Interjection) When I address all of the things that hon. Members tell me are their legitimate concerns, they are not going to vote ... I am not surprised, Mr Speaker.

3590 The things that people talk about anecdotally I have dealt with already. I am not going to, at this time, labour in the House, but the things that people talk about anecdotally we are all long in the tooth enough to know are very often utter codswallop.

3595 The example I gave before, of a tender that everybody was saying was disgraceful and in fact there had only been one applicant and the applicant had got it, is like the joke about the guy who goes to pray because he wants to read the lottery. Christ appears to him and says, 'I am happy to help, but buy the lottery ticket!' Mr Speaker, frankly, I really do believe if the hon. Member does not even get the joke, then we really are on a hiding to nothing with this Opposition. (Laughter and interjections) His critics are right.

3600 Wider, deeper, stronger. Never has a law on anti-corruption been proposed in this House that is wider, deeper or stronger than the one we are bringing, because it is the first one that has been proposed. But ours is not sound bites, ours is not about failing to provide the flesh on the bones; ours is about actually going ahead and doing.

3605 As the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister said, absolutely rightly, we do not believe we are perfect, we do not believe we are infallible. If the hon. Member comes up with something good, we will do it ourselves. We will bring the law to this House and we will add it to the schedule, no doubt without their support, because we certainly have not had to be dragged here kicking and screaming. Quite the opposite. We published a Bill, and the minute we published it we exposed ourselves to criticism. In fact, what we are doing is not just complying with a manifesto 3610 commitment, we are complying with a manifesto commitment, our obligation to the people of Gibraltar, and we knew that the minute we published our Bill we would hear the screaming and suffer the kicking, because immediately we issued the Bill I got the kicking and I was told that I was the problem with Gibraltar. Today I was told that the issue that had to be resolved was my tolerance of corruption etc. Utter nonsense, and if ever there was a time to demonstrate that, it is now, to vote in favour of the Bill, to support the Minister for Justice, who has taken an oath to 3615 support the rule of law and is moving this Bill on that basis, and to comply with our manifesto commitment.

So, Mr Speaker, for all of those reasons, before I commend the Bill to the House, I deprecate the points the hon. Members made. Some of them were wrong in law and wrong in fact, and indeed for all of those reasons I have laid down a challenge to hon. Members that I am sure they 3620 will not take up. They will not support the Bill. They will, despite those explanations, vote against it, but I certainly commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Does the hon. the mover of the Bill wish to respond?

3625 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to my colleagues on this side of the House for their interventions, and given the late hour and what we have heard from this side of the House, I have nothing further to add.

3630 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision for the establishment of the Anti-Corruption Authority and to provide it with powers of investigation and other duties, powers and functions for the investigation of corrupt conduct and for connected purposes be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against?

3635 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, this is a hugely important piece of legislation and seminal. I call a division.

Hon. D A Feetham: We are all abstaining. (Interjection by Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon)

3640

3650

Mr Speaker: A division is being requested, so we need to have produced the list of Members and then we will ask individually how they will vote.

Voting resulted as follows:

FOR	AGAINST	ABSTAIN	ABSENT
Hon. P J Balban	None	Hon. K Azopardi	Hon. Sir J J Bossano
Hon. Prof. J E Cortes		Hon. D J Bossino	Hon. E J Phillips
Hon. V Daryanani		Hon. R M Clinton	Hon. E J Reyes
Hon. Dr J J Garcia		Hon. D A Feetham
Hon. A J Isola		Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon
Hon. G H Licudi
Hon. S E Linares
Hon. F R Picardo
Hon. Miss S J Sacramento

Mr Speaker: The result of the voting is as follows: 9 were in favour, there were 5 abstentions and there are three Members who are absent, so the Second Reading of the Bill is carried.

3655

Clerk: The Anti-Corruption Authority Act 2022.

Anti-Corruption Authority Bill 2022 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

3660

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today?

Members: Aye.

COMMITTEE STAGE AND THIRD READING

3665 Clerk: Committee Stage and Third Reading. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

3670 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bills clause by clause: the Commonwealth Park (Amendment) Bill 2022, the Employment (Amendment) Bill 2022, the Personal Light Electric Transporters Bill 2022, the Adoption Bill 2022, the Crime (Disorderly Behaviour Penalty Notice) Bill 2022, the Domestic Abuse Bill 2022 and the Anti-Corruption Bill 2022.

In Committee of the whole House

Commonwealth Park (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Clauses considered and approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Commonwealth Park Act 2014.
Clauses 1 to 4.

3675

Mr Chairman: Clauses 1 to 4 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

3680

Mr Chairman: The long title stands part of the Bill.

Employment (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Clauses considered and approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Employment Act.
Clauses 1 to 3.

3685

Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Chairman, I think there should be an amendment to all the Bills.

Mr Chairman: You are now moving an amendment to the Bill, replacing 2022 with 2023?

Hon. S E Linares: And I think that should be the case with all the others.

Mr Chairman: Well, you can speak about that – or is it automatic? (Hon. S E Linares: Okay.) Automatic, right, okay.

Hon. S E Linares: Thank you.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: The long title stands part of the Bill.

Personal Light Electric Transporters Bill 2022 –
Clauses considered and approved with amendments

3700

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to regulate the operation of personal light electric transporters, to amend the Traffic Act 2005 and the Crimes Act 2011 and for related purposes.
Clauses 1 to 12.

3705

Minister for Transport (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Chairman, there is an amendment.

Mr Chairman: Clauses 1 to 12 stand part of the Bill.
There is an insertion that the Member wishes to make.

3710

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Chairman, I may take this as read, the letter?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): They are very technical.

Mr Chairman: The Members of the Opposition would have received a circular letter containing amendments. Are the Opposition content?

Hon. K Azopardi: Yes.

Mr Chairman: The Minister needs to say that he is moving an amendment where he inserts after ... He has given notice of an amendment, which inserts, after clause 12, a new clause 13. He needs to say that.

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Chairman, the amendment is that after clause 12, we insert the amendment of which I have given notice.

3725

Clerk: Clauses 1 to 12 as amended.

Mr Chairman: Stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

3730

Mr Chairman: I think there is an amendment to the long title.

Hon. Chief Minister: It is just the date.

Hon. P J Balban: It is just the date.

Mr Chairman: It says here, 'In the long title, after "Traffic Act 2005", insert "the Insurance Motor Vehicles Third Party Risk ..."'.
Motor Vehicles Third Party Risk ...".

3740

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Chairman, there is an amendment:

After the long title, after Traffic Act 2005, insert 'the Insurance Motor Vehicles Third Party Risk Act 1986'.

Mr Chairman: The long title as amended stands part of the Bill.

I also need to raise the fact that the Hon. Mr Feetham was abstaining on this Bill.

3745

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Chairman, yes, because I had written to the Minister in a professional capacity in relation to this.

Adoption Bill 2022 –
Clauses considered and approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to provide for the regulation of the law relating to adoption and for connected purposes.

Part 1, clauses 1 to 4.

Mr Chairman: I take it there are no amendments to ...?

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Chairman, following some of the interventions from the Hon. Mr Bossino on some typos earlier, I will deal with those under the slip rule because, checking them all, they are pretty much caught by the slip rule. They are amendments such as changing 'they' to 'he' or 'she', and very minor, inconsequential typographical amendments, I would say.

Mr Chairman: I made a reference to this. I do not know whether it was clarified by the Hon. Minister. In clause 15(3)(a) you made reference to the word 'placement' and that there should be a reference ... I do not know whether this is something that you are going to be discussing as a future amendment to the Bill or ...

Hon. D J Bossino: I am not sure how the slip rule works, but would it assist the Minister if I wrote to her with the points I made in the course of my intervention, and then she can take a view?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, my understanding is that the slip rule enables you to deal with the typos. The hon. Gentleman talked about typos etc. Anything which is more than that, we would want to consider if we have not agreed it in the debate. So the typos can go under the slip rule, and you can exchange letters just to make sure that they are agreed, but otherwise it should be a more substantive consideration for the future.

Hon. D J Bossino: I think, given the time, I will write to her with all the points, and then she can decide how best to approach it.

Mr Chairman: Please continue.

Clerk: Part 2, clauses 5 to 13.

Mr Chairman: Part 2, clauses 5 to 13 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Part 3, clauses 14 to 60.

Mr Chairman: Part 3, clauses 14 to 60 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Part 4, clauses 61 to 70.

Mr Chairman: Part 4, clauses 61 to 70 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Part 5, clauses 71 to 74.

Mr Chairman: Part 5, clauses 71 to 74 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Part 6, clauses 75 to 83.

Mr Chairman: Part 6, clauses 75 to 83 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Part 7, clauses 85 to 95.

Mr Chairman: Part 7, clauses 85 to 95 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Part 8, clauses 96 to 106.

3805 Mr Chairman: Part 8, clauses 96 to 106 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Schedule 1.

Mr Chairman: Schedule 1 stands part of the Bill.

3810 Clerk: Schedule 2.

Mr Chairman: Schedule 2 stands part of the Bill.

Anti-Corruption Authority Bill 2022–
Clauses considered and approved with amendments

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to make provision for the establishment of the Anti-Corruption Authority and to provide it with powers of investigation and other duties, powers and functions for the investigation of corrupt conduct, and for connected purposes. The Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations.

Part 1, clauses 1 and 2.

Mr Chairman: Part 1, clauses 1 and 2 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Part 2, clauses 3 to 14.

3885

Mr Chairman: Part 2, clause 3 needs to be amended.

3890

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Chairman, the hon. Lady has given a notice of amendment to clause 3(3)(a). During the course of the debate I said that the proposal from the Government would be to continue to amend clause 3(3)(a) as is proposed in the letter, but that in clause 3(3)(b) we would change matters a little more, and instead of saying, as set out in the Minister's letter, that it would be the Chief Minister and the Leader of the Opposition who would 3895 appoint two each, we will in fact propose to change (b) by saying 'four persons appointed by the Specified Appointments Commission and who, in the opinion of the Commission' and then the rest should stay the same.

There was then also an amendment, which has been circulated in writing, to clause 3(12) by the Hon. Minister, and additionally, although we have not given notice in writing, in respect of clause 3(14) we are proposing to change the words 'payable out of' to 'a charge on'.

3900 Mr Chairman: So the Chief Minister is suggesting that we remove 'be payable out' –

Hon. Chief Minister: Of.

Mr Chairman: 'shall be' –

3905

Hon. Chief Minister: A charge on.

Mr Chairman: A first charge or a charge?

3910

Hon. Chief Minister: No, a charge on. First charges, I think, are constitutional.

Mr Chairman: 'Shall be a charge on' –

Hon. Chief Minister: The Consolidated Fund.

3915

Mr Chairman: So it should read 'shall be a charge on the Consolidated ...' That is the amendment to –

Hon. Chief Minister: That is right, yes.

I think that is, apart from ... Later, I think the hon. Lady was moving ... in clause 21, anyway.

Clerk: Clauses 3 to 14 as amended.

Mr Chairman: Clauses 3 to 14 as amended stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Part 3, clauses 15 to 28.

Mr Chairman: Part 3, clauses 15 to 28 stand part of the Bill. (Interjection) No. It should be clauses 15 to 20 stand part of the Bill, and there is an amendment to clause 21.

3930

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Chair, I gave notice to proposed amendments to clause 21 and, in particular, subclauses (3) and (4)(b), in my letter of 17th January. May I respectfully suggest that we take those amendments as read, as contained in the letter?

3935

Mr Chairman: Clause 21, as amended, stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clauses 22 to 28.

3940

Mr Chairman: Clauses 22 to 28 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Part 4, clauses 29 to 32.

Mr Chairman: Part 4, clauses 29 to 32 stand part of the Bill.

3945 Clerk: Part 5, clauses 33 to 38.

Mr Chairman: Part 5, clauses 33 to 38 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Part 6, clauses 39 to 40.

3950

Mr Chairman: Part 6, clauses 39 to 40 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The Schedule.

Adoption Bill 2022;
Crime (Disorderly Behaviour Penalty Notice) Bill 2022;
Domestic Abuse Bill 2022;
Anti-Corruption Authority Bill 2022 –
Third Reading approved: Bills passed

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

3965

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to report that the Commonwealth Park (Amendment) Bill, the Employment (Amendment) Bill, the Personal Light Electric Transporters Bill, the Adoption Bill, the Crime (Disorderly Behaviour Penalty Notice) Bill, the Domestic Abuse and the Anti-Corruption Authority Bill have been considered in Committee and agreed to, some with amendments, and I now move that they be read a third time and passed.

3970

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, that the Commonwealth Park (Amendment) Bill 2022, the Employment (Amendment) Bill 2022, the Personal Light Electric Transporters Bill 2022 as amended, the Adoption Bill 2022, the Crime (Disorderly Behaviour Penalty Notice) Bill 2022, the Domestic Abuse Bill 2022 and the Anti-Corruption Authority Bill 2022 as amended be read a third time and passed.

Those in favour of the Employment (Amendment) Bill 2022? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Those in favour of the Personal Light Electric Transporters Bill 2022?

Several Members: Aye.

Hon. D A Feetham: I abstain, Mr Speaker.

3985

Mr Speaker: But the Opposition will be voting in favour.

Hon. D A Feetham: I am abstaining.

- 3990 Mr Speaker: You are abstaining, right, but I did not quite catch the ...
Those in favour of the Adoption Bill 2022? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Those against? Carried.
Those in favour of the Domestic Abuse Bill 2022? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.
- 3995 Those in favour of the Anti-Corruption Authority Bill 2022? (Members: Aye.) Those against?
Abstentions? The Opposition is abstaining. The Bill is, therefore, carried.

Adjournment

- Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, it is late in the hour. The Government does not like to keep Members this late, but if we had not resolved these issues today, we would have had to come back next week and I know we all have other commitments – the Deputy Chief Minister and I will be travelling.
- 4000

- I am grateful to all Members for the debate this afternoon on all of the legislation that has passed. We have passed some seminal pieces of legislation, not least and in particular the Domestic Abuse Bill that is now law, a very short but important Bill on employment matters which will deal with trade union recognition, and a seminal Bill on the creation of Gibraltar's first Anti-Corruption Authority. On that basis, I thank all hon. Members for the debate and I move that the House should now adjourn sine die.
- 4005

- Mr Speaker: I now propose the question, which is that this House do now adjourn sine die.
I now put the question, which is that this House do now adjourn sine die. Those in favour?
(Members: Aye.) Those against? Passed.
- 4010 This House will now adjourn sine die.

The House adjourned at 10.13 p.m.

The Gibraltar Parliament

The Parliament met at 3 p.m.

[MR SPEAKER: Hon. M L Farrell BEM GMD RD JP in the Chair]

[CLERK TO THE PARLIAMENT: S Galliano Esq in attendance]

Thoughts with victims of Turkey and Syria earthquake

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, before we start our prayer this afternoon, I 5 thought it would be fitting that the whole House, as we start our prayer, should keep in mind those who have passed away in the tragedy that hit Turkey and Syria a week ago, and of course in particular Dr Chami, who was one of our colleagues in the Gibraltar Health Authority.

PRAYER Mr Speaker

CONFIRMATION OF MINUTES

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Monday, 13th February 2023.

10 Order of Proceedings: (i) Oath of Allegiance; (ii) Confirmation of Minutes – the Minutes of the last meeting of Parliament, which was held on 18th, 19th and 20th January 2023.

Mr Speaker: May I sign the Minutes as correct?

Members: Aye.

Mr Speaker signed the Minutes.

Best wishes to Sir Joe Bossano for a speedy recovery

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, very quickly, before we start the business of 20 laying papers on the table etc., everyone in the House will know that the Hon. the Father of the House has been in hospital for some considerable time. He is now back home, but not well enough to join us. I am sure I speak for the whole House in saying that we very much look forward to 25 seeing him back amongst us, as always the most energetic of us, as always the most combative of us, and no doubt watching us right now on television, hating the fact that we are talking about him, our deep affection for him and our best wishes. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

30 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, on this side of the House we join with the remarks of the Chief Minister.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

35 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I associate myself with the comments and wish the Father of the House a convalescence and a speedy recovery for us all to continue to enjoy him in the House for years to come.

PAPERS TO BE LAID

Clerk: (iii) Communications from the Chair; (iv) Petitions; (v) Announcements; (vi) Papers to be laid – the Hon. the Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities.

40 Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to lay on the table the Mental Health Board Annual Inspection Report 2022.

Mr Speaker: Ordered to lie.

Questions for Oral Answer

HOUSING, EMPLOYMENT, YOUTH AND SPORT

Q114/2023

Europa Sports Complex – Management and manning systems

45 Clerk: (vii) Reports of Committees; (viii) Answers to Oral Questions.
Question 114/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, can the Minister for Sport update this House in respect of the progress made since his answer to Question 439/2022 to permanently settle the management and manning systems at Europa Sports Complex?
50

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

55 Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, the arrangements in respect of the management of the Europa Sports Complex are in a transitional period with final arrangements currently being discussed. I expect I will be in a position to provide more information to this House at the next session of Parliament.

60 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, I understand what the Minister is saying in his answer. In previous answers, he has also said it was work in progress and so on. If the Minister hopes to be able to update the House at the next session, with your leave, Mr Speaker, when should I be able to pose this question so we can have an update?

65 Mr Speaker: Will the Hon. Minister be ready with an answer at next month's meeting of the House in the third week in March?

Hon. S E Linares: Yes, Mr Speaker, as I have stated, in the next session, which would be the March session.

70 Mr Speaker: Then the hon. Member can lodge a question accordingly.

Hon. E J Reyes: I am extremely grateful, Mr Speaker, for your assistance in that.

Q115/2023
Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority –
Update re staffing

Clerk: Question 115/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

75 Hon. E J Reyes: Can Government update this House in respect of the agreed staffing complement at the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority, indicating which posts are presently vacant and which are being filled in an acting capacity?

80 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, there is no agreed staffing complement at the GSLA, but at present the GSLA has a staff complement of 61. There are no current vacancies at the GSLA.

85 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, going back a few months, the Minister, in one of his answers, said that he was discussing with the representatives of the GSLA having an agreed complement, which was subject to the needs, which he was analysing at the time, of Lathbury Barracks Sports Complex and so on. I appreciate that he said there are 61 members of staff now within the complement, but I do not quite understand why he says there is no agreed complement because that does not 90 coincide with the answers given in the past, that they were discussing what the complement was going to be. Can the Minister enlighten us further on that?

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member knows that in all Authorities and Agencies there is no set manning level or complement. It is a flexible thing that we ... Even so, we are still 95 looking at how we man Lathbury, so there are still negotiations going on in relation to Lathbury. What I have just stated is that the complement is currently 61 and the management is working out how best to run Lathbury together with the Victoria Stadium – or should I say the Bayside Sports Complex.

100 Hon. E J Reyes: It does shed some light, at least, Mr Speaker. I understand that it is work in progress, which is what the Minister is saying.

Mr Speaker, would you agree if I gave him, let's say, three months, maybe after the Easter recess, perhaps shortly before that six-month period? Would I be allowed to seek an update in, say, three months' time, so that we have this issue alive?

105

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member is now giving us dates via asking his questions. I think, in all fairness, if he wants to pose the question in three months in a different way, he can do so. All I am saying now is that I might not be in a position in three months' time to give him the answer. I am not going to be bound by a three-month period because, like I said, it is work in progress and it might take longer, or even shorter.

110

The hon. Member must understand that these are two different complexes that we are running. We have never run them before – for example, the wonderful 52 m swimming pool – and we have to see how we can manage the best we can.

115

Mr Speaker: I think it is not going to be possible. On the basis of what the Minister has said, you are going to have to wait for the six months.

120

Hon. E J Reyes: Yes, Mr Speaker, I understand your guidance on that question. However, sir, if we are in February, I was thinking in three months' time one thinks the month of May. By then the GSLA is about to put into practice the summer schedule, which brings about more active participation by the sports and so on, so I do not think it is unreasonable that in May we are in a position to at least have some updates. However, if, reluctantly, one has to wait six months, we are talking of after the summer recess, so it leaves not just myself but sports lovers and users of facilities totally unaware of what the situation is. I do not know if the Government can enlighten us further on that.

125

Mr Speaker: I do not think we can hold the Government to a certain period of time. When the Government is ready to make the announcement it will do so. I think that is still my position. You will have to wait the six months unless the Minister wishes to speak to you ahead of those six months and can advise that he is ready with the information – then we might consider allowing you to put the question in before those six months, but we cannot hold the Government to account on this basis.

130

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, can I just, if it is helpful ...? The hon. Gentleman has said a few things which I think are just entirely wrong. There is no question of the public not knowing about these new arrangements, if we agree them, simply because the hon. Gentleman cannot ask the question in this House.

135

The rules of this House, as you have set out, are very clear. The arrangements are being pursued by the Minister. If an arrangement is reached, it is very likely that the Minister and the unions will want to issue a statement to the membership and more widely, but in this House there is a rule, and the rule is that you ask no more than once every six months on the same subject. That does not mean that the public will not find out.

140

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q116/2023

Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority –
Cancellations at facilities

145 Clerk: Question 116/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Can Government inform this House how many cancellations have been necessary at any of the Gibraltar Sports and Leisure Authority facilities since 1st September 2021, indicating the location, date and reason for the cancellation?

150

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, I now hand over to the hon. Member opposite the information requested.

Answer to Q116/2023

The cancellations incurred at GSLA facilities since 1st September 2021 are as follows:

GSLA Swimming Pool Complex:

Accessible Pool:

Date	Remarks
9 th September 2021	Faecal Accident
26 th September 2021	Faecal Accident
25 th October 2021	General Power Cut
6 th to 8 th November 2021	Air Handling Unit Malfunction
3 rd January, 2022	Burst Compressor
5 th to 11 th January, 2022	Gas Burner malfunction
16 th January, 2022	Faecal Accident
9 th February, 2022	Faecal Accident
20 th to 22 nd March, 2022	Gas Burner Malfunction
9 th April, 2022	Vomiting Incident
31 st July to 2 nd August 2022	Various Issues with plant room
8 th to 14 th September 2022	Works in the plant room. Burst pipe on Accessible Pool system
28 th November to 28 th January 2023	Damage to main air handling unit. Industry shortage on spare parts.

Bayside Sports Complex

Hockey Pitch:

Date	Remarks
2 nd to 8 th August, 2022	General Water Shortage

155 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for this information. Perhaps a little clarification. From 31st July to 2nd August we had a couple of days of closure of the accessible pool, listed as 'various issues with plant room'. They could be of a minor works nature and so on. But then a month later, from 8th to 14th September, it closed again because of, it says, 'works in the plant room'. This one at least expands on 'burst pipe on accessible pool system'. Was the closure due 160 to the same reasons and probably just lasted a month before it went again? And a burst pipe – to take about a week to fix a burst pipe somewhere that is full of water at first sight does not quite make sense.

Perhaps the Minister has some notes given to him by the staff there with a bit more detail on what the various issues were at the end of July and what works in the plant room ... It is just a 165 burst pipe. To take a week to fix a burst pipe, there must have been a considerable amount of loss of water through the burst pipe. I do not know.

170 Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, when he has a burst pipe at home, I hope he has another tap, so that he can close the whole of the system so that it does not waste water. But be that as it may, if it says here the various issues in the plant room ... If I remember correctly, there were some issues with some parts that were fixed, and if it has taken a week for the burst pipe in the accessible pool to be fixed, it means that they might not have had this pipe in stock and therefore had to procure it from somewhere else until it came in.

175 I do not see it as unreasonable. Why would they take longer? Why wouldn't they want the accessible pool working? I think they would do the works as fast as is possible.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q117/2023
Varyl Begg Estate –
Removal of weeds

Clerk: Question 117/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

180 Hon. D J Bossino: What progress, if any, has been made to remove weeds which continue to be seen growing in roof gutters at Varyl Begg Estate?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

185 Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, the removal of weeds – the hon. Member does not like calling them weeds, they are just plants – growing within the gutters to some of the buildings forming part of Varyl Begg Estate have been tackled in the recent past. However, there are still a number of buildings to address. Aquitania House, Valiant House and Royal Sovereign House will be the next buildings to receive this treatment. Other buildings suffering from this issue will follow suit in the near future.

190 Hon. D J Bossino: Yes, he did say, in answer to the question posed by my hon. Friend Mr Reyes in February 2020, that the matter was being tackled. Can he explain why it is taking so long for the issue to be tackled once and for all?

195 Hon. S E Linares: Well, apart from there was a pandemic in between, I would not know why it has taken so long. This is the answer I have from the authorities I have asked. I am sure it is just a rolling contract or a rolling maintenance that they have, and therefore ... I do not know why it is taking ... Maybe there weren't weeds in 2020. I do not know whether the hon. Member saw the weeds then.

200 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I did not ask the question, it was asked by my hon. Friend Mr Reyes, and it must be because there were weeds.

205 Mr Speaker, he mentions by name three or four blocks within Varyl Begg Estate, and then he mentions other buildings. Can he state which those are, and are they all within Varyl Begg Estate?

210 Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, just to be helpful, I will read the supplementary that has been prepared for me. There are 18 buildings that form part of Varyl Begg Estate. The Housing Works Agency is currently looking into the possibility of adapting the roofs with an access hatch and safety lines to avoid having to erect the scaffolding every time there is the requirement for removing weeds.

May I say to the hon. Member that these were refurbishments that were done during the GSD for Varyl Begg and we are having loads of problems in the new roofing that they did.

215 Hon. D J Bossino: The hon. Member makes a party political point, which is of absolutely no assistance. Can he please answer the question? Which other buildings does he refer to in his prepared reply? He has not answered that question.

220 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, this House, in the days whilst we are dealing with the final stages of negotiation of a treaty within months of having come out of a pandemic, has now spent five minutes talking about weeds in a gutter. That is not a party political point that the hon. Gentleman has made, it is an important point. He will want to know that despite all the other things that we are dealing with, because we work together on these issues and because I visit the estates, I have seen how the weeds come back. Weeds are removed, weeds come back, weeds are removed, and weeds are going to continue to vex us for many years in those buildings and in other buildings, a whole list of which I think I would propose we should provide to the hon. Gentleman behind the Speaker's Chair – not because it is secret, but just to let him have it – or by letter, not across the floor of the House, and we should not waste this House's time further with weedy questions of the sort that we are dealing with now.

230 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, this is an important question which has been raised with me and Members of this side of the House, and I and nobody else on this side of the House is going to be controlled, as he tends to do ... what we do. He can rest assured that we will continue to ask questions that matter to people, and this matters to many residents in Varyl Begg Estate, and we will continue to ask these questions.

235 He has failed to answer the question. His Government has failed to answer the question. Is the answer that he does not have the information in relation to which buildings still require to be fixed in order to remove the weeds?

240 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, certainly the Government is not going to be controlled by the Opposition and certainly we are not going to be controlled by the hon. Gentleman in particular, whose style appears to be to want to come here to make points about his style rather than points about what matters to people.

245 What matters to people is that their estates should be in the best possible condition. That is the condition that the estates are in today after the very considerable number of millions of pounds spent by this Government in the teeth of the opposition of hon. Members opposite when we have refurbished the estates, we have clad the estates, we have removed weeds from the estates, we have improved conditions in the estates and we will continue to do so.

250 Therefore, the answer to the question will remain as helpful as it was when I first rose. We will write to the hon. Gentleman with all of the details that he seeks. That is how we provide the fullest answers possible to the questions that he pretends to be seeking answers to.

Mr Speaker: Last question.

255 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, he knows he is not being helpful at all, and I am afraid to say that he is able to stand up in his usual way and score as many party political points as he thinks he can score and level against us. But let me tell him this. Can he not agree with me that he simply needs to answer the question by saying he does not have the information I sought? The purpose of the question and answer session is to seek information. Can he tell me that he does not have this information available? Yes? No?

260 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if the hon. Gentleman wishes to cross-examine me, he should bring proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction, and there, as counsel, he can ask me to answer questions on the basis of a yes or no answer.

I will avail myself of the parliamentary privilege that I enjoy as Leader of this House to answer the question in the way that I think is in the best interests of the people of Gibraltar, and that is to tell him that we will give him all of the information available to us, in respect of weeds in gutters, in a letter that we will write to him which provides all of that information, if what he really wants is transparency.

265 As to his suggestion that we are here to score goals, the only thing I can say to him is that as a long-suffering Liverpool supporter, I very much look forward to being in the Champions League final, and that is the only place I am interested in scoring goals.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q118/2023

Lift maintenance in Government rental housing – Details of provision and level of satisfaction

Clerk: Question 118/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

275 Hon. D J Bossino: Some things never change, Mr Speaker.

Please provide details of the lift maintenance programme the Government has in respect of the Government rental housing estate to include (i) how often lifts are subject to maintenance; (ii) whether the Government is satisfied with its effectiveness; and (iii) which company provides the service.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, the lift maintenance regime has three facets.

285 First, the current lift maintenance provider, General Lifts Ltd, carries out its own monthly maintenance checks to all passenger lifts servicing Government rental housing accommodation.

Second, the client's specialist lift inspector undertakes six-monthly inspections and then programmes the works on a 'very high' to 'low' priority basis, always in conjunction with the findings of the aforementioned inspections.

290 The third and last facet is the reactive approach to the lift repairs, whereby a defective lift is reported via the reporting office or after-hours duty manager for the necessary action. This third aspect is in line with the reactive reporting of all defects within Government rental housing accommodation.

295 These arrangements appear to be working well. In fact, the current company has a very prompt response to calls and all maintenance issues that arise.

Hon. D J Bossino: When he says that it appears to be working well, is he satisfied in relation to that? On what basis does he come to that conclusion?

300 Hon. S E Linares: On the information that I am given, and I am satisfied.

Hon. D J Bossino: Who gives him that information?

Hon. S E Linares: The Housing Works Agency.

305 Hon. D J Bossino: Did he mention two companies? He talked about General Lifts Ltd and then he talked about, I think, the client's specialist company. Can he give more information on that? I think I understand what they each do and the different roles they perform, but I was not able to obtain information in relation to the second company.

310 Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, the second company is engaged by the Housing Works Agency and is called Specialist Lift Inspectors, which is WJ Enterprises Ltd, to co-ordinate, supervise and oversee the maintenance and repair programmes of all lifts.

315 Hon. D J Bossino: Is that the client that he was referring to as the client of the Housing Works Agency? Is that understanding correct?

Hon. S E Linares: Yes, sir.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q119-122/2023
Kings Bastion Leisure Centre –
Ice-skating rink; boulder park

320 Clerk: Question 119/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: In the last 12 months prior to its closure, how many people used the ice-skating rink at the Kings Bastion Leisure Centre?

325 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 120 to 122.

330 Clerk: Question 120/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: In the last 12 months prior to its closure, what was the net income or deficit of the ice rink at the Kings Bastion Leisure Centre?

335 Clerk: Question 121/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: In the past 12 months, how many people have used the boulder park at the leisure centre?

340 Clerk: Question 122/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: In the last 12 months, what has been the net income or deficit at the boulder park at Kings Bastion Leisure Centre?

345 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, during the 12 months prior to its closure, the ice rink received 11,800 admissions with a deficit of £50,921.

350 In the last 12 months prior to 6th February 2023, the boulder park has received 16,400 admissions, with a net profit of £52,405.

Additionally, the boulder park does not cause the environmental problems caused by the ice rink and its installation did not require the capital expenditure the ice rink repair would have required. The House will recall, even if the hon. Lady does not, that information about the global warming emissions was given in Press Release 675/2020. This provided that:

This will replace the ice rink, which has now reached a point where it has become beyond economical repair. The Government has been informed that the refrigerant gas used to chill the surface of the ice is no longer manufactured. This follows the global drive to cut emissions of gas that contribute to global warming. In turn, this has reduced the supply available, led to a shortage and increased the cost of the limited supply of gas that exists. The installation of new equipment, the chiller plant and compressors to take a different type of gas has been estimated to cost in the region of £470,000. The replacement of the ice rink with a new Boulder climbing facility will also mean considerable recurrent savings for the taxpayer, since the ice rink has been heavily subsidised from day one. The cost of electricity alone has been running at some £8000 a month, when it has operated on revenue returns of around £3000 a month. There have also been ongoing issues with water penetration from the ice rink to the bowling alley below, given that it was not designed and located on the ground floor. This has resulted in considerable costs to the taxpayer over the years. In 2019 alone, those operating costs, excluding staff and repairs to the bowling alley, came to nearly £150,000.

355 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for his answer and the detail of the answer. It is clear that the boulder park makes more sense economically and environmentally, and people are enjoying it a lot more, too.

360 Can I just ask whether, given this drastic improvement in the coffers of the facility, as well as in the usage by people, if the management of the boulder park is looking to enhance facilities or make changes? From what I understand, routes sometimes need to be changed within the facility, and my question is, therefore, because of this enhanced popularity, is there a plan for enhancements and changes to be made?

365 Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, I am happy to say that the management of the Kings Bastion are always looking to improving the centre, so much so that they have now bought new machines for children. They will look at entrances and exits of the place. They are managing the boulder park, which as I stated, is now making a profit. Not only that, but they are consistently, and openly will take any suggestions from the general public as to how to improve the Kings Bastion Leisure Centre.

370 Let me just say that when we came into government, the leisure centre had a deficit of £2.6 million – that was the expenditure – and the revenue was a mere £50,000. Now, Kings Bastion costs approximately £1.4 million and the revenue is nearing £900,000, so I am really pleased at the direction, not only of its facilities ... The facilities are improving every single day because the management are proactive, they look at all the modern machines, e-gaming and everything that 375 needs to be looked at. If the hon. Lady would like to go – and I open this to her ... She can go to the management and if she has any suggestions about how they come in or they come out or people flow through the centre, I open that to her.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

TRANSPORT

Q123-24/2023

Gibraltar Car Parks Ltd –
Services provided; payment received

380 Clerk: Question 123/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government detail what services Gibraltar Car Parks provides under its contract?

385 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Transport.

Minister for Transport (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 124.

390 Clerk: Question 124/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state how much Gibraltar Car Parks are paid for their services?

395 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Transport.

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, Gibraltar Car Parks Ltd is a Government-owned company. The company is responsible for the implementation of all of Government's parking initiatives.

400 Hon. E J Phillips: So, Mr Speaker, logically, then, it does not get paid for the services that it offers our community – is that correct?

Hon. P J Balban: Yes, sir.

405 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Clerk: Question 125/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

410 Hon. K Azopardi: Sorry, just to clarify, the company is not receiving a sum for any contracted service, the employees are paid by the company, but then they get some kind of subvention or subsidy from the Government to pay the employees. How does that work?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): No, Mr Speaker, it operates on exactly the same basis as every government company, like the Bus Company.

415 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q125/2023

Cars registered in last 12 months –
Numbers by fuel type

Clerk: Question 125/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

420 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state, of the total number of cars registered over the last 12 months, how many were (i) petrol, (ii) diesel, (iii) hybrid or (iv) electric?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Transport.

425 Minister for Transport (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, the information requested is as follows. However, the Hon. Member should note the information I shall be providing is in respect of the 12 months for the year 2022: 266 diesel cars, of which 232 are standard and 34 are hybrid; 980 petrol cars, of which 464 are standard and 516 are hybrid; and 25 electric cars.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q126-27/2023
Registered cars –
Numbers of cars per owner and per household

430 Clerk: Question 126/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, at 31st December 2022, how many owners of registered cars appear as the owner of one car, two cars, three cars and more than three cars?

435 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Transport.

Minister for Transport (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 127.

440 Clerk: Question 126/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, at 31st December 2022, how many households have one car registered with that household's address, two cars registered with that address, three cars registered with the address, and more than three cars registered with that household's address?

445

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Transport.

450 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, upon requesting the information from the Driver, Vehicle and Licensing Department motor vehicle registration database, I have been advised that in extracting information of this nature there will be an element of inaccuracy due to the potential mismatch of records. However, upon running a query that has checked for forename, surname and address, the figures are as follows: one car, 16,525; two cars, 1,482; three cars, 301; more than three cars, 214.

455 On a similar note to Question 126, I wish to advise the Hon. Member that I am advised by the Driver, Vehicle and Licensing Department that there will be an element of inaccuracy due to the potential mismatch of records, but the details are as follows: one car per household, 11,341; two cars per household, 2,439; three cars per household, 743; and more than three cars per household, 532.

460 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for that, with the caveat, of course, that I understand the possible inaccuracy, especially as details may not get updated when people change homes and all of that. I understand that.

I do not know if the Minister had asked for details of a similar nature before. Given the caveats to the question, it may be that the Minister had not done that, but does he agree with me that this information is important in terms of the formulation of the overall Transport Strategy and the encouragement of alternative modes of transport and the discouragement of ownership of too many vehicles per household?

Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, we have requested this data before as part of the study that was conducted, and in fact we look at these figures when we are doing our residential parking schemes to see what are the chances of giving everyone an opportunity to park within the area, or not. This is also how we set our policy in that respect.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

JUSTICE, EQUALITY AND PUBLIC STANDARDS AND REGULATIONS

Q128/2023

New laws re electric scooters and protection for cyclists – Enforcement

Clerk: Question 128/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, given the statements made by the Commissioner of Police regarding policing resources, how confident is the Government that new laws introduced to regulate the use of electric scooters and the 1.5 m distance rule for cyclists will be enforced?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards.

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, the Government is very confident that the new rules for the protection of cyclists will be fully and properly enforced.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, the recent press coverage in relation to those officers enforcing those rules probably predates the time at which this question was asked, but I note that is in the public domain now. I am not going to withdraw the question, obviously, but insofar as the 1.5 m distance rule, a number of people – motorists and individuals themselves, actually – have expressed some concern about how that will be enforced, given the sometimes narrow parts of our roads. I was wondering whether the Minister had any feedback from the Police in respect of that and any difficulties that they may have been experiencing insofar as enforcement is concerned.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, we have had this discussion in this House before, I think, in the last two months. We clarified that our understanding of the position is that this will be particularly relevant when someone is knocked down. It is not something that will be measured in the day to day, but it is something that will be relevant in an assessment of negligence, carelessness, dangerousness and liability in the context of a cyclist being knocked down, much in the same way as the rules on dangerous and careless driving are not policeable.

People are making this big fuss – and this is the point we made last time – about the 1.5 m and how you are going to measure the 1.5 m and all the rest of it, and do you have to go around with a tape measure to put against the cyclist as you go past? Well, when you are driving inside your vehicle in a way that is not visible from outside ... For those of us who have the age to remember, if you are trying to remove a cassette tape and it has got stuck, and you are driving and pulling the cassette tape and all the rest of it, that will be dangerous driving because you will not be giving your concentration to the operation of the motor vehicle.

Of course the Police do not have a camera inside the vehicle. They are not policing you, pulling the tape and trying to get it back together so that it plays the final countdown properly once more, and all the rest of it, but if you crash the vehicle and you hit someone or you break something and the Police turn up and ask, 'What were you doing, for goodness' sake?' and you say, 'I was trying to pull the tape out and I was trying to ...' then it will be relevant.

510

We have had that discussion already, Mr Speaker, in the last two or three sessions of the House. I have not been able to search for it in the Hansard, but I put it to the hon. Gentleman that we have ventilated it and that is how it is going to be dealt with from our understanding, although the rule is an important one to enable the Police to prosecute if there is an accident, if there is an injury, if there is loss of life, if there is damage, etc.

515

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I understand what the Chief Minister says. We asked the question about some of the other European laws and compared the fines in respect of the 1.5 m rule, so I think insofar as clarifying the last discussion we had in this House, it was around those legal fines that can be imposed by other jurisdictions in relation to the 1.5 m, which led to a discussion, as the Chief Minister has articulated.

520

I think what he is saying quite clearly to us in this House is it is after the event – effectively 'when someone is knocked down' I think are the words he used. Obviously, insofar as careless and dangerous driving there can be instances when an individual is not injured as a result of the careless and dangerous driving, so there is a bit of a distinction there. What I am trying to get at is many members of the community have expressed a concern about the distances that they are operating in relation to those on electric scooters. It is just that I was asking the Minister whether she might be able to provide some reassurance about them. That is all.

525

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, somebody does not have to be knocked down. I gave that example, but that is not the only example. A cyclist could complain, could phone the Police and say, 'G 1116 just passed within a hair's breadth of me. I did not fall because I managed to control myself, but I was put in danger. He came within 20cm. It is very unfair because this is totally outside the rule.' He can complain to the Police and the Police can then investigate, and if there is CCTV in the area, they may use it, or not. So this is going to be policed, as we understand it, in exactly the same way as all other traffic rules are policed.

530

535

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q129/2023

New fire station –

Whether, when and where to be built

Clerk: Question 129/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

540

Hon. D J Bossino: Will the new fire station promised by the GSLP Liberals in 2011, 2015 and 2019 be built; and, if so, where?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations.

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, yes, sir, the new fire station will be built and located at the Rooke site.

550 The plans have already been approved by the Chief Fire Officer and the relevant officers at GFRS, who have been directly involved in the planning stages. The plans will be submitted to the DPC in the coming weeks.

Hon. D J Bossino: Is she able to provide –?

555 Mr Speaker: I think you need to refer to the Minister as the hon. Lady, rather than ‘she’.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I do not think I was being rude at all.

560 Mr Speaker: I am not suggesting that at all. I am saying that I think you should address her in the proper form. That is all I will say.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady says from a sedentary position that it is parliamentary etiquette. Does that apply to all Members of the House? So from now on, in the future, we need to refer to the hon. – (Interjections) And indeed, my hon. Friend here to my left is called by her first name by Members opposite, so ... But anyway, is that the ruling, that from now on we cannot use the pronoun, we have to refer to the hon. Members as the ‘hon. Member’ or the ‘Hon. Minister’?

570 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, hon. Members have never, other than through inadvertence, referred to a Member of the Opposition or a Member on this side of the House as anything other than ‘the hon. Member’. The hon. Lady says that she was referred to by her first name. I did that in a speech when I was not referring the House to her, I was setting out a recitation of something. But when we refer to each other, when we call each other’s attention through the Chair, we always refer to each other as hon. Members – the hon. Lady, the hon. Gentleman, the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition. That is how we have always done it, and hon. Members on the other side I do not think have failed to do so either.

575 I think you were just rightly pulling the hon. Gentleman up today, but if this is another one of the parliamentary rules that they feel they should change because today they have decided that that is the way they can best put forward their case, well, obviously we are happy to listen to why they think that generations of parliamentary procedure should not be followed.

580 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I really –

Mr Speaker: No, we are not going to go into a slanging match here. We are now going to continue. The Minister was due to answer the question, the Minister will answer the question and then you can put your supplementary, and we are going to stop there. We are going to ask the supplementaries once the Minister has answered the question.

Hon. D J Bossino: Can I simply point out, Mr Speaker, that we –?

590 Mr Speaker: I am not asking you to point out anything. Resume – (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) No, I am going to enforce – (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) You have questioned and queried. Now please resume your seat. I do not want to take this any further.
Where are we now?

595 Hon. D J Bossino: My question.

Mr Speaker: Right.

600 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman was about to ask me a supplementary question.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, we have been called to order before when we refer to an hon. hon. Member as – 605 Mr Speaker: No. Again, you persist. Please resume your seat.

Hon. D J Bossino: Will the Hon. the Minister please state, if she is able to, when she expects the building of the fire station to be completed?

610 Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, there is an element of overlap with this question and other questions on the Order Paper, as the hon. Member will know. The project has not even gone to planning yet, so clearly this is not something that is happening immediately. Once it goes to planning and is approved, there will be a clearer indication of how long it will take to construct it.

Hon. D J Bossino: Whilst the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister – and I am grateful for that answer – may not have a specific idea, is he able to give us some further information on, once it goes into planning, how long he thinks the whole project is likely to take in order to come to fruition?

620 I ask this question, Mr Speaker, because this is a promise, a manifesto commitment of the hon. Members opposite in the last three elections, which they won – 2011, 2015 and 2019 – so there is some pressure to see this happening once and for all.

Can I ask the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister if he is able to give an indication as to when it will be finally completed?

625

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, once all the permits and everything are in place, we would expect this to happen within 12 to 18 months. This is only a very rough estimate and I would not want to be held to it. I am simply saying it to assist the hon. Member and to try to answer his question.

630

Hon. D J Bossino: Would the hon. Member agree with me that, at most, this is a project that is likely to be completed during the course of the next Parliament, should the hon. Members be returned to office?

635 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, given that I have made no secret that there will be an election during the course of this calendar year – this calendar year is going to run for another 11 months and the estimate that the hon. Gentleman has been given is 12 to 18 months – I think that he is sufficiently able to do the maths himself.

640 Hon. D J Bossino: The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister is absolutely right that I think it conflates nicely with the question I have in relation to the expressions of interest in relation to the other project. Did he say – I may not have caught it – that the site that has been left out of the Carlton Properties Ltd project in relation to the Rooke ...? Is that the site where the fire station is to be located?

645

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, this is the subject of a separate question on the Order Paper, so if the hon. Member and Mr Speaker prefer, I will answer that when we come to the question.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

650 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, thank you.

Can I ask, in terms of the construction of the fire station, is that something that will be constructed in house, or is it going to go out to tender? If it is going to be in house, does the Government have an estimated cost for the construction of this new fire station?

655 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, yes, the Government has an estimated cost, but we have not determined exactly how it is going to be done as yet.

Hon. K Azopardi: So the Government is not willing to share across the floor of the House the estimated cost – is that the position?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it would be grossly contrary to the interests of the Gibraltar taxpayer for the Government to share its internal estimate of what the police and fire station are going to cost, and I am sure that on reflection the hon. Gentleman will agree.

665 The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister has told the hon. Gentleman we have not yet determined whether we are going to build in house or whether we are going to go to tender, so if we were going to go to tender, we would be giving away what we think it would cost, so that if anybody thought they could build it for less, they would not. Therefore, I am sure he will agree with me that it is right that we should not disclose that internal estimate now.

670 Hon. K Azopardi: Do I take it from the answer he has just given, unless it was a slip ...? He said it is the police and fire station. Is it two stations in one?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, it is that the two stations go in the same area.

675 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, if I could just follow on from that question, does the Government have any plans of what it intends to do with the current station, which will be the decommissioned fire station?

680

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, yes, the Government has ideas as to what we want to do with both of them, including putting them out to tender, so it is still open in that sense.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

DEPUTY CHIEF MINISTER

Q130/2023

Queen's Cinema and Queen's Hotel sites – Update

685 Clerk: Question 130/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide an update as to the development of the Queen's Cinema and Queen's Hotel site?

690 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, yes, the Government continues in discussions with a preferred bidder for the sites.

695 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Hon. Minister for his answer. If I could just ask two very quick questions, firstly, in terms of the discussions, this is for both sites combined as one development? And then secondly, would there be any linkage between the development of this site, which I imagine will involve the demolition of the Queen's Hotel site and the proposed modular construction at Coaling Island?

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, yes, the tender and the development will be for the two sites combined, so it will be one project; and there is no connection between this and the development at Coaling Island.

705

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, can the hon. Member tell us whether their intention will be to sell to whoever the bidder is for a culture incentive, given that this was hailed as the TheatreLand hub in, I think, two manifestos previously.

710

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, this has not been TheatreLand for quite a while. I think originally, the hon. Lady is correct, there was an intention. The theatre was mentioned in connection with this project. GBC was also mentioned as a possible location for this project, but in the last expression of interest that was published ... it has come out of expression of interest more than once. In the last one, there was no mention of either of these, but there will be, nonetheless, a cultural dimension to the project as well, yes.

715

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q131/2023
Europort Road development –
Loss of parking

Clerk: Question 131/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

720

Hon. D J Bossino: Following the issuing of an expressions of interest in respect of a plot of land at Europort Road, what measures are being put in place to address the loss of parking spaces that will result should the development proceed?

725

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, in the event that the site is developed in the future, the parking spaces currently there will be re-provided inside the Rooke development.

Hon. D J Bossino: Is he able to say how many expressions of interest have been received in relation to this site? I realise now, reading it, that the closing date is not finished, so it may be a bit precipitous for him to answer the question, but is he able to give some form of indication by way of assistance?

735 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, the short answer is no, because the process closes on 17th February. We will have an indication then of how many there are going to be. In past experience, people tend to leave this until the last minute on the last day.

740 Hon. D J Bossino: And in relation to the Rooke site, he is referring to the one that is the subject currently of an application before the DPC, I think, filed by a company called Carlton Properties Ltd. Is he talking about that particular development, which seems to have provided for parking spaces? I assume that the idea is that it will be made a condition that the parking spaces currently on this site, the site that is the subject of this question, will be transferred or will be replaced on the Rook site development.

745 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, yes, that is correct.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q132-36/2023
Rooke site –
Proposed development by Carlton Properties Ltd

750 Clerk: Question 132/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: What premium has been or will be paid for the Rooke site, now the subject of a recent application for outline planning permission filed by Carlton Properties Ltd?

755 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 133 to 136.

760 Clerk: Question 133/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Which supermarket is expected to form part of the proposed development by Carlton Properties Ltd at the Rooke site?

765 Clerk: Question 134/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Will the raised platform deck at the proposed new development at the Rooke site filed by Carlton Properties Ltd be accessible to members of the public?

770 Clerk: Question 135/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Why is the plot to be occupied by Carlton Properties Ltd at the Rooke site reduced in space from that advertised in the expressions of interest?

775 Clerk: Question 136/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Is the Government supportive of the recently announced development filed by Carlton Properties Ltd at the Rooke site?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

780 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, the premium to be paid in respect of this development depends on the final form of the proposal that is approved by the Development and Planning Commission. The Government does not consider it prudent, therefore, to disclose an amount at this stage.

The supermarket chain remains a commercial decision to be taken by the developer.

To the question in relation to the platform, yes, it was a condition of the Government, as 785 landlord, that it should be open to the public.

On Question 135, as has previously been publicly stated, the plot has been reduced in space to accommodate the elderly residential home at the northern end and the police and fire stations at the southern end.

In relation to Question 136, the development filed with the DPC by Carlton Properties Ltd has 790 obviously been negotiated with the Government, as landlord. However, it will be examined further by the DPC from a planning perspective.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I appreciate that there will be a planning process, but as the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister himself says, the Government will be present as part of that 795 process because it will have voting members within the DPC, and also it is the landlord. In relation to the Government's support of the project, he did not quite put it in those terms. He said that it was obviously negotiated by the Government as the landlord, but if this was a successful applicant of the tender process, I assume that the Government is happy with it and therefore I would suggest that they are also supportive of the project.

800 In relation to that, is he able to comment as to why it is that, according to press reports ... I did not see it in the design statement, I saw it in the Gibraltar Chronicle press reports. I calculated that the tallest building, if you include the double flooring just under the podium level, will come to 20 floors. That, so that people understand, is double the size, on any rough calculation, of the modular construction of which we now see the full height. It is going to be double the size of that 805 particular building. How is he able to marry the Government's support in relation to this project and what they said in their 2019 manifesto when they talked about ...? I understand that it was in descriptive terms of the London and Regional proposals at the time, which were relevant at the time, but it says in block letters – and the block bit is the 'not', the negative, 'This will NOT be a high-rise development.' Isn't this a high-rise development? And what does the Government have 810 to say in relation to that?

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, the Government marries this in a very simple way. First of all, the residential construction will only occupy 20% of the site, so it is to the northern end; 80% of the site – that is to say the bulk of it – will be a green area, a park, sporting facilities, and a 815 restaurant/café, I think it said in the planning statement. So the bulk of the site will be an open area on three storeys, having the car park and the commercial activity taking place below. That is how the Government marries it.

In relation to the support in the DPC, the Government Ministers in the DPC are not necessarily bound to support Government projects. There have been occasions when my colleague Minister 820 Cortes and I have voted differently on projects. So developers do not take for granted anymore that because they have the consent of the Government as landlord, it means they will have the consent of the Development and Planning Commission, which looks at different criteria and looks at planning considerations, which is not necessarily what the landlord does.

825 Hon. D J Bossino: Just to understand the position a bit further, is it the Government's position that it has been willing to – how can I put it in terms which are as parliamentary and as friendly as possible? – bend what appeared to be a very firm commitment by his party in the 2019 election manifesto that they would not be building high-rise flats in that area? Is that the Government's position, that it is willing to change its position in relation to that very specific commitment, 830 because 80% of the land is going to be, in effect, in the podium-level green area and places of leisure and all the rest of it?

835 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, the Government has made it a condition also – as landlord, I should add – that it will not accept that the building should be higher than Midtown, which is the one immediately across the road from it. So there is a restriction imposed, as landlord, that the building will not be higher than Midtown. Given that, and given that the Midtown development is already there, we think it is a good balance to be able to have a site where 80% of the land area will be devoted to public use, to recreational use – it represents a huge public gain – and to confine the development to the north, and that it is, in fact, that development that pays for everything else.

840 Hon. D J Bossino: He will be sighted on more detail than I am, by far, but from my reading of the papers I am not persuaded that certainly the tallest building is not going to be higher than the Midtown development, which will be, in effect, behind it. It depends which way you are looking at it; if you are looking towards the bay, it will be behind it.

845 Can I ask him, in relation to the premium ...? This is a preferred bidder, and whilst I appreciate that there will be finality in the negotiations and all the rest of it, and alighting on a specific number, once it goes through the planning process and they go into the specificity of it, is he able to give us at least a range within which the Government has negotiated, by way of a premium price, which he is able to tell the public now?

850 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, it is very difficult at this stage to be able to give the Member that information for a number of reasons, including the fact that if, for example, the DPC were to remove five floors from the project and make it economically unviable, we would then have to proceed with the next highest bidder on the list. So it is difficult to give that information.

855 But in terms of the height point the Member made at the beginning of his intervention, he should not confuse floors with height.

860 Hon. D J Bossino: May I ask why there was a change of heart in relation to the expressions of interest? The expressions of interest, so that people understand, was originally to include the area, in effect, where the parcel post currently is and where it is now earmarked to include the fire station and the police station. Why that change of heart, when indeed it was the Government's own position that the fire station was going to be located on the Rooke site?

865 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, for the sake of clarity, let me read out what the expression of interest says:

A process of consultation and negotiation will follow with the parties that submit ideas or concepts that are of interest to the Government. Such concepts, ideas or proposals may need to evolve or be adapted as discussions or negotiations move forward.

870 So it is a perfectly common thing that happens in this kind of negotiation that sometimes things change. Sometimes it also happens, I should say, on the basis of practical and technical advice to pursue a different course of action from the one originally intended, but it is perfectly common, normal and standard in any process for this kind of thing to happen.

875 Hon. D J Bossino: Or is it because the original proposal was for the developer to pay for the police station and the fire station? Is that what has changed? The expressions of interest state that any expressions of interest should include proposals as to whether there will be provision of a police station or fire station within the area, which was indeed the Government's stated policy decision in 2015 and in 2019.

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, the developer will still be paying. The Government has found a different way of doing that.

880 Hon. D J Bossino: Is the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister saying that the developer will be paying for the fire station and the police station?

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, yes.

885 Mr Speaker: We will have one – (Interjection)

Hon. D J Bossino: I have quite a number of questions on the –

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition, then we will have the Hon. Roy Clinton.

890 Hon. K Azopardi: I have two. I am just going to roll them up. They are different questions, but it might be easier. First of all, I am not really sure I understand that last answer you have given, given the previous answer.

895 Hon. D J Bossino: No, the Hon. Deputy Chief Minister.

Hon. K Azopardi: Yes, the Deputy Chief Minister, given that he answered before that the Government had not ... He had intimated that the Government was going to pay for the fire station, so I am not really sure. Perhaps he can clarify that.

900 The other issue is when he says that 80% of the site will be green – he is obviously sighted on the plans and we are not – is that a scientific assessment of the percentage proportions of the plot? I cannot really get my head round that, because if it is going to have this new, dense residential commercial development and it has the Rooke elderly site, it has the fire station and the police station all on that site, how is it possible that, once you have built all that, you still have 80%, which is going to be a park?

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, the park is on a podium. That is clear from the designs that have been published. It is not at ground level. It is a podium level on a building which will have three floors, which would be spread over the entire site.

910 On the paying point, clearly the developer will be paying the Government and the Government will be choosing its own contractor and paying its own contractor to build them.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

915 If I may ask the Hon. Deputy Chief Minister, and following on from the questions that my hon. colleagues to my left have been asking, can the Minister just confirm to the House that the tender has in fact been awarded? There was no Government announcement and, so far, I have not actually heard those words, that the tender has been awarded to Carlton Properties. Is that the case? Can the Minister at least confirm that point?

920 And then secondly, I presume that some heads of agreement must have been drafted with a premium in mind, maybe contingent on certain things, but can he confirm that something is in writing and has been signed? And could he distinguish the process in this scenario from the Eastside project, where we have a premium of £90 million already announced? I do not understand why one has an announced premium and the other one does not. What is the difference?

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, the two are different. First of all, the development was put to planning by a preferred bidder, so the entity we are dealing with is still a preferred bidder. There are, as he rightly says, certain heads of agreement or certain terms and conditions which, if those 930 are met and if the Development and Planning Commission approves the development in a certain style and way, will lead to a premium, and we are now close to also developing the detailed MoU.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister. Can he just confirm, then, effectively until this clears DPC, the tender has not been awarded?

935 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, that is correct, and that is why we are unable to give a premium amount at his stage.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Damon Bossino.

940 Hon. D J Bossino: I am grateful, Mr Speaker.
Is he able to – because I do not think he has – confirm that the preferred bidder is the company that I have been referring to? I have been referring to that company based on my reading of the design statement, which cites this company as the client. Is it Carlton Properties Ltd? And is he 945 also able to say whether there are any other entities other than Carlton Properties Ltd involved in this project?

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, yes, the preferred bidder is Carlton Properties Ltd. Remember, there were two consortiums originally. The Government was negotiating with two in respect of 950 the site. Those two then merged into one. The preferred bidder is the merged entity, and that is the proposal with which they have come forward.

Hon. D J Bossino: And presumably that is separate to London and Regional, which was referred to in the 2019 manifesto. Is he able to say why that particular project did not prosper?

955 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, London and Regional, if I remember correctly, emerged from a different expression of interest. That expression of interest closed when the Government was unable to agree terms with them, if I remember correctly, and a new one was then put forward, which is the one we are dealing with today.

960 Hon. D J Bossino: And in terms of the further detail, is he saying that Carlton Properties is a third named entity which combines two previous entities that he has referred to? Is that the case, or is Carlton Properties Ltd one of the two?

965 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, the two entities were asked to come to the Government with one proposal for the entire site. This is the product of that discussion. Whether legally or technically those two entities are represented in Carlton Properties Ltd is not something I can answer today, but to all intents and purposes, as far as I am aware, this is the product of that joint bid.

970 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I think it may be of public interest to understand, but if the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister does not have that information with him today, you understand a bit of the history of this, is he able to provide some history in terms of the entities that are involved, or does he not have it? I think he said obliquely in his reply that he does not have that information 975 with him, and if I may, with the Speaker's leave, I would like to ask further questions in relation to that at the next session of the House, because I think it does arise from the question and answer session we have just had.

Mr Speaker: Does the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister wish to answer the question? Does he 980 have any further information that will answer the supplementary that he is proposing, which he has in his mind and which he would like to put to you? Do you have any answers to that?

985 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, I am happy to provide the general history, which we have done in this House already. If you recall, the expression of interest came out, there were two interested parties whose bid the Government liked, we negotiated with them separately, we were then advised that technically and legally and in terms of the lease and other issues it was better to negotiate with one entity rather than with two in respect of that site, we then advised those parties to get together to come back with one joint bid, and that is what has happened and is where we are today.

990 Mr Speaker: I think we need to stick to the six-month rule, so if you have any questions now, please put the questions.

995 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, in relation to the exchange we have just had, I do not think I can pursue the hon. Member further because he does not have that information, and it is on that basis and premise that I was seeking your permission to ask the question so that the hon. Member has the information with him. The difference is that I would write to him and I am sure he would be willing to provide the answer to the question.

1000 Mr Speaker: Perhaps that may well be the way forward.

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, I am not quite sure what information he wants. Does he want the names of the two entities. Is that what it is? Right. If he writes to me, I would be happy to provide that.

1005 Hon. D J Bossino: Procedurally, Mr Speaker, the only reason why I am asking for your leave is because I would rather this information ... If the hon. Member is telling me it is confidential, then it is a different matter, but if it is a question of simply providing the information, I would rather it be recorded in Hansard, and on that basis I would be grateful for a bit of flexibility to allow me to ask the question and not be beholden to a six-month rule that actually makes it very difficult when one is meant to be asking pertinent and relevant questions precisely because the hon. Members introduced the policy of having monthly meetings of the House.

1015 Mr Speaker: In the future, in the Select Committee on Parliamentary Reform, that should be brought up, but as things stand at the moment, it is a six-month rule.

If the hon. Member wishes to write to the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister for answers to all his supplementaries, then I am sure the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister will be more happy to give the information.

1020 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, it is not a question of wishing to write. I would rather ask the question across the floor of the House.

Mr Speaker: I understand, but the hon. Member is a Member of the Opposition, he is a Member of this Parliament, and I am the Speaker and I decide, with respect.

1025 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, if I may ask a question in relation to the supermarket – I think he was talking about this being a commercial decision for the entities. Indeed, I suppose everything is a commercial decision, including the height of buildings and things like that. Is he able to say whether the Government has any condition in relation to this? The design statement talks about a new major supermarket in very specific terms. Is he not able to provide ...? I ask this question because I was asked by somebody to ask it, in the street, because there is interest to know what supermarket is going to be placed there. Does he have any information in relation to that, or indeed, does the Government have any conditions in relation to that issue?

1035 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, the prospective developers have shared the information with the Government confidentially. The question really asks which supermarket is it, and that is not really a question that the Government can answer.

1040 Hon. D J Bossino: So he does have the information. Were there any conditions imposed by the Government in relation to the identity of the supermarket? For example, does it have to be a British supermarket, a British chain, or are they not particularly concerned about that?

1045 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, it is a commercial decision for the operator or the intended or proposed developer. They shared their view, their vision of the project with the Government, and I am sure announcements will be made. He will have seen the planning statement.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I understand that fully, but is the answer, therefore, that the Government has no particular preference or, indeed, condition imposed in relation to this issue?

1050 Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, the Government published an expression of interest, and if I recall, it was quite wide. It said the Government, at this stage, is not restricting the future use of the site and is open to ideas and proposals. Entities came forward with those ideas and proposals to the Government. The Government went through the different lists of entities and the different interested parties and determined on this particular one, which has now put forward the application for planning permission. That included a supermarket, but it could not have included a supermarket. A supermarket was not a condition imposed by the Government, but a condition imposed by the expression of interest.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q137/2023
Old GBC site –
Update re expressions of interest

1060 Clerk: Question 137/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Please provide an update in respect of the expressions of interest issued in connection with the old GBC site.

1065 Before the hon. Member answers the question, Mr Speaker, simply to say, out of an abundance of caution, that I have an interest because I live in the area, but I have been asked to pose this question by residents of the area ... in relation to this question and the other one in respect of Mount Pleasant. I am not sure if the hon. Member is answering the question.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

1070 Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, the Government continues in discussion with a preferred bidder for the site.

1075 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, when I asked this question on 17th May last year, 2022, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister said he was currently reviewing four applications, which I think was the total number of applications that had been received. Is he telling this House that that number has been reduced to one, that he is looking at one, almost successful, applicant?

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, that is correct. The Government has now centred on one particular application, and that is the proposed developer that we are dealing with.

Hon. D J Bossino: Is he able to give any information in relation to what type of project that is going to be? I know he has set out some conditions, which are that it should not be a high rise, that I think, if memory serves – I have the Hansard here – they would have to provide a number of – I think 40 – public parking spaces, but other than that, is he able to provide any information? I understand that he is currently in negotiations, so there may be an element of restriction in relation to that.

1085

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Yes, Mr Speaker, there is a live negotiation going on, so I would not like to say too much, but I would remind the hon. Member, as he has reminded the House, that the proposed scheme was for a low-rise residential development, for a use which was compatible with the area and had to provide a minimum of 40 public car parking spaces and a green area. The other element was if the developer chose to increase the footprint of the site, they were also obliged to pay for and relocate a number of cultural entities that are, at the moment, on the site, either completely somewhere else and they paid for it, or temporarily and then bring them back to the site. That provides a flavour of the kind of thing that we are trying to achieve there.

1090

Hon. D J Bossino: The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister talks about the extent of the site and he is absolutely correct, that was the subject of the expressions of interest and is not necessarily new information which he is giving to the House, but is he able to confirm that the extent of the site is as shaded in red and blue, subject to the point that he made? I think blue is the one that is optional. If the successful applicant is able to move those sites where there are cultural activities currently taking place, is he able to confirm that that is the extent of the site?

1100

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, that is precisely the new information that I provided to the House, that the developer is looking at the entire site, which is option 2, and not only at the area shaded in red, which is the first option.

1105

Hon. D J Bossino: Yes, Mr Speaker, I was just trying to be helpful by way of my preamble, but he is saying that it is new information, in that ... I understand what he is saying, that the applicant is minded to include, as part of the development, the area shaded in blue, but my question was slightly different. Is he telling the House that the extent of the area does not go beyond the red and the blue, as set out in the expression of interest?

1110

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, the extent of the area in terms of Government ownership, Government land, is the red and blue. The Government is not free to sell or negotiate with other people's property.

1115

Hon. D J Bossino: Is it a possibility that part of the development is to consider an area that is adjacent to the red one, which is, I understand, currently in private ownership? Is it going to be extending to that particular property? I think it is one family that lives there.

1120

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Mr Speaker, part of the proposal the Government has received includes extending it to private land to the south of the Government plot. So there is the option of extending it or not extending it. There are two options being looked at.

1125

Hon. D J Bossino: This is with the one potential applicant that he talked about earlier?

Hon. Dr J J Garcia: Yes.

1130

Mr Speaker: Next question.

ENVIRONMENT, SUSTAINABILITY, CLIMATE CHANGE AND EDUCATION

Q138/2023

St Martin's School hydrotherapy pool – Whether fully operational

Clerk: Question 138/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Can Government confirm that the hydrotherapy pool at St Martin's School is now fully operational?

1135

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, no, sir. There have been complex design problems which have affected drainage and so I have not approved its use until these are resolved. I am sure that faced with the same issue, all hon. Members would have acted as I have and in the same timescale.

1140

The works for the resolution of the problems are ongoing and I expect them to be completed in a matter of weeks.

1145

Hon. E J Reyes: Can the Minister expand further on what problems are causing these delays? I think he said something generally, but I did not quite capture it.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, there are issues related to the drainage of the pool and the ability of the pipe taking the water away from the area to deal with that amount, which has led to backflow. I was not comfortable that that was acceptable, and therefore I have requested – in fact, more than requested – that these be rectified before we are able to do it. I have been told only in the last few weeks that they have now come up with an engineering solution, which will involve some changes and also a regular maintenance programme that will check the system regularly, and I am confident that in a matter of weeks we will be able to have it up and running.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q139/2023

St Martin's School – Life skills and vocational courses

Clerk: Question 139/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Is Government planning any future life skills or vocational courses for pupils of Saint Martin's School to follow once they complete their compulsory educational years at said school?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the Gibraltar College has offered life skills and vocational courses since 2013. Young people who have been able to access these courses have always been able to enrol on these, regardless of the educational setting in which they completed their compulsory education.

1170 Our plans for the new Gibraltar College include a dedicated learning zone for young people with additional needs. This will offer opportunities for expansion of the present curriculum. Further life skills and vocational courses are currently being explored.

1175 Hon. E J Reyes: I welcome the news, Mr Speaker, for the future, for the College, but can the Minister confirm, as we stand today, despite whatever the College is offering, are they able to cater for students who may have additional needs as we speak, or is this something that is in the pipeline for future implementation within the College?

1180 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, as I think I have explained, the College offers opportunity. The College at the moment I believe has a number of pupils who were formerly at St Martin's. It does really depend on the disability of each particular student, to see whether the College is able to cater and support them with learning support assistants, for example. This is considered on a case-by-case basis and it does depend on the level of disability, but the panel and the teachers who have experience in this will be the ones to determine what they can offer.

1185 I do know that the courses being offered at present are the ASDAN programme and there are a number of subjects covered, ranging from managing social behaviour to preparing for work, functional skills, healthy eating, food safety and one or two others.

1190 Hon. D J Bossino: The hon. Member says that further life skills and vocational courses are currently being explored. Is he able to provide some detail in relation to that?

1195 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Not detail as such, but the current College site is obviously limited. The new College that is in the process of being designed – in fact, the designs are pretty advanced, or at least the requirements set – will be able to offer more facilities. I would not be able to detail which specific courses, but I am happy to look at this and offer it and write to the hon. Member. I would appreciate being reminded, to ensure that I do not omit ... I usually do remember to write back and copy the Clerk, but if he wants to remind me, I can get those details for him.

1200 Hon. D J Bossino: And in relation to the ASDAN programme, is he able to enlighten this House as to what specific special needs that is geared for? I am not familiar with it.

1205 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I would not be able to give the details. I can imagine what they are, but I think it would be unfair for me to do that. I can tell the House what subjects are covered, like I have said, which really focuses on allowing these young people to progress in matters like good health, independent living, community inclusion and employment, but the specific details of the requirements and so on, I would need notice of that question.

1210 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for your indulgence in relation to this. Just one final question. He talks about the body which in effect decides whether an individual can access these courses or not, and he talks about the teachers – presumably the teachers at St Martin's School – as to whether an individual is capable of having a sufficient level of understanding to be able to follow those courses. Presumably those are the factors which go into the mix. And then he talks about a panel. Which panel is he referring to?

1215 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: I am referring to the Special Needs Panel, which I have referred to in the past, and the teachers not just of St Martin's but also of the College, who would be the receiving institution. But I can say – and I do not have the figures here, but I think I have given them in the past – that there is an increasing number of young people from St Martin's now receiving a higher level of education at the College, and the intention is that we will continue to do that.

1220 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member has spoken about the College site and the designs for it. Does he have a fixed site in mind for this area?

1225 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, this is well known. The site that is being worked on at the moment is the one behind the Cross of Sacrifice.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q140-41/2023

Bayside and Westside music departments–
Bayside performance room; damage to equipment

Clerk: Question 140/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

1230 Hon. E J Reyes: Can the Minister for Education provide details of how long the performance room at Bayside’s music department has been out of use and the estimated date by when this facility will once again be available for use by pupils and staff?

1235 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 141.

1240 Clerk: Question 141/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Can the Minister for Education provide details of any damage caused to music equipment and related apparatus, inclusive of costs to repair or replace these, at both secondary schools?

1245 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1250 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, the performance room at Bayside suffered water ingress in the last week of term in December 2022, the week commencing 19th December. All equipment and resources were moved at the time to avoid any damage. The only item which was not moved and became damaged as a result was a very old amplifier that had already been deemed obsolete.

At the start of term, on 10th January 2023, a works order was raised by Bayside School and reported to the facilities management contractor. On 12th January, the contractor checked all the electrics and the performance room was deemed to be safe for staff and pupils. The performance room has been available for use since 13th January.

1255 Westside School has had very minor water ingress in the music area and no equipment has been damaged.

Other than the damage caused to the obsolete amplifier referred to above, no equipment was damaged. The Department of Education does not expect to incur any costs for the repairs caused by water ingress damage.

1260 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q142/2023

Water ingress and construction defects in schools –
Damage to classrooms and equipment

Clerk: Question 142/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

1265 Hon. E J Reyes: Can Government provide full details of the damage caused to classrooms and equipment at any of our schools as a result of water ingress or construction defects, together with estimated costs to repair or replace damaged fixtures and/or equipment?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Answer to Q142/2023

1275 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, going through this list, in St Joseph's, both the upper and the lower primary schools, in the column of damages the Minister has kindly put in light fittings. Does this entail a danger to electrical installation? Is that what is meant by it, or is it just a physical lampshade that has been damaged?

1280 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, the water ingress did affect the electrics. That obviously was dealt with immediately, and during the period that the room was compromised, the children were moved to another class. I believe they are likely to have got back today; I need to confirm that. Clearly, whenever there is the slightest suggestion that there could be a danger due to water getting into the electrics, that classroom is not used and the works are carried out immediately.

1285 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker in respect of the Westside School, the Computer Suite 130 Level 2, under damages it says 'None as this area has been secured from previous year'. What exactly is meant by that? I do not quite know. It says no damage because the area has been secured. It means what?

1290 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: I believe what that means is the solution happened last year and therefore there has been no damage this year, but for the fullness of record we have included it, as that was an area that was giving problems earlier on.

1295 Hon. E J Reyes: In the Minister explaining that it had been settled last year, on the estimated cost there is no indication of how much the cost was.

1300 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, because these are considered to be problems arising from the original construction. We would not be expected to pay for matters that have arisen as a result of pending faults, and therefore it has been absorbed by the contractor as part of the post-snagging process.

1305 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, if I go to Bayside, at the very bottom it says the damage was to an amplifier, ceiling tiles, flooring and other minor issues. Kindly, a student provided some footage taken with a mobile phone and showed it to his or her parents and I have seen big puddles of water accumulating in these classrooms, but the Minister puts it down as 'other minor issues'. Is that what is considered as a minor issue, very big puddles of water if it has rained overnight or the day before they come to school? It is a hazard and of course makes the whole area slippery. I do not know if he has any further information on what is happening there.

1310 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I suppose that 'minor' is a relative term. I think this is the area that I referred to in my previous question, which has now been dealt with, and, as in the other cases in Westside, because they were residual they have not cost the Department because it has been made good by the contractor.

1315 Hon. E J Reyes: I see, Mr Speaker, that in respect of Westside we have far more detailed, broken-down information than in respect of Bayside. I do not know if this is a question of the manner in which it has been reported to him or not, but I believe that, not for the first time, just a few days ago even whiteboards were coming off the wall when teachers were using them in classrooms. Is the Minister aware of that problem happening live in a classroom with pupils?

1320 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: No, Mr Speaker. This question refers to water-related problems. I do not know whether the hon. Member is suggesting that the whiteboards problem is related to water ingress. If there is another separate question on whiteboards, then obviously I would have to inquire, but I have no information in relation to any specific whiteboards. I think the hon. Member said in the last few days. It certainly has not come to me and it certainly did not arise when I last spoke to the senior team in the schools.

1330 Hon. E J Reyes: I appreciate, Mr Speaker, the Minister can only provide information as given to him. Just for clarification, my question does say 'as a result of water ingress or construction defects', so it is not just water ingress. I believe that there are some walls – I take it they are probably of plasterboard material, or whatever – that are completely warped and so on, so that I attribute as more as a construction defect, and normally logic tells you when these walls get warped it is because the plasterboard itself has got wet. I do not know if the Minister is aware of the cause of these problems.

1335 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, indeed, but I have no indication either as to whether the incident that he is referring to on the whiteboards is anything to do with construction defects. I have provided the information that has been provided to me. If the hon. Member is aware of 1340 anything further, then I would be happy to consider it. What I can say is that none of this would have happened in any new school made by the party opposite when they were in Government because they did not build any new schools.

1345 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, there are references in the description the hon. Member has provided under damages to fixtures and equipment which can be somewhat alarming. We are talking about a building full of people, not just children but teachers as well, and we are talking about ceiling tiles collapsing. That features on at least two occasions, and some of these issues have had to result in areas such as stairs being cordoned off. Is the hon. Member concerned about the state of the buildings?

1350 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: No, Mr Speaker, the hon. Member is not concerned about the state of the buildings. These types of problems do arise in new buildings. If it is in relation to water ingress, I can say that the ceiling tiles are not heavy tiles, they are soft, cardboard-type tiles, so they have not caused any injury, nor would they cause any injury. So absolutely no concern whatsoever.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q143/2023
University of Gibraltar –
PGCE courses

1355 Clerk: Question 143/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Can Government update this House in respect of the international accreditation of Postgraduate Certificate in Education (PGCE) courses offered by the University of Gibraltar?

1360 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I can provide the following information.

1365 The PGCE at the University of Gibraltar was designed with reference to the UK Quality Code for Higher Education, the UK Characteristics Statement for Masters Degrees and the UK Teachers' Standards. This postgraduate degree provides school experience and professional portfolio evidence that students need in order to apply for professional recognition of their qualification.

1370 In Gibraltar, no person can work as a teacher in a school operated by the Department of Education unless registered on the Gibraltar Qualified Teacher Status (GQTS) Register. Successful completion of the PGCE programme at the University of Gibraltar provides direct entry on to the GQTS Register as per the Education (Gibraltar Qualified Teacher Status) Regulations 2020.

1375 In the UK, no person can work as a teacher in a school that is part of the UK state-funded school system unless they hold Qualified Teacher Status (QTS). Although QTS is not a legal requirement for all UK schools – for example, free and private schools – many schools still use QTS to assess the quality of candidates for teaching posts.

1380 Those with a University of Gibraltar PGCE degree and GQTS registration follow the same process as individuals from nations that include those in the EEA, Hong Kong, Northern Ireland, Scotland, Australia, Canada, New Zealand, Switzerland and the USA, namely, they can apply for direct online entry on to the UK QTS register. Each country has different requirements and regulatory organisations that deal with teacher qualification recognition. ENIC (previously NARIC) is a commercial information centre that provides the contact details for the appropriate organisation in international countries and can assist individuals with the overseas process, for a fee.

1385 In general, most countries and international schools require overseas applicants to provide some form of professional recognition – for example, a jurisdictional government-issued teaching licence, such as the GQTS. In addition, most international schools and organisations will seek to ensure that the qualification awarding body, typically a university, meets internationally recognised standards for quality assurance in higher education. The University of Gibraltar, following a successful international quality review against all 10 higher education quality standards, was recently awarded international accreditation by the UK Quality Assurance Agency for Higher Education (QAA). This global accreditation provides trust and confidence for students and international education establishments.

1395 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, if I refer to the last couple of years, whenever the Minister or his predecessor have answered questions in respect of the PGCE, they have always informed this House of how hopeful they were and were leading us to believe it was only a question of time, that by obtaining a PGCE in Gibraltar this was somehow going to be fully acceptable within the UK qualification system. From the Minister's answer today, that does not seem to be the case. It now seems that the individual has to go through some sort of application process. So either the situation has changed since it was originally being promoted as a PGCE, or not. As it happens, a graduate who undertakes the Postgraduate Certificate in Education in Gibraltar does not now automatically qualify to be recognised as a QTS graduate to be able to teach in ordinary state schools in the UK, whereas those who choose to carry out their PGCE in the United Kingdom, instead of the University of Gibraltar, obtain the QTS. Unless things have changed since my day, 1400 you are even given a number on the register in the UK and you provide that to the local authorities, who require nothing further; maybe there is an internal exercise where they check the veracity of the number you have written down.

1405 It does not seem to be a reciprocal recognition, as we were being led to believe a couple of years ago. Can the Minister explain why what was hoped to be attained two years ago has not really materialised? 1410

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, there are a couple of points here. I do not know whether the hon. Member is questioning the quality and the rigour of the course at the University of Gibraltar, because there is absolutely no question that that is up to standard. I think if that is the case and the hon. Member fully accepts the quality and the rigour and the quality of teachers that emerge from the course at the University of Gibraltar, then the hon. Member is worried about a procedural matter which would also apply to those teachers who qualify in universities in Hong Kong, Northern Ireland, Scotland, Australia, Canada, New Zealand, Switzerland and the USA, where they apply for direct online entry. 1415

1420 I am not aware of any local teachers who have not been successful, have they applied. I think that this is something that in no way calls into question the validity of the courses at the University of Gibraltar and in no way can be seen as a serious obstacle to those teachers from Gibraltar who would seek a job in the UK.

1425 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, I am sorry the Minister got the impression that I was questioning at all the validity or the rigour of the contents of what is being delivered in the PGCE locally. Nothing like that ever crossed my mind and I do not think it crossed my lips. I think it may have been a misunderstanding.

1430 What I am questioning is that two years ago this House was being informed and we were equally with the Government side actually promoting to students the idea of undertaking a PGCE course registered at the University of Gibraltar so they did not have to leave their homeland. It saves money in grants and so on to Government and they were able to undertake a PGCE – and different Ministers have always assured this House that they would have no problems in getting ...

1435 it was just a question of time, we were going through paperwork and so on – that will carry an equal validity with the UK.

I am not interested because I do not represent anyone in Australia or Hong Kong today and have no intention of ever representing people in Australia or Hong Kong. Looking at Gibraltar's graduates, for those who have been encouraged to undertake a PGCE locally, it now seems that the validity of that accreditation with the UK has not transpired and they have to now go through some other process. Am I wrong in that there has been a shift in what was being sold to students two years ago?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I do not think we need to encourage anyone to take their PGCE in Gibraltar; it is very well subscribed. The value of being able to undertake a degree course of this nature in your home town, particularly for those people who may be wanting to come into teaching later on in life ... As is the case at the moment with many of the PGCE students, all of whom I have met, they may have had other careers and feel that they have a vocation for teaching. Maybe they have always wanted to teach, and in the past, when they were at the school leaving age they were unable, for whatever reason, to leave Gibraltar. They are coming in and they are having this rigorous, high-quality course and they are qualifying. So I do not believe that the current situation is a problem.

Remember also that the logic continues because if they have chosen to study this course in Gibraltar rather than go to the UK, because for them going to the UK might be a problem, it is highly unlikely – not impossible – that they would now seek a job in the UK, and therefore their qualifications are perfectly okay for them to practise in Gibraltar. And if they do want to seek a job in the UK, then there is a simple process to be followed in order for them to be able to do that.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1460 Hon. K Azopardi: I am not sure the hon. Member is specifically addressing the point that my hon. colleague is setting out. Is it that the Government is going to envisage achieving that accreditation of the equivalence of the course? There may be people who, yes, of course, wanted to do it here on the basis that they were going to get an equivalent certificate that would then be transportable, as it were, and now they find it is not transportable in that sense. That is the question. Is it going to be the equivalent of what my hon. colleague has said? In other words, will it then lead people to have the option, should they wish to in future, like they used to when they did it in England?

1470 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, yes, it is transportable. The only thing is there is a process to be followed for the UK to say, 'Yes, okay, we accept your qualification.' They are going to accept it, but there is a process to be followed. It is not as if there is an obstacle.

I am sorry, because the Hon. Mr Reyes seems to have been offended at the fact that his question could be taken as an implication that our course is not good enough, and I totally refute that. Our teachers are coming through, perhaps even with more rigorous requirements than there would be in the UK, but there is a process to be followed at this point in time. That is the fact, but I do not think it is an obstacle and I do not think it is a problem.

1480 Hon. K Azopardi: I understand that, and no one is saying that on this side. It was unnecessary to clear it because, with all due respect, my hon. colleague to my right had already said that no one was questioning the rigour or the excellence of the course. The question that we are putting, given that there is a process to be followed, is: is this something that the Government is trying to clear up so that there will not be a process in future, so that there is acceptance of the quality of the course?

1485 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, can I assist the House, given that there was a reference by the Hon. Mr Reyes to assurances given in this House and elsewhere by former Ministers for Education? That was clearly a direct reference to me, and perhaps I can explain my understanding.
Certainly I am not speaking for the Government, the Minister speaks for the Government, but 1490 given that there was a reference to me and to assurances given by me, let me tell the hon. Member what my understanding was about the position.

There is a Gibraltar qualification which allows – and this was something that was introduced, as I recall, when I was in office – by regulations a Gibraltar QTS status, and there is a requirement to register. If anybody wants to practise in the UK as a teacher, they have to register and obtain QTS status in the UK, and you have to show, in order to obtain QTS status in the UK, that you have 1495 an accreditation from an accredited university or teaching institution that allows you to obtain that registration as QTS status in the UK. The fact that there is a process simply means that there is an application to be made. Nobody in the UK, without there being an application, will know the people who have done the course in Gibraltar and whether they want to practise in the UK and obtain status in the UK, and therefore there has to be an application. When there is an application, 1500 there is a need to look at what qualification you have.

Gibraltar's qualification today now stands in exactly the same position as a qualification from Scotland. A person who qualifies in Scotland as a teacher and wants to teach in England has to apply for a number. The hon. Member referred to a QTS number. You have to apply and say, 'I have qualified at Edinburgh University, please give me my QTS number,' and then you can teach 1505 in England. In the same way, somebody who does the same in Gibraltar goes to England and says,
'I have qualified in Gibraltar, this is my status, this is the university, please give me my QTS number.'

It is exactly the same position my learned Friend experienced when he studied law in the UK and was called to the Bar in the UK. That did not automatically allow him to practise law in 1510 Gibraltar. He needed to apply in Gibraltar to be called to the Bar on the back of a qualification which he had obtained in the UK. So there was still a process to be followed. After having qualified in the UK as a barrister and been called to the Bar in the UK, my learned Friend and myself, and other members of the legal profession here, still had to come to Gibraltar and make an application, and there followed that application and we were all called to the Bar and we can practise. That is 1515 exactly the same process that applies in relation to teachers.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, may I just thank my hon. Friend for assisting and essentially making the point that there is no obstacle.

1520 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. Member for his contribution. It has helped to clarify it a little bit. He has given examples of other professions, like law and so on. As far as teaching is concerned, a student who undergoes a PGCE in the UK and is granted a QTS number in the UK automatically has that accepted within Gibraltar. He has explained to us the process that you now have to apply for that in the UK and so on, so it is not completely reciprocal, but all right, 1525 there is a system.

Can I ask the Minister, is he aware of any PGCE holders graduating from the University of Gibraltar who have encountered any problems in the UK? Or is he aware of those who have not encountered any problems in the UK and therefore been able to obtain QTS? Does he happen to have at hand any statistics that it is been an easy process or that it is been questioned? It is just 1530 to put the mind at ease for those who would consider undertaking PGCE courses at the University of Gibraltar.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I am not aware of any teacher who has applied to teach in the UK and gone through the process and found that they have not been able to register. Should 1535 I be made aware, then I would immediately take that up with the Department for Education in the UK.

Hon. E J Reyes: And likewise, Mr Speaker – I am grateful for that – is he aware of anyone who has applied and has had no problems and got the QTS registration?

1540

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: No, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q144/2023

Non-completion of further or higher education courses –
Details

Clerk: Question 144/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Can Government provide details in respect of the number of students who have returned to Gibraltar without fully completing their further or higher education studies since 1st September 2020, indicating the reasons why, together with details of the date and corresponding academic year in which the student left the course they were enrolled on?

1550

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1555

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, a schedule with the information is making its way to the hon. Member as I speak.

1560 Hon. E J Reyes: Mr Speaker, sir, it is a long list with five or six pages of small print, which may take me a while. Would you like to proceed with other questions? If I have anything that arises, I can inform you.

Mr Speaker: I agree.

Q145/2023
Vessels discharging black or grey smoke –
Warnings and fines issued

1565 Clerk: Question 145/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, how many vessels have been warned or otherwise fined for discharge of black or grey smoke over the last 12 months?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1570 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, before I reply, I have just received information from my hon. Friend Mr Licudi that he is aware of one teacher who qualified at the University of Gibraltar and is now successfully employed in the UK without any hiccups.

1575 The Environmental Agency has not yet issued a fine or a formal warning to a vessel. The Agency investigated eight complaints of dark or black smoke from vessels in 2022. No complaints of dark or black smoke have been received, so far, in 2023.

1580 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, in relation to those eight complaints in 2022, can the Minister give more information about the duration? I suppose a warning or an investigation would have commenced in relation to a time period when these vessels were emitting black or grey smoke. Does he have any further information on the answer?

1585 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker. There are several criteria that have to be met, including the darkness of the smoke, according to the Ringelmann chart, also the period of time. There are several defences regarding the reasons why the black smoke is emitted – if it is something that is reacting to an emergency, for example.

1590 I can go through, very briefly, the eight instances that have been referred to. There was one in February last year which did not meet the criteria, two in July last year that did not meet the criteria, and one in August that did not meet the criteria. There was one in August where the vessel was boarded and the master of the vessel was able to provide evidence that the emission was due to an unforeseen failure in connection with the boiler, and following this, as well as guidance from the GMA, it was determined that there were exceptional circumstances and the prosecution should not be pursued. There was then one further instance in August and one in 1595 November that did not meet the criteria, and there was one other where the smoke was intermittent and did not fit the time criteria either. Those are the details that I have on those eight instances.

1600 Hon. E J Phillips: Does the Minister have any view as to whether the criteria that are imposed by law are too flexible insofar as the damage that black smoke and grey smoke does to our environment? It is clear that of the eight incidences he has referred to – very helpfully, thank you for that – there has been not a single prosecution, and whilst I understand that the criteria were not met, there were possible defences available to the master of that particular vessel. Does the Minister have a view as to the flexibility, or otherwise inflexibility, of some of the criteria?

1610 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, it is very hard to really be less flexible, and certainly I would not be more flexible. As I said, the defences are that the emission of the dark smoke took place in circumstances affecting the safety or life of the vessel or a member of the crew or a passenger. Clearly that has to remain as a defence. The other defence is some unavoidable failure of apparatus. Clearly the consequences on the air quality in the immediate vicinity are not going to be acceptable, but the defence nevertheless is probably justifiable.

1615 Different jurisdictions – and I did quite a bit of research on this when we were drafting the Bill that we passed through the House not that long ago – have different criteria. This was done in close consultation with the Port Authority and the GMA, and now that we have just over a year of experience, I think it is something that we can always look at again and study to see whether any changes are necessary.

1620 I do think, Mr Speaker, if I may, that it does act as a deterrent. Certainly every instance is investigated, and more often than not the master of the vessel is actually tackled and explanations are requested, so it is nowhere near turning a blind eye. There is active investigation in every case.

1625 Hon. E J Phillips: I suppose the answer really is active investigation into these matters, because there could be an instance where machinery fails in the situation. That is the defence that is available to the master and the crew of this particular vessel. However, on close inspection by the investigators, if the machinery is not maintained to a certain standard that is acceptable, that defence may not be available to that master or that crew.

1630 I think the other countries that the Hon. Minister has alluded to have strict liability offences in relation to black smoke, for instance, and therefore our position is slightly more flexible than that because defences are certainly available. Is it right, then, given the experience that we have had post the implementation of this legislation, that this matter is kept under review, particularly also to the extent to which we can fully manage an investigation in relation to these matters?

1635 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, I think it is a matter that we have to keep under constant review, and I think the shipping industry itself is constantly reviewing its own processes and is actually leading the way in a lot of this. So, yes, it is a matter that I am sure will be kept under review and in discussion between the Department of the Environment, the Port Authority and the GMA.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q146/2023
Energy saving targets –
Update re position

Clerk: Question 146/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1640 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state where Gibraltar is in relation to meeting energy saving targets?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1645 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, it is not clear from the hon. Member's question exactly which targets he is referring to, and therefore I cannot answer the question specifically.

1650 Hon. E J Phillips: I suppose the question was referring to the previous applicable directives that the Minister has talked about in this House previously in relation to Gibraltar's targets for energy saving across ... What I can do is, of course, put another question to him, but this arises in the context of those previously applicable directives that the Minister has referred to in this House.

1655 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, I think it would be helpful if I had a more specific question, because the targets mainly are related to increasing the amount of renewables and not specifically targeted at energy saving. I would be happy to perhaps have another question, or if he wants to write to me asking for specific details, I would be very happy to supply him with all the information that I have.

1660 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q147/2023
Registered dogs –
Number in Gibraltar at 31st December 2022

Clerk: Question 147/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: How many registered dogs were there in Gibraltar at 31st December 2022?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1665

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, there were 4,494 dogs registered at 31st December 2022.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q148/2023

Pupils with special needs in government schools –
Total numbers

1670 Clerk: Question 148/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, what is the total number of pupils with special needs in government schools in 2019-20, 2020-21 and 2021-22?

1675 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, the total numbers of pupils with special education needs in government schools are as follows: 2019-20, 1,612; 2020-21, 1,637; 2021-22, 1,880.

1680 If I may point out that these are the numbers of individuals. We had correspondence last time round because the adding up of the special needs did not add up to the number of individuals. I have specifically asked again, even today, and I am told these are the numbers of children with needs. Some of these may have more than one need, and therefore, if you tot up every single need from a table, you are going to end up with more than these numbers.

Hon. K Azopardi: Well, I am grateful because that was going to be my question. He knows we have had exchanges about this, and my hon. colleague to my right, Mr Reyes, has asked him questions. He will remember across the floor of the House I said to him that the total ... There was a column in the statistics that the Government used to publish, which had a total number, which in around 2018-19 said something like 1,500. At the time, we said it might not be the total because of the explanation he has just given, that some people might have autism but may also have speech and language issues, and so 1,500 might not reflect the total. But what he is now saying is that these figures of between 1,600 and 1,880 do reflect the number of individual pupils, even though some of them may have more than one. That is how I understand his answer.

1690

1695 It seems like a very large number. When I had suggested that last time, when we were talking about the number of 1,500, it had been suggested to me that that would reflect not the real number, but rather it might be that there were pupils with more than one special need, and therefore it had bumped up the figure. Having now verified that in fact that is a real number, does he agree with me that it seems like quite a high number? How does it compare to numbers in other countries?

1700

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I do not know what proportion, but obviously it is not comparing like with like. It would be possible to seek figures in other jurisdictions, but their assessments may be completely different to ours, so I do not think comparing it with other countries is necessarily going to be helpful. I think what we have to do is look at how the numbers have increased in Gibraltar through the years. But yes, had we totted up individual needs or types of needs rather than individuals, the numbers would be even higher than this. That was the subject of the correspondence, and I know there have been conversations with the Clerk today, which is why I have provided this answer.

1710 Certainly the numbers have increased. We have had this conversation before. Speculating as to the reasons is sometimes interesting, sometimes helpful, sometimes not helpful, but I can confirm that these numbers are high.

1715 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am being told that in England the correlation of special needs is around 16.5% of the pupils – but it is something that perhaps we can look at – and that it has been decreasing. Again, I am sure there are unique factors here. They seem to be increasing. I think it is something that bears reflection, and does the Hon. Minister agree with me that having now at least flushed out whether this was the real total or not, perhaps he can discuss that within the Department and understand the numbers a bit better in terms of the trends and 1720 proportionalities?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I discuss this with the Department very frequently and we do not arrive at any absolute conclusion, but we do not doubt that these special needs exist. Certainly if the figure of 16.5% – I was not familiar with this, I will certainly look it up – is correct, 1725 I would suspect our percentage is higher than that, considerably higher, perhaps 20% to 30%. We would have to calculate exactly how many children there are in education. It is around ... I think it would come up to that. Again, we are speculating.

I do discuss this regularly with the Department and we are trying to do some work to find out what the professionals believe are the main reasons for this increase. Having said that, I do 1730 remember that it is not of the last few years. I do remember, when I was Minister for Health, having similar discussions from the health side as to the number of special needs children increasing at the time, and that is now 11 years ago, so it is not a new phenomenon.

Hon. K Azopardi: And given the explanation he has just given about the discussions that are ongoing within the Department and people considering what are the causes or reasons for it, can he illuminate us as to what sort of tentative conclusions there have been?
1735

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I do not think that would be helpful. I am not a professional in this. I have my own views, but I do not think that would be helpful. What I do think is important 1740 is to establish and confirm that special needs are taken very seriously and every support possible is given to the children in question.

Hon. K Azopardi: Can I ask whether the discussions, if they had been ongoing for some time, had been factored in the planning of the capacity of St Martin's School?
1745

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I go back to the fact that here the figures I have given are looking at special educational needs across the whole of the education system. The numbers of St Martin's have increased but took a jump, as I have explained. I do not have the figures in front 1750 of me, but I have explained before the average number for the previous 10 or so years – I am working from memory – had been six or seven a year and then they took a jump to about 19, and it stayed at 19 for the past few years. Therefore, the numbers for St Martin's School were calculated based on the average intake to St Martin's School because most of these children will not be attending St Martin's School, they will be fully mainstream but their special needs are attended to by additional support, perhaps from LSAs or in the learning support facilities, so it is 1755 not the same process that has gone into determining St Martin's School. It is a different process.

Q144/2023

Non-completion of further or higher education courses –
Supplementary questions

Mr Speaker: Before we proceed to the next question, I believe the Hon. Edwin Reyes has a couple of supplementaries in relation to Question 144.

1760 Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I thank the Minister for the schedule and I just want to raise a couple of little issues with him.

In the status column, there are some indicated, unfortunately – luckily, they are low in numbers – where it says that the status of the student is ‘failed’. But as we go down, we see in some cases ‘Failed academic year, self-funded repeat successfully’. That is understandable. You fail the year, you come to terms with the university and then you self-fund the year. But in some cases ... For example, student 2 failed in the academic year 2019-20, and it does not have the additional remark of ‘self-funded repeat’. Unless a student self-funds and is able to complete and qualify in the course, is it still the case that the Department of Education would ask for a full refund of all moneys granted in the scholarship? Can we start off with that?

1770 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, when a student unfortunately fails, obviously if there are medical reasons then it is a different dynamic, but when they fail they have the option of paying back the years that they have studied and that they have failed, or to self-fund the repeat year, and then if they are successful we carry on funding them for the remaining one or two years. But obviously for that year, rather than having to pay us, they self-fund it and then they almost make up for having failed, and then we would pick up the next year. That is the process.

1780 Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker. That makes a lot of sense and clarifies it. If we may use as an example ... If we look towards the very end, for the academic year 2022-23 there is a list of students as self-funded. It means that they are students but during this academic year they have a self-funding repeat year. I am grateful for the Minister nodding yes.

1785 However, where a student has withdrawn himself or herself, if we look at, for example, number 7 and number 31 it says ‘paid back in full’, so they have settled completely there and then, whereas those who have withdrawn, like number 1 and so on, for personal reasons, we do not need to know those but there is no indication of whether any payment has been made back contrary to the other one of ‘paid back in full’. Or perhaps it is a question of being handled by another Department, whereby they have entered into an arrears repayment agreement with another Government Department. I do not know whether the Minister has any information to shed some light on that.

1790 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, when they withdraw, it is the equivalent of failing because they have failed to complete, and therefore there is the expectation that unless they fund the year again, as in the case of failing, they would have to refund. The Department engages in the first instance and then the Central Arrears Unit might get involved. In most of these cases there will be a repayment plan. No two cases are the same, but the principle is that yes, they will have to pay back if they have withdrawn mid-course or mid-year.

Hon. E J Reyes: I understand.

1800 Mr Speaker, on the penultimate page, where we have number 77, a student seems to withdraw during the academic year 2021-22 and in the remarks column it says ‘eligibility’. I do not know what exactly has happened there. Is it a question that there was an error perhaps, or it came to light that the student was not eligible? There was someone else in eligibility, but at least that one there. Of course, I only asked for the date on which the withdrawal took place, and that happened 1805 during 2021-22. I do not know whether that was the first, second or third year of that individual and what happened to any payments that were made in the previous years in respect of eligibility.

1810 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I would have to check. There is a vast amount of information here. I know that the hon. Member does not expect me to have intimate details of every single one of them. 'Eligibility' could be that after they were deemed to be eligible it was found that there was a problem with eligibility and perhaps the offer was withdrawn. So the withdrawal may have come from the Department or by mutual agreement when it was pointed out that that student was not eligible. I am just speculating, but I undertake to find out and let him know.

1815 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, as we are moving on to the Hon. Minister for Digital Services, I wonder whether this might be a convenient moment to stop for 15 minutes and then continue.

1820 Mr Speaker: The House will now recess for 15 minutes.

The House recessed at 5.37 p.m. and resumed at 5.57 p.m.

DIGITAL, FINANCIAL SERVICES, HEALTH AUTHORITY AND PUBLIC UTILITIES

Q149/2023

School internet issues – Reasons for continuing problems

Clerk: We continue with answers to questions. Question 149/2023. The Hon. E J Reyes.

1825 Hon. E J Reyes: Further to the answer provided to Question 40/2023, can Government provide explanations as to why schools are still experiencing intranet problems despite the Minister's answer with assurances that these issues had now been resolved?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

1830 Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, further to the answer to Q40/2023, I have been actively involved, together with the Minister for Education, as well as IT&LD, in all the latest developments in connection with the school internet issues.

1835 IT&LD identified that the root cause at the time of this issue was a malfunctioning distribution switch which was reconfigured to restore connectivity. However, they continued to receive reports from the schools of a degradation of Wi-Fi services between the hours of 8.30 and 9.30. Upon further investigation, they identified that the Wi-Fi services across all schools were being overwhelmed by approximately 2,000 unauthorised devices connecting simultaneously to the system. This amounted to a total of approximately 3,500 devices connecting to the system, resulting in a denial of service.

1840 IT&LD has since carried out extensive configuration changes to the way the system operates, to ensure that only authorised devices can connect. This will make the service stable and secure. IT&LD envisages that the works will be completed by the end of next week. They have and continue to work closely with the Department of Education and its Ministry, who are fully supporting IT&LD in this matter.

1845 On Monday, 6th February a meeting was held where all issues were discussed and an update was provided. IT&LD is co-ordinating with all the schools on the necessary works and all stakeholders are constantly being kept abreast on the progress made.

Hon. E J Reyes: I am grateful, Mr Speaker. It is an interesting occurrence, to say the least. Like the Minister said, the feedback we were getting coincided with his timing: from 8.30 to 9.30 seems to have been the worst time of all.

The Minister has said that there seem to have been unauthorised connections. Any idea as to where these unauthorised connections were taking place? The first thing that comes to mind is maybe you have the normal intranet and the facilities provided to the teachers to carry out registration using the intranet, the access to certain learning resources, schemes of work and so on. Could it be that individual teachers, or maybe pupils, were logging on to the system? Has he been able to identify where the unauthorised access was coming from?

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the information we have is that the unauthorised access was from students who obtain passwords and then just begin to use the Wi-Fi – there are very many students, particularly in the two larger schools – and that has been causing the problems. There is a separate system for teachers, with their own passwords.

Basically what is happening now is that all of the students' official work tools are being registered with their unique number and they will be given access, irrespective of the password. So there is not a password issue now. It is only the machines that are legitimately being used in schools that will have access to the internet and the Wi-Fi at the school, which avoids the problem. There will then be a separate feed for guest Wi-Fi, and if that goes fast or slow because it is oversubscribed, fine, but nothing will interfere with the teaching and the teaching tools at the schools. That is what we are working on at the moment.

Hon. E J Reyes: I thank the Minister for his answer and I wish him and the IT department the best of luck in sorting this out. I know, and I think he will agree with me, it is not necessarily an abuse by students, because there now seems to be a system – so my grandchildren tell me – that even homework and so on is communicated via social media services, which is extremely useful. The student is reminded of what homework they have pending and those communications come through. So it seems to be very much an essential item of day-to-day life for students. And yes, just looking at the numbers on roll, between teaching staff and pupils, if we take the two secondary schools alone we are talking of well over 2,500, close to 3,000.

The Minister has kindly identified and admitted that other schools are also having the problem, so I wish him the same luck in resolving the issues, and let's hope that this subject does not need to be asked about again in questions if all proceeds well.

Mr Speaker: What is the question?

1885 Hon. E J Reyes: [Inaudible]

Hon. A J Isola: Yes, Mr Speaker, I agree and I know the Minister for Education agrees because he has been breathing down my neck these past weeks to ensure that schools have what is no longer a luxury. This is now a critical part of learning, and of course that is why we have given it the urgency it requires and why we have worked and continue to work closely with ITLD to make sure that we can get this right, not just in the two secondary schools, as hon. Member has said, but across the entire network of schools.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q150/2023

Cross-frontier movement of healthcare workers –
Contingency measures for non-negotiated outcome

1895 Clerk: Question 150/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state the contingency measures for a non-negotiated outcome in respect to the movement of healthcare workers across the land frontier?

1900 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola):
Mr Speaker, the GHA is working closely with the Brexit Contingency Committee to ensure that we can continue to provide a health service to the people of Gibraltar with minimum disruption. They are currently co-ordinating an updated in-depth analysis of potential impact issues and identified mitigation actions and contingency measures in each and every area of healthcare, as they are all impacted in different ways. Much of this work was done in the Brexit Contingency Committee and also refreshed during the pandemic. It is not prudent to say much more in public at this stage.

1910 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q151/2023

Prescribed medicines –
Update on review

Clerk: Question 151/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government update this House on its review of all medicines prescribed at the PCC and St Bernard's Hospital?

1915 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola):
Mr Speaker, the GHA has now completed its first full version of the formulary of medicines and dressings approved for use within GHA facilities and/or which can be prescribed under the GPMS scheme. The process of developing this has included substantial periods of consultation with clinical staff. This formulary has been placed on the GHA public website. The formulary is embedded in the electronic prescribing system used within the GHA.

1920 The GHA has advised that this process, however, remains ongoing, as new medicines are placed on the market and the science and understanding of the value of existing medicines changes. The Drugs and Therapeutics Committee, made up of senior clinicians and pharmacists, is tasked with delivering this work. All of the work to review medication is in line with NICE guidelines.

1925 Hon. E J Phillips: Just one question arising from that. Is the Minister satisfied with the level of consultation, given that the number of appeals that have been transferred to the committee in respect of prescriptions and the number of appeals allowed stands at 50%?

1930 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the number of appeals is negligible, so 50% of a negligible number is even less. I would not agree with the statements that the hon. Members made to the media in press releases over the past month. What the hon. Member needs to consider is that the only people making these decisions are clinicians. There is nobody with a calculator working out the cost of medication; this is entirely in the hands of clinicians.

1940 If the hon. Member has seen the statement that the GHA issued in respect of the lidocaine patches, they will see that the use of those patches today is very limited and it not used for what it used to be used for in the past, and so one of the ways of updating whether those patches work or not is a case-by-case analysis by the team, looking on an application from the GP as to whether that particular medication is suitable today for that patient.

1945 So the issue of what the hon. Member has inferred in his public statements, that there is a huge disconnect in understanding between GPs, the Chief Pharmacist and pharmacists I do not believe is accurate at all, because if a GP is concerned about a patient not being able to be prescribed the medication they believe is necessary, because it is not on the formulary, they go to the clinicians at the appeal tribunal and discuss it there, and if the case is made they will reverse it; if not, they will not.

1950 In the same way as the hon. Members say 50% have been reversed and 50% have not, that means that the system is working. I have no issue whether the percentage is 70, 80 or 90. Either way, the system is working because GPs are referring medication to the board for review and they are then making a clinical decision as to whether it should go one way or another. So I believe the system is working. This review is long overdue and is keeping us up to date with the UK formulary, which we use as a benchmark in deciding what we should or should not be having in our own 1955 formulary.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, the Hon. Minister refers to public statements that we have made that effectively arose in the context of information being provided to members of the public during a session at City Hall, within which Prof. Geoghegan, indeed also the Chief Pharmacist, 1960 handed out this data relating to the percentages of those appeals brought to the committee that were allowed in the context of appeals by clinicians.

I do not agree, Mr Speaker, that he believes there is not a disconnect. That was the feeling in the room with the packed City Hall that certainly set out their views on the disconnect. And indeed it is not only the people who were in that hall, but also a doctor himself who came to give his 1965 views to the GHA and expressed his concerns about the disconnect. So it is not me regurgitating this; this is effectively my report of my engagement at that particular session with my hon. Friend Mr Clinton, who was also there.

What I would say to him is I do not think it is negligible and I do not think it is just restricted to lidocaine. I understand his answer in relation to lidocaine, but there are many other medicines, of 1970 course, that people do require. And whilst he is absolutely right about the clinical efficacy of certain drugs – and that is for the Chief Pharmacist, not for anyone in this House to decide – there are some genuine concerns, certainly there were in that packed hall that I attended, about the prescription policy and how drugs on this list are prescribed. Therefore, I would encourage him again to give that reassurance to the public in relation to those medications and that people 1975 receive them as and when they need them.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the GHA has around 1,300 people working within it. The hon. Member seems to place a lot of emphasis on one doctor who was in the public hall, but not on the words of the Director General, who dealt precisely with this point and explained precisely that 1980 the issues were clinically based. I do not understand how he can jump from one person and a feeling of a disconnect to say there is a fundamental breakdown in policy, which is what his press release said. That is very different to what the hon. Member has just said now, but even that, in my view, is wrong because the decisions are based on what clinicians are deciding. Full stop. If a clinician believes the treatment should be A or B, it is their choice and their decision. It is not for 1985 us, obviously, and I am sure the hon. Member will accept that, to make a contrary decision or take a contrary view. In that hall, there were people who had not been rejected any medicines opining on whether they should or should not, and this is precisely the problem. We need to deal with the 1990 facts. The facts are if your GP believes that you should be getting a medication that is not on the formulary, he can appeal, go to the clinical board and they will review it, and if the clinicians agree they will give, no issue. So I just do not understand what the problem is.

1995 Hon. E J Phillips: Just one question, with your leave, Mr Speaker. I think it was evident from ... Obviously the Hon. Minister was not there – I am sure he had other things to do in his Ministry – but I was there and I did listen to the disconnect. It centres around patient communication with 2000 doctors and indeed the GHA. In my respectful view, it is bringing patients along with you, which is what the GHA needs to do when it changes policy that affects people who have been prescribed drugs over a period of time. The policy has changed. There has been a review of medications. There has been an identification of abuse through the system. We all acknowledge that in this House. Everyone acknowledges that there has been an abuse of the system, and that is being 2005 tackled. But when medicines are changed that affect the lives of people who are prescribed those medicines, you need to bring along those patients with you so that you can say to them there are alternatives and we will treat you. That is not what has been happening. That is the level of disconnect and that is the level of disharmony between patients and doctors.

2010 Just in relation to the point that he raises in relation to one doctor, this doctor was vociferous in his views as to the change in policy. Whilst I do understand that it is only one doctor, that was one doctor within the GHA putting Prof. Geoghegan right in respect of that, quite frankly. Therefore, Mr Speaker, and I would ask him again to clarify what communication measures, or at least what patient collaborative measures are in place to ensure that people understand how this policy works.

2015 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I do not think he put Prof. Geoghegan right. I think, from what I understand and what I have seen and watched, the reverse is the case because I understand that doctor made reference to if the patient insists then it is just left, if the patient insists they will give the patient the medication they want – and that is precisely what Prof. Geoghegan responded on, saying that is absolutely not the case and he should not be doing that. I do not quite understand how that interchange has been interpreted in the way that you have described.

2020 Patient communication ... The GHA today has public meetings. It has never happened before, with a fully-fledged hall, with Prof. Geoghegan addressing them regularly, with data online and with specifics given to the people. But let's be clear, if the clinician decides to change the medication of a patient, then that is the clinician's decision. If the GHA decides what the formulary should or should not be, that is their decision. There is no political involvement or interference in that process at all, and so it is the GHA doing what they are meant to be doing. They are the experts and they are telling us what they should and should not be doing, and they are doing it, and for as long as that continues to be the case, I will obviously continue to support them in the 2025 work that they do.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

2030 Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I just heard what the Minister said, and would I like to make two points. There have been GHA public meetings in the past. I used to attend them, in fact, when the Hon. Prof. Cortes was Minister for Health, so it is not a new thing. I hear that it was a procedure that has been started in the past.

2035 I would encourage the Minister to go back to Prof. Geoghegan and ask him what he asked the doctor concerned, because he asked the doctor to confirm to the general public that they were not under pressure from management not to prescribe certain medicines and the answer was actually yes, we are. That is why there was this exchange with the doctor. So I encourage the Minister, if he would, to go back to the Professor and clarify that point, because the issue was about management. In fact, I remember very well the Professor taking umbrage at the fact that ...

2040 'Oh, now it is a management issue.' So I think there may be even miscommunications within the communications between Prof. Geoghegan and the Minister. I would encourage him to ask him.

2045 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, no, the decision taken, as I said before, is not by management, it is by the clinicians within management, so to suggest, as the hon. Member has just done, that the administrative team are involved is just not true. The position is that the clinicians within management, the Chief Pharmacist in his role, have reviewed the formulary and that has led to changes, but it is them deciding, no one else. That is the point. So I do not understand what miscommunication the hon. Member is talking about. It is perfectly clear, always has been and continues to be.

2050 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

2055 Hon. K Azopardi: Can I just ask: in terms of the appeals mechanism, obviously there is some committee on which the Chief Pharmacist sits together with, presumably, some other clinician and they review the formulary, set the changes, and then doctors in the front line can appeal. Can patients also appeal directly?

2060 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I am not sure if they have. The board will look at any appeal that is made to it, but if a GP is not going to be supporting an appeal, I do not think it would have much prospect of success because the only basis of an appeal is if the clinician recommends it. And so for an individual to say, 'I like this medicine more than that one because I am addicted to this one or addicted to that one,' – or not, whatever the case may be – it has to be supported by the GP, obviously. Otherwise, I guess, just thinking logically, it would make it very difficult for the clinicians on the appeal board to change their earlier decision.

2065 Hon. K Azopardi: I understand that obviously it is more likely to be successful if a GP has endorsed the appeal, but is he saying that it is possible for patients to appeal directly to the committee, or is he saying that it is not possible? I am just trying to clarify the process because I am sure he will have seen, like I have seen, patients writing letters. I do not know if they are invoking rights of appeal or not, or whether they do have the right of appeal or not. I am asking a very precise question. Formalistically, is it possible for patients to appeal to the committee, or does it have to go through a GP?

2075 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I am not certain if they can formally, but I have no doubt that if an individual writes an appeal to the board, they would consider it. I do not think there is anything that prohibits them from doing that, but I am not certain, so I will have to come back to the hon. Member.

2080 I am aware of one letter that I have seen from a private person writing, complaining about it. That particular case has been referred three times and refused three times by the same clinical board. So, yes, I am sure it has been considered on a number of occasions already.

Hon. K Azopardi: And for me to understand the process again, does the appeal go to the same people who set the changes, or does it go to a separate body of people?

2085 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I understand that the team varies depending on the nature of the request, so there may be different specialities from which people will be brought in to consider different requests. Again, I am happy to get more of that detail as to exactly who and how and send that to him before the next sitting.

2090 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, obviously there is public concern expressed by some people and it would be important for this process to be known. Is there a process in writing that people could see? Is there such a thing, or is this a devised policy but there is no written process for appeals that could be made public so that people are more aware of the mechanics of the process?

2095 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, my understanding is that on the website there is guidance on the process to be followed for those who wish to ... and how it works. I think it is all explained on the GHA website.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q152-53/2023
Opioid medicines –
Repeat prescriptions; imports

2100 Clerk: Question 152/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state the number of persons currently on repeat opioid prescriptions?

2105 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I will answer this Question together with Question 153/2023.

2110 Clerk: Question 153/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state the number of opioid painkillers imported into Gibraltar for each year over the last five years?

2115 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, there are currently 281 patients on repeat opioid prescriptions. I will now hand over a schedule to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Answer to Question 153

Below is the data requested (2018 to 2022) of the number of opioid painkillers imported into Gibraltar, as reported to the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB).

Drug	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022 first quarter only
Diamorphine	15.2g	16.1g	20.8g	6.2g	8.2g
Morphine	38.8g	113.1g	53.2g	62.4g	Being Collated
Oxycodone	394.0g	561.8g	53.2g	62.4g	180.8g
Remifentanyl	0.0g	0.0g	3.6g	5.0g	Being Collated
Fentanyl	49.2g	102.4g	25.4g	81.1g	Being Collated
Pethidine	0.0g	0.0g	10.0g	0.0g	Being Collated
Methadone	0.0g	5.0g	5.0g	15.0g	5.0g
Buprenorphine	14.8g	7.6g	14.8g	10.5g	Being collated

The importation of schedule 2 drugs is reported in grams. This is because each of type of medication can be supported/administered in multiple formats.

2120 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I will digest the answer to this question, but just insofar as these particular drugs are concerned – forgive my pronunciation – oxycodone and fentanyl are obviously the two larger amounts, certainly over the last five years, and morphine, of course, understandably. In relation to the other two large ones, of course there has been very significant criticism, particularly in the United States, in relation to those particular drugs, which I think are described as ‘oxy’. Fentanyl, I think, is the other one. Insofar as the amounts are concerned, are these just for prescription within the confines of the hospital building – for example, in the wards and in surgery?

2130 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the question relates to ‘imported into Gibraltar’. I am not certain if this is global imports or this is just GHA imports. The question is ‘opioid painkillers imported into Gibraltar for each year over the last five years’. I would guess it was the GHA, but I cannot say it is definitely.

2135 Hon. E J Phillips: I will ask further questions in relation to this, but this is helpful data anyway. Insofar as the items that are being collated, is it possible that the Minister could write to me with the answer to those particular questions and possibly when he expects to receive them as well?

Hon. A J Isola: Yes, Mr Speaker, I am expecting them in the course of the next month, in the next five weeks, so I will happily write.

2140 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q154/2023
Diabetes –
Incidence rate

Clerk: Question 154/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

2145 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state the incidence rate of diabetes in the community sorted by type 1 and type 2, ordered by sex and age groups over the past 10 years?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I will now hand over a schedule to the hon. Member with the information requested.

*Please note that the electronic primary care system was introduced in 2015 and therefore a large portion of patients who had been diagnosed previously were coded for the first time in 2015/2016. For this reason, there appears to be a spike in numbers between 2015 and 2016.

2150 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we will digest those and come back with supplementaries if we need to.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q155/2023
Death by heart attack –
Incidence of death over last five years

Clerk: Question 155/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

2155

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state the incidence of death by heart attack over the last 10 years?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, the incidence of death by heart attack over the last 10 years is as follows: 2013, 13; 2014, 13; 2015, 19; 2016, 14; 2017, 25; 2018, 25; 2019, 24; 2020, 40; 2021, 30; and 2022, 26.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Minister perhaps – just identifying that very large number within the latter end of the statistics run that he was doing, of 40 – clarify why it appears to be a blip in the statistics, or was that just ...?

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, yes, there seems to be a spike in 2020 and then it drops down again in 2021 to closer to normal levels, as it is indeed in 2022. I do not have an explanation as to what that blip comes from. COVID and everything else, potentially. That is the logical one.

2170

Hon. E J Phillips: Just to speak to the point that he makes in relation to the normal years, there has been, I would probably hazard a guess to say, a steady increase of those dying as a result of cardiac arrest. Is he confident in the level of resource that we are putting into the GHA in terms of assisting cardiac patients with rehabilitation and certainly those who have conditions? Are we satisfied with the work that we are doing in relation to that?

2175

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I think part of the problem with lawyers jumping to conclusions, like we often do, is that within the totality of our population ... In other words, are the vast majority living much longer than they have done before? Are more people dying from heart attacks as a percentage of the size of the population? These are all the other factors that one could look at.

2180

But in terms of what we are doing, the hon. Member will know, because we have made the announcement to this effect, we are setting up our own cath lab within St Bernard's, which will enable us to deal with cardiac patients here, rather than send them away. As the hon. Member will know, the provision of response times is critical to these patients, and consequently, to be able to do it in Gibraltar rather than send them, as we currently do, to Quieron Palmones. Sending them further away, like Xanit, is just too far, because time is of the essence, so a massive step forward is to be able to do this in Gibraltar in our own hospital.

2185

The second step is more education and more information in terms of first aid response, and hooked with that are defibrillators. We are in the process of replacing every single defibrillator around Gibraltar with the support of a charity, which will mean we will have a significant number of defibrillators around our community available to the public, again because of the length of time and how acting quickly can actually save lives.

2190

So the GHA is doing a lot in terms of dealing with how we can support people with cardiac issues, and I think by the time the cath labs are open we will be in a very much better place than we ever have been before.

Q154/2023

Diabetes incidence rate –
Supplementary questions

2195 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I do not have a question on this. I wanted to go back to the incidence rate of diabetes, if that was fine, which was the previous question.

2200 Mr Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister wish to take that question. It is a supplementary. Yes?

Hon. K Azopardi: I am grateful, Mr Speaker. I think we had indicated that we wanted to look at the schedule, which was quite detailed, first, and – 2205 Mr Speaker: I accept that, but it was the Hon. Elliott Phillips who said that he might be in a position to ask a question, not you. That is why I asked.

Hon. K Azopardi: I thought he was speaking collectively for us, given the aside that I was having with him on it.

2210 Mr Speaker, looking at the type 2 diabetes figures, obviously all the years are different, but the rates of incidence, I would say, if you pick on any particular year, whether it is males or females, you are looking at 100-plus cases of males and 100-plus of females, maybe a couple of hundred in total. Of course, each year will be different, but over a spread of ... if that is a regular statistic ...
2215 The Minister has given us a 10-year view of things and, given life expectancy, that looks like there might be a figure of type 2 diabetes of a population of anything above 3,000 or 4,000 at any time, does the Hon. Minister have an in-house statistic, a verifiable one for the population, of people with type 2 diabetes? And would that be an accurate assessment?

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola):
2220 No, Mr Speaker, I do not have any information other than what has been asked of me, and I am not going to make any conclusion as to the numbers, as to whether they are high or higher. I think that there is, again, a far more detailed discussion to be had, which I would be happy to have with the hon. Member, but not jumping to interpretations as to what these numbers mean in a community of our size.

2225 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I was not inviting him to make a conclusion as to what it means. I was simply asking him whether he has a verifiable statistic internally on it. He has indicated he does not today. Would he be willing to write to me with that information, if indeed the GHA has a view as to the kind of type 2 population there is in Gibraltar? I am told with our own intelligence 2230 that it might be around that figure, but obviously that is not a verifiable official figure, and I would be interested to have an official figure if one is available.

Hon. A J Isola: Yes, Mr Speaker, I am happy to do that.

2235 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Elliott Phillips.

2240 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, just picking up on what the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition was talking about so far as the figures are concerned, clearly if we look at 2013, if my maths is not wrong that is about 33 people across the age range, and in 2022 it is 98. I think that is right, isn't it, in terms of the numbers? I am sure the abacus next to me is able to work that out insofar as numbers are concerned. In terms of type 2 males the numbers from 2013, for instance ... So if we look broadly at 10 years plus, we are looking at a significant leap in numbers per year.

2245 Whilst none of us in this House are medical experts, it is clear that it is a recognised fact that unhealthy diets, lack of exercise, not moving our community around as it should, is one of the key areas which leads to diabetes. I wondered whether, given the previous answer to the questions about heart attacks particularly, he is concerned about the public health message that we should be pushing out in order to assist members of our community in getting to move more, more exercise, and eating more healthily, because these are obviously concerning statistics that there is an upward trend significantly since 2013, from the figures that we have, in those being 2250 diagnosed with type 2 diabetes.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, of course our people should lead healthier lives, because that will lead to less reliance on our Health Service and enable them to enjoy a longer and fitter life.

2255 The hon. Member has done what lawyers should never do, which is he has not read the small print, because if he reads the paragraph at the very end of all of the statistics, it will tell him that 'the electronic primary care system was introduced in 2015 and therefore a large portion of patients who had been diagnosed previously were coded for the first time in 2015/2016. For this reason, there appears to be a spike in numbers between 2015 and 2016', where in fact there is not one. So if you look at 2013, you are actually not looking at a comparable number, hence the 2260 footnote at the end, which says you cannot look at 2013, you cannot look at 2014, you can begin to look at it in 2016, which is when we begin to have some reliable data. And if you compare 2016 and 2017 to 2022, you will see that in fact there is not the spike that he refers to.

2265 Hon. E J Phillips: Just one further question about the small print. I would have thought, Mr Speaker, if you look at the figures for 2015 there appears to be a catch-up of diagnosis. Therefore, arguably, if they were tested in 2014 or 2013, then it may well have seen the natural curve that I am talking about and that is what ... It would appear from what you see from these numbers ... I just do not understand why there is such a significant spike in 2015.

2270 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member tries to dig himself out of the hole he has put himself into.

My view is no, not at all. As the footnote says, 2015-16 is the first year, and so there is not the spike that he is trying to draw attention to. If you look at 2017, it is 26 and today it is 23. So it really is there, or thereabouts. It is quite static.

2275 Could it be better? Of course it could, and we will continue to work to make it as low as we possibly can.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q156/2023
Cancer –
Stage 4 diagnoses

2280 Clerk: Question 156/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state the reason why up to 48% of all cancers diagnosed are at an advanced stage 4 of the disease?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

2285 Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola):
Mr Speaker, the figure of 48% presented by Dr Ballesteros at the GHA public meeting made reference to those patients referred to the cancer unit and are those who require systemic cancer treatment, such as chemotherapy or immunotherapy. It is more likely for these patients to receive systemic treatment in advanced stage 4 than in early stages 1, 2 and 3. Therefore, this group of 2290 patients does not necessarily represent a delay in diagnosis. In the year 2022, 105 patients were referred to the cancer unit, which represents a slightly lower number than the previous year of 114. The percentage of advanced stage cases in 2021 was 37%. The hon. Member's question relating to 48% of all cancers therefore may have been a misunderstanding of Dr Ballesteros's presentation. Whilst 48% relates to those patients being referred to the cancer unit, the correct 2295 percentage relating to the hon. member's question regarding all cancers diagnosed is, in fact, 28%.

Suspected cancers are discussed by a GHA multi-disciplinary team, who then decide on an appropriate course of treatment. Not all patients are referred to the oncology department for treatment at the time of initial diagnosis, as they may be referred for other forms of treatment first, i.e. surgery or radiotherapy.

2300 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the clarification. Certainly, I understood the answer to his presentation, and I think the general public did as well, and I think that is how it was printed in the press, which caused me some concern because, of course, in the United Kingdom I think 45% of all cancers diagnosed fit within stage 3 and stage 4. That is why I was pressing the 2305 question, just to ascertain what those figures were.

As I understand the answer to this question, 28% of all cancer diagnoses in Gibraltar relate to advanced stage 4. Does the Minister, in his answer, have a breakdown backwards in terms of stage 3, stage 2 and stage 1 cancers? It would be helpful just to see how we are diagnosing how they fall within those particular groups.

2310 Hon. A J Isola: No, I do not have that number. I am happy to get it for him.

I understand exactly what he says when his impression was 48, but of course, as I have explained in the answer, if you understand the point of entry to all cancers and then some being referred on to this unit, by the time they get to this unit they are going to be the higher stages of 2315 cancer treated for that specific treatment by the oncology unit. So the 28% is the percentage of total cancers with grade 4.

I will certainly get the numbers that the hon. Member is seeking. I would say that in the United Kingdom the numbers are very much higher in terms of at what stage they are being discovered, and obviously the wait for care is very much longer. The hon. Member may have read a report in 2320 The Times newspaper on 10th February, last Friday, where it says the wait for cancer care in the UK at the moment is the longest on record. Thankfully, we do not have that problem and we treat our patients efficiently and effectively.

2325 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, that information I have also read and I accept that there are some very significant difficulties with the NHS in the United Kingdom, and thankfully we do not have some of the problems that he has referred to. Ours are very different, of course, and have been ventilated in this House and argued before by various Members at various points in time.

I just have one question. A common theme when I speak to constituents about cancer particularly is that there appears to be this view amongst certain members of our community that 2330 our cancer rates seem to be higher. What I am encouraging the Minister to do, and he might be able to give me an answer to this, is publish statistics around early detection of cancer, because I think it will allay any fears or misconceptions out there within our community, based on facts and data, to try to dissuade people from saying that we might have higher incidence of cancer particularly. So I would ask the Minister whether he would be able to publish material on a more 2335 regular basis on the Government website so that people can actually see the data. I know that the Hon. Chief Minister has previously, on our invitation, in respect of sick leave, for example, sought to publish those statistics, and it would be helpful if he might be able to do the same.

2340 Hon. A J Isola: Yes, Mr Speaker, I would be happy to look at that and engage with the GHA to see if we have that sort of data readily available, where it can be updated on a frequent basis. I have no issue with that.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q157-58/2023
New cancer unit –
Date when up and running; cost

2345 Clerk: Question 157/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state when it expects the new cancer unit to be up and running?

2350 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 158/2023.

2355 Clerk: Question 158/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government confirm the cost of the proposed new cancer unit, including new staff provision, on the fifth floor of St Bernard's Hospital?

2360 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the new location for the new cancer unit has been identified at St Bernard's Hospital and an outline plan has been developed for the unit and the associated aseptic dispensing facility, which is a feature of any cancer unit. The identified space will become available as soon as the current TSSU/CSSD moves to its new location in the hospital in April this year. In preparation for the development, the GHA is preparing detailed plans for the unit. Once plans are approved and the preliminary costings and findings are confirmed, the unit will take approximately 12 months to complete.

2370 The cost estimate for this building work is currently being finalised and will also be supported by donations from the public. Whilst talking about oncology and donations, I must specifically and publicly thank Margret Ayling, a firm supporter of our cancer services who has worked and continues to work with us to improve these new services. My sincere thanks to her.

Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful for the answer from the Minister. I must say – perhaps it was an impression – that my hon. Friend Mr Clinton and I left the public engagement with the view that this was a matter of months and not a year, but be that as it may, Mr Speaker, it is heartening to hear that we will have a new unit that deals specifically with this area.

Just one question arising from that, and that relates to the new staff provision. Does the Minister have a bit more information as to what level of provision will be required in terms of the human resource on the unit?

2380 Hon. A J Isola: No, Mr Speaker, I do not have that information with me. I think in dealing with cancer, obviously there are different areas being worked on all the time. Recently opened, again with the support of Margret Ayling, is one of the units for those patients seeking or requiring chemotherapy. It is an improved and much more comfortable location for our patients. This is just 2385 the next step in that delivery. If the hon. Member is asking how many new people will be required to work in the unit, I will find that information and get it sent to him.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q159-62/2023

Sandpits mental health facility –

Contract terms of care provider; payment re meals; budget holder; annual running costs

Clerk: Question 159/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

2390 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state the contract terms in respect of the entity engaged to make provision for care at the Sandpits mental health facility?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola):
Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 160 to 162.

2395 Clerk: Question 160/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government confirm who pays for the provision of meals at the Sandpits mental health facility?

2400 Clerk: Question 161/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state under whose budget the Sandpits mental health facility comes?

2405 Clerk: Question 162/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state the annual running cost of the Sandpits mental health facility?

2410 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, as has previously been discussed in this House, Sandpits House is owned by Meddoc Ltd and they provide the number of carers according to the individual assessed 2415 needs of patients.

In line with the basic principles of mental health rehabilitation service, users at Sandpits have full control of their moneys unless they are assessed not to have the capacity to manage their own finances, in which case arrangements are put in place for their representative to oversee their finances. Service users attend the Social Security Department to collect their disability allowance, 2420 accompanied by a social worker, carer or psychiatric nurse, and both identify and agree the budget for the provision of meals.

The GHA reimburses Meddoc for the care and associated services provided to the service users at the Sandpits facility. This is provided from the GHA budget.

2425 The staffing costs for Sandpits supported living facility is approximately between £240,000 and £300,000 per annum, depending on the needs and number of patients.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, how many patients are ordinarily resident in any given month, if the Minister has any information about that?

2430 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the unit has a bedsit and three bedrooms with shared bathroom, kitchen and living room, so I guess four.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, insofar as the £240,000 to £300,000, does that relate to the premises themselves and staffing?

2435 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, that is the cost of the provision of the services, so I assume it does.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

2440 Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

The hon. Member will remember he gave my hon. Friend Mr Phillips a schedule of mental health expenses – I cannot remember if was at the last session or the session before – which was an analysis of mental health costs that were not staff related, but I could not see these particular costs being itemised in there, and it is not immediately obvious to me, looking at the Gibraltar Health Authority budget estimates, where that £240,000 to £340,000 per annum would sit. It is not separately identified as this Sandpits facility. Does the Minister have an idea of where it would sit? Is it, in his view, perhaps ...? I am not going to ask him to speculate. Does he know where it would sit? Is it within salaries, or is it in some sort of contracted services? I cannot see anything in terms of contracted services where it would obviously fit. There is something called ‘other maintenance agreements’, but that would not really describe this. Does the Minister know where within the GHA budget, ideally which line item, it would come under? Obviously, if it is described as contracting for services, it might be that it is deemed to be some sort of personnel cost rather than the hiring of a facility, if the Minister understands me. If he could point me in the right direction, I would be grateful.

2455 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, it certainly would not be labour because they are not employees. It is Meddoc providing their contracted service to us, which varies depending on the number of patients we have in the facility at any given time. I will find out where it is documented and inform the hon. Member, so that he can have a look at it, rather than me guesstimating as to where those services are detailed.

2460 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Can I just ask, if this facility is providing a service for four people and it costs £240,000 to £300,000, it is £60,000 to £80,000 per person – couldn’t this service be provided more cheaply within the existing mental health structure, given the average per-bed cost in a mental health facility? I think the daily cost is ... I do not know, anything like £150 probably, but it just seems to be ... Has that issue been looked at?

2470 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I think we need to understand what it is that we are talking about, because this care is about providing those people with a halfway house between being at, for example, Ocean Views and being at home. It is about trying to get people back into the community, and that is a lot of what the work that goes into the Sandpits property is. In fact, I was 2475 with the staff at Ocean Views last week and they were lauding the work that is done at this particular property and another one and saying that it would be ideal if the mental health services in Gibraltar could have more like this because it works so well.

But of course it comes at a cost. Some of the carers are one to one, so if you imagine ... 24/7 one-to-one caring is expensive. But then we need to make the decision as to – what the hon. Members criticised us for in past times – is it cost or is it care. We are approaching this on the 2480 basis of providing the best possible care that we can afford to provide those patients, and the halfway house I think works very well. The GHA are very happy with it. Ocean Views, in particular the staff there and the professional and qualified staff there, are very happy with how it works and they want to do more of this, which is to reintegrate users back into the community, and this is a big part of that. Teaching people budgetary disciplines, how to make sure they know what to 2485 spend, how much they can spend and how to spend it is a really big and important part of all of the work that goes into mental health patients reintegrating back into our community. Stigma ... All of these issues are what the halfway house seeks to improve and to help the users with.

On that basis, I think it would be a retrograde step to go back into looking at increasing the size of Ocean Views and putting more people into those facilities. We want to see more and more of 2490 this outreach into the community. Having people living at home and helping them to live a normal life as far as is possible has to be the objective of any mental health plan.

Hon. K Azopardi: I accept that, of course. I accept that there is a need for these facilities to integrate mental health patients back into the community. I was really asking more precisely 2495 about whether, having looked at these figures – and it correlates to four people – the GHA had looked at the Meddoc costs and decided that these were costs that were being outlaid and the same thing could not be achievable at a more reduced cost. Really, that was what I was asking.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the GHA will always look at how they can provide the best service 2500 at the least cost, obviously. Whether we can do this service cheaper or not is something that I am sure has already been considered and was when they initially did this on a probationary basis. It has worked and they are happy with the results of it.

We look every year to see what on the budget that we have in the GHA can do better or attract 2505 better value for money, and not just in this but in every other service where we contract services that is the first question they ask themselves at this time of the year, every year.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q163-64/2023
Power outages –
Number and causes

Clerk: Question 163/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

2510 Hon. E J Phillips: Can the Government state why Gibraltar continues to be plagued by power cuts?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

2515 Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 164.

Clerk: Question 164/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

2520 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: How many power outages were there in 2022, and can Government list the reasons for each of those?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

2525 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I now hand over a schedule with the information requested.
Gibraltar has not been plagued by power cuts. A plague is a widespread affliction and we do not have that in respect of power cuts. Gibraltar suffers power outages, as do similar small territories that operate without the support of national grid power systems. These power grids have tens or hundreds of power stations generating power at any point in time and a problem with a particular generating unit is proportionally very insignificant and easily absorbed by the system without consumers noticing any glitches whatsoever.

2530 In Gibraltar's case, any single generating unit accounts for a big percentage of the total power demand and therefore any problems with a unit can affect a significant number of consumers. The GEA does operate with a margin of spinning reserve, but in order to cover for all eventualities it would mean running with a very large element of spinning reserve, which is very expensive and not good engineering practice. Although when events as described occur, inevitably some consumers are affected, these outages tend to be relatively short and are associated with the time it takes to start spare capacity, of which the GEA has plenty.

2535 Notwithstanding the above, what must be taken into account is that power stations are complex installations and the North Mole power station is no exception. Projects of this nature are not off the shelf, and it takes time to both integrate into existing distribution networks and fine tune, a process which the GEA is presently going through and is a process which occurs every 30 to 40 years at least for us here in Gibraltar. I think our new power station is Gibraltar's biggest capital investment project to date and is a key component of our critical national infrastructure. It ensures that we can maintain our energy independence.

2540 However, it is also true that not all power outages are as a result of problems at the power station. Many are as a result of faults or damage to our high- and low-voltage power distribution systems. Although the record of the location of underground cables is extremely accurate and this is provided to all applications for excavations, damage does occur and this can and has resulted in interruptions of less or greater severity, depending on the nature of the fault and the equipment affected.

2545 Our two most recent power outages have not been related to the power station at all. They have been related to interruptions to our fuel supply, and our supplier has publicly stated what the problems were. Their installation is also of a complex nature and they themselves are fine-tuning their processes and continue to work closely with the GEA to ensure the maximum levels of reliability, which also provides for a cleaner environment, as annual CO₂ emission figures have dropped from 147,309 tonnes in 2015 to 119,247 in 2021 and will continue to reduce as our processes become more efficient.

Answer to Q164/2023

YEAR 2022	Date and time	Duration	Feeders affected	Reasons for Power Cut
1	28.01.2022 11.11	36 mins.	Blackout within GMES/MoD network. Vineyards, Nelson's view.	Private contractor damaged cable by Fossway tunnel. The earth fault triggered a blackout at GMES network. Restored by 11.47 with assistance given to GMES by GEA and MoD contractors. GEA S20 tripped

GIBRALTAR PARLIAMENT, MONDAY, 13th FEBRUARY 2023

2	28.01.2022 16:00	7 mins.	Bedlam Court, Ocean Village Complex, Tradewinds, Casemates.	Operational switching at S61 WDC panel tripped causing power loss to Bedlam Ct, Casemates, Ocean Village, Tradewinds.
3	11.03.2022 00:48	2 - 11 mins.	Bayside, Varyl Begg West, Marina, Jetty Five, Watergardens, Ocean Village Complex, Waterport Terraces, William Jackson, New Harbours. King's Bastion, Cornwall's Lane, Governor's Parade. Alameda, Rosia Bay.	N MPS IFLS testing caused a trip of Set 1 causing feeders to open.
4	08.07.2022 07:04	48 mins.	GEA network suffered no loss of supply but local consumers suffered power outage due to supply from ex MoD network.	Cable from GMES power station to Norfolk House S/S tripped on load. Upon first restoration process, Norfolk House tripped all ex MoD network including local consumers.
5	20.07.2022 10:45	67 - 116 mins.	Western Arm. Approx. 80% Gib- wide power-outage.	Cable fault at S68 Western Arm to S36 North Mole caused WDC panel trip affecting supply to Gasnor Plant. Gas supply main valve shut down in safety protocol caused trip on NMPS engines.
6	02.08.2022 16:23	6 - 43 mins.	Marina, Watergardens, Ocean Village Complex, Bedlam Court, Waterport Terraces, William Jackson, Waterport Place. King's Bastion, Cornwall's Lane. JBDC Alameda, Rosia Bay, Sunnyside Steps, Little Bay, Europa Business Centre.	NMPS TX2 fault caused trips of engine-bay cooling-fans triggering safety-protocol shutdowns of 3 Gas Engines. Reference to PACIS lost at NM PS CR. S55, S63 and S65 restored manually.
7	12.08.2022 11:30	40 - 55 mins.	Alameda, Sandpits, Sunnyside Steps, Rosia Bay, Little Bay, Europa Business Centre.	Dual cable fault at S15 to S17 Willis's Road (spiked by contractor) and S19 to S67 Beach view Terraces.
8	28.10.2022 06:59	14 - 19 mins	Marina, Ocean Village, Waterport Terraces, Kings Bastion, Cornwall's Lane, Governor's Parade, Alameda, Rosia Bay.	Gasnor sensor fault caused gas shutdown resulting in sudden drop in gas-line pressure. Set 3 (Gas engine) initiated emergency shutdown due to fuel starvation. Set 6 (DF) QCO to diesel.
9	28.11.2022 16:10	5 - 27 mins	Marina, Water Gardens, Ocean Village, Bedlam Court, Waterport Terraces, William Jackson, Waterport Place, Kings Bastion, Cornwall's Lane, Gove4rnor's Parade, Alameda, Rosia Bay, Little Bay, Buena Vista.	Gasnor programming issue caused gas shutdown resulting in sudden drop in gas-line pressure. Set 1 and 3 (Gas engines) initiated emergency shutdown due to fuel starvation. Set 6 (DF) QCO to diesel.

2560 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I characterised this question as a plague because in September 2019 when the power station was commissioned, with none other than the Chief Minister himself flicking the switch, declaring power to No. 6 in a huge step forward – as described by the hon. Gentleman – in energy security and the security of supply in our community ... How does the Minister reconcile that very flamboyant announcement in 2019 with what we have experienced in recent years and the impact it has had on business? At the end of the day, Members opposite are responsible for encouraging inward investment and encouraging big business to come to our shores. How realistically can we show the world that we are a modern, efficient, secure environment when we cannot even manage our power supply? I would ask him to answer that question.

2570 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, with enormous ease I can answer that question because when you contract with firms of the quality of Bouygues and MAN Engines, who are probably the largest producer of this style and size of power station, and you compare that to what the hon. Members proposed in previous years, it is beyond comparison and a power station that every Gibraltarian should be proud of, because to categorise ...

2575 It seems as if the hon. Members are waiting for the power cut to happen so they can tweet some ridiculous, sarcastic, stupid comment along their social media networks with pride. I say that because there have been a number of instances of it, which I have seen and commented on in the past, which I think is just wishing to put ourselves down.

2580 If we have made a mistake in respect of the power station, tell us. But what is the mistake? Contracting MAN Engines? Who would they have contracted? Is it contracting Bouygues? Who would they have contracted? You cannot expect Government Ministers to be responsible for a fault in a gas line from a Gasnor/Shell supply into the power station which results in a 15-minute power cut, or any of the other power cuts that are caused, for example, by private contractors digging a hole in the road and causing a power cut, or criticising and knocking the very hardworking team we have at the GEA who, from the minute there is an issue, spend the next hour trying to work safely to restore power at the first available possibility. I think they need to be commended for the work that they do because you certainly cannot blame them.

2585 So if you cannot blame the workforce and you cannot blame the specialists who advise Government which is the best power station to buy or which is the best contractor to buy it, then what is it that you can complain about? (A Member: The Government.) Well, the Government, yes, of course. If you want to play politics with the power station, by all means do so, but have the honesty to say so. If you get up and say, like you have just said, that there is an issue with the power station because we have got something wrong, no problem, let's have that discussion. But the hon. Members opposite know that is not true, they know it is not the case, but it does not matter because it is politics. Fine. If that is the case, that should be the prefix to the question. Who would they have contracted to design that smelly – (Hon. Chief Minister: Grimy, smelly.) grimy, smelly, diesel, GSD power station? Who would they have contracted? And did they receive a guarantee from that contractor when they were negotiating with them that they would have no power cuts? Well, of course not, because nobody in the world would agree to that condition. It would be absolutely ridiculous, although it did not stop them from agreeing with them the 5% increase in electricity costs every year for the next 20 years. So they were more concerned about electricity increases than providing power.

2600 We have gone to the best in the business to ensure that our power station can meet our demands. We are going to have a glitch when somebody digs a road, yes; we are going to have a glitch when the LNG supply has a problem through one of the feeds where safety is paramount, yes; and for that I am absolutely delighted to say that I am the chairman of the company that does that and it does it incredibly well. And are we going to continue to have issues like this whilst the teething problems go? Probably, yes. I hope not, but if we do, I will be the first to defend them for the work that they do to put things right. (Banging on desks)

2610 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, just one more supplementary. We know when we have got the Government on the ropes, and we have got them on the ropes in relation to energy security and energy supply for our community.

2615 To much fanfare in 2019 we were guaranteed supply of energy, guaranteed security. What we are trying to do is encourage confidence in our jurisdiction so business floods to our community to spend their money in our community and hire more people. That is the whole point. But the question I put to the Hon. Minister is about energy security, about energy supply and the guarantees that the Chief Minister gave, himself, in September 2019. Ultimately what they cannot do is guarantee that supply, and that policy has failed.

2620 Mr Speaker: What is the question?

Hon. E J Phillips: That is right, isn't it?

Mr Speaker: Okay.

2630 The hon. Gentleman has said that we are unable to provide energy security. The Hon. Minister has already told him that we operate as an energy island. I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman has been reading or watching what is happening around Europe, especially after Russia's illegal invasion of Ukraine. The United Kingdom has been within hours of losing power completely to the whole of the national grid. I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman understands the severity of that. In other words, the United Kingdom was not likely to suffer a power cut, the United Kingdom has stood on the verge of not being able to produce energy for its people. The reason for that is that the United Kingdom has been importing gas and exporting gas to the European grid without the ability to take gas or electricity back as a guarantee. The United Kingdom has serious issues in respect of energy security. They have been all over the newspapers that I recommend the hon. Gentleman read. Spain has had a hugely difficult issue with its relationship with Algeria and its supply of gas, as a result of changing its position on the Western Sahara and the right of self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, to such an extent that it has had to renegotiate its contracts in respect of the supply of gas, which provides the lion's share of Spain's energy security. Germany has found itself, with the blowing up of the Nord Stream 2 pipeline, potentially without sufficient gas to power the industrial heart of Europe and heat its people's homes. France has been receiving the gas that has been coming from the United Kingdom under established agreements and, because it has nuclear power and has had to reset when it decommissions its nuclear power stations as a result, is having to reset how it provides its energy. Indeed, the United Kingdom and Germany have had to go back on promises in respect of mining coal to produce energy as a result of the issues that have arisen in the past 14 months. That affects the energy security of some of the largest economies in the world. In Gibraltar we have had no such issues.

2640 When you talk about energy security, you are not talking about the fact that part of our grid was settled by the MoD. We do not have any plans for it, but it is all now interconnected and a contractor can go through a cable when they do not know that there is likely to be a cable there. No contractor, unless they were being remarkably negligent, would permit their workers to dig in a place where they are going to go through a cable, unless they do not know it is there. That is not about energy security, but that leads to a power cut.

2650 The security of the gas facility – that is to say all of the systems in the gas facility to ensure that there is no blowback of gas, no escape of gas – are about securing energy security, but they can lead to short power cuts. The supply of the gas for Gibraltar, which we have contracted through Shell, one of the biggest companies in the world, comes to us from any of the points from which

Shell can obtain gas, so we have no issues with the supply of the fuel that we need to generate electricity, which we might have had. And now – the hon. Gentleman might want to reflect – we have two sources of energy to produce electricity, gas or diesel, because we made the choice to have some of those dual-fired engines.

2665 So have we secured Gibraltar's energy security, although we might have power cuts? He has linked the two, we have not. I think in this year in particular we have demonstrated that the choices we made were the right choices to secure Gibraltar's energy security. To test that, I put it to him that he should compare the choices we made with the choices they made or were about to make. They were about to go with just one fuel, diesel. The price of diesel, as hon. Members 2670 know, has rocketed in the past year and our cost of fuel has rocketed in respect of that part of our supply which is diesel, although luckily part of our supply is gas, where the price has been lower. Which was the right choice: to go to gas and diesel or to stay with diesel? I put it to him that if he were to look at this objectively and make a choice not based on what is in his party's interest, he would say of course it was right to diversify the fuel that you rely on to gas and diesel and not just 2675 diesel. So we made the right choice for energy security. Was it right for us to contract with one of the largest companies in the world that can secure gas from many sources? I put it to him that if he were to objectively analyse that, he would say that we were right to do so. Again, the right choice for energy security. Was it right that we should agree a price with Shell for gas? Of course it was right, because it protected us against some of the increases that we have seen. Was it right 2680 that we should put the power station and the gas regasification facility in an area by the sea, rather than in an area at the entrance to the Nature Reserve, in a green corridor, and pipe the fuel from the sea to there? I put it to him that objectively – he also holds the brief for the environment – he would say it was right and more secure to have a shorter line and to choose the area that we chose and not blight the Upper Rock Nature Reserve.

2685 In each of the choices that fell to be made we made the right choice, not because we are the cleverest in the room but because we listened to the advice and we did not just allow ourselves to be led by the politics. For that reason, I believe we have discharged our obligation to deliver energy security to Gibraltar, even though we might sometimes have power cuts because of the systems we have set up to protect the power station from a catastrophic failure and because of 2690 the fact that contractors may go through cables, something that we are hoping to prevent in the future.

But the hon. Gentleman must remember where we come from. We inherited a power station so old that it literally blew up on Easter Sunday 2013. We were left without power for days, and potentially for weeks. We recovered that position. Gibraltar now has a reliable, diversified source 2695 of power, and that is complying with our obligation to deliver energy security. The hon. Gentleman must listen to himself. Don't stop believing. It is a journey and we are taking Gibraltar there.
(Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, the Hon. Minister for Health and Energy answered the question by my hon. Friend here saying that we should not be politicising this and that the Opposition likes to tweet when something goes wrong, but from my research the tweets have been coming from the Government and the Chief Minister himself in 2014 saying that new plans 2705 must reflect lessons of such incidents so we never repeat. This is nine years ago. In 2016, another tweet guaranteeing our electricity supply, and then in the 2019 manifesto saying that now we have the security. The issue with Ukraine and Russia has only been in the last 10 months, but these issues ... and from this sheet we are having an average of 0.75 outages a month, which is almost one a week.

2710 So my question would be really it is about the people of Gibraltar, the businesses of Gibraltar, and how would the Government seek to regain their faith for our electricity supply when we have had so many failures and so many unequivocal promises over the last seven to 10 years that this will not be happening again, by Government themselves?

2715 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the Hon. Lady has not understood what I have said about energy security, and of course she has not, as she says from a sedentary position, because she has once again mixed the power cut with the security. It is very simple.

The hon. Lady is suggesting that because we have a power cut because somebody goes through a cable, or because we have a power cut because there is a problem in the regasification facility, 2720 which is a problem that the system is designed to identify to prevent a catastrophic fault, we are not providing energy security. Yes, we are providing energy security, because now that we have got to the Ukrainian problem we do not have a problem with supply of fuel. That is a question of energy security. That is what energy security is about. Will we have power cuts? We will have power cuts. Will they be less often? Of course, once we have broken in the power facility it will be 2725 less often because by then these sensors will have been got exactly right, so you should have none of the issues that arise between the supplier of the fuel and the power station. As the engines become run in, as you say in respect of an engine, you will have fewer issues in respect of that.

The hon. Lady has heard me say before in this House one of the things that we are looking at is a grid that will run in two directions, the upgrading of the grid. We have talked about why you 2730 cannot upgrade the grid in one year or in one term, because that means digging up every road in Gibraltar. You have not got enough guys to dig and you would have no flow of traffic. It is something that has to be staged, so that the process that we inherited, which was a grid that had not been touched in 16 years – and I know they do not like to go back, but they have to understand that we have to go back to analyse the problem – is one that cannot be repaired in one year and 2735 it cannot be repaired in 10 years. It is a process that has to be undertaken. When we have that better grid, we will have fewer issues even with contractors going through cables because the new grid will be properly mapped.

Those are the things that are giving rise to power cuts, not energy security. Gibraltar is now one of the most secure jurisdictions in the world in respect of the supply of the fuel necessary for 2740 the generation of electricity as a result of the choices that we made; indeed, as a result of the choices that the people of Gibraltar made, because in 2015 this was one of the key electoral issues. Their power station or our power station. Go back to the one that was going to be at the entrance to the Nature Reserve or stick with ours and the gas station that we were going to develop, dual fuel, down by North Mole. The contracts had not been signed. The people knew that they were 2745 voting for one or the other. I am not going to claim the credit for this. The people of Gibraltar chose, in 2015, to go with this power station and they were right because in 2015, as we all remember, the dalliances on the other side of this House were with a company called SPARC, a Russian company. So much for energy security, Mr Speaker.

2750 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Turning to Gasnor, can the Minister confirm that Shell disposed of Gasnor? Did Shell discuss 2755 the disposal with the Government at the time, in terms of the continuation of provision of service by Gasnor, and what were the discussions at the time? It is a simple question.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the Government is not answerable in this House for the decisions of Shell. I can tell the hon. Gentleman that we were notified of the change of shareholder 2760 in Gasnor.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q165/2023

Mask wearing at the Hospital –
Reason for reintroduction and where purchased

Clerk: Question 165/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Why has the GHA reintroduced masks on entering the hospital facilities, and where have these masks been purchased?
2765

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, mask wearing was reintroduced for all areas at the GHA due to the increases in multiple respiratory infections, including COVID-19, seasonal influenza and RSV. This adds an extra preventative and precautionary layer of protection during the surge of infections.

As per my answer to Question 583/2022 to my hon. Friend Mr Phillips, the GHA have advised that the masks being used are from the existing stock purchased in July 2020 pertaining to the consignments which were not compliant with FFP3 standards for clinical use.
2770

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, a couple of follow-ups. I noticed that the masks had been introduced myself when I went into the Hospital, but I would like to ask the Minister why they have been moved, because I have since been to the Hospital and they are no longer at the entrance, so has this policy changed? Or they were not last time I went, which was about a week or 10 days ago.
2775

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I have been to the Hospital today, this morning, and as you walk in, on the right hand side there is a big box full of masks for public use, so they continue to be there.
2780

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, can I ask the Hon. Minister if there is more equipment from the faulty COVID consignment that is waiting to be used?

Hon. A J Isola: Not that I am aware, Mr Speaker. What we are doing is using the masks that cannot be used clinically for use by the public. I am not aware of any other equipment that is not being used.
2785

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q166-67/2023

GHA Director General role –
Proposed interim arrangements; selection process

Clerk: Question 166/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.
2790

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Given the recent announcement that Prof. Geoghegan will be stepping back from his role as Director General, can Government confirm how the management team will be organising itself in the interim to provide leadership to the GHA?
2795

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 167/2023.

Clerk: Question 167/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

2800

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Given that Prof. Geoghegan has indicated that he will be involved in selection process of his successor, can Government confirm what the selection process will entail and who else will be involved in the process?

2805

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

2810

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the Director General works closely with his senior executive team, whereby each executive director has a portfolio of responsibilities. These responsibilities will not change and the Director General will continue to communicate with his team to continue to monitor, advise and support them at all times. Sandie Gracia, Director of Nursing Services, who is a very experienced member of the executive team, will take on the day-to-day co-ordinating role.

2815

The GHA has contracted a UK recruitment specialist, GatenbySanderson, who are experienced in public healthcare recruitment, to ensure that they have access to an appropriate pool of highly qualified candidates. The Chair of the GHA Board and the Director General will drive the selection process. The composition of the panel has yet to be decided. The vacancy will be advertised this month both locally and overseas and the GHA expects to conclude the recruitment process by mid-April 2023.

2820

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for his answer. Is he saying that the recruitment process will finish, or that we will have an announcement by mid-May?

2825

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I said the GHA expects to conclude the recruitment process by mid-April 2023.

2830

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: So does this mean that we will have an announcement by that time, or will they finish their process but we will not ...? Is everything going to be completed and by mid-April we should be having a new Director General?

Hon. A J Isola: That is the intention and that is what we would like to see happen.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, if I can just ask one final supplementary. The question that gets asked a lot by people who speak to me is the concern of bias in this process. Can the Minister give us any assurances that the composition of the board or the general process will be very well guarded from any potential bias?

2840

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I am not sure what the hon. Lady is referring to. I do not know how there can be bias in respect of a process that has not even started.

2845

As I have already said in my answer, the Chair of the GHA Board, Prof. Ian Cumming, will be in charge of the process, the Director General will be supporting and assisting him, and the rest of the selection panel has yet to be picked. If the hon. Lady is asking whether I will be on it, the answer is no, I will not be. It will be a board that will have one objective and that is to find the best possible person to drive the GHA forward after April 2023.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you, Mr Speaker, just one last question. Does the Minister mean that Prof. Geoghegan will stay in post until mid-April? There will not be a gap where he is not actually working for the system and we still do not have a new director general? Just to check.

2850 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, so long as his health permits, Prof. Geoghegan will be working closely with us to April 2023 and, if possible, thereafter in potentially a different role. He is developing a strategy which I have been promising hon. Members for some time and which he will deliver, and I would very much hope that, if his process with dealing with the cancer that he has enables him to, I will be keeping very close contact with him and he will continue to work with all of his colleagues at the GHA.

2855 We have not yet agreed with him a termination date in respect of his employment, and the longer we can keep that going, frankly, the better for the GHA and for all of us. So I am working closely with him in the hope that we will continue to work together to deliver the changes and the programme that he has set out for us.

2860 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you for that answer.

Just because the hon. Member spoke about a possible different role for the current Director General, maybe I have missed it, but can he give us any more details, if he has not already, on what potential role the current Director General would have in the future, health permitting, of course?

2865 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the Director General has built up a huge amount of knowledge and expertise in respect of how we run the Hospital. He is very acquainted with what we do well and what we do not so well, and he has developed and devised a plan in respect of most of these areas as to how we can improve that. So if we are able to retain him in whatever capacity ... I am not saying there is even an agreement to this extent. It is something that I have talked to him about, but I have not agreed anything with him, so I feel it is a bit premature having this discussion across the floor of this House, but for as long as we can have access to his incredible knowledge in respect of St Bernard's and the care services we provide, I would like to keep that.

2870 I am not able to say anything more at this stage. I wish him very well in his treatment and I hope that we will continue to be able to work with him for some time yet.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

2880 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, can I join the Hon. Minister in wishing Patrick Geoghegan well? I know that he is going to go through a difficult process, like all those who go through prostate cancer diagnosis and treatment, and I know the whole House will want to wish him well, and indeed all of Gibraltar.

Mr Speaker, I propose that the House should now adjourn until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

2885 Mr Speaker: I now propose a question, which is that this House do now adjourn to Tuesday, 14th February at 3 p.m.

I now put the question, which is that this House do now adjourn to Tuesday, 14th February at 3 p.m. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Passed.

This House will now adjourn to Tuesday, 14th February at 3 p.m.

The House adjourned at 7.27 p.m.

[CLERK TO THE PARLIAMENT: S Galliano Esq in attendance]

Supplementary questions – Reminder of ruling by Speaker Canepa

Mr Speaker: Before we start with the question and answer session and the questions directed at the Hon. the Chief Minister, I think I would like to read out the extract from a ruling made by Speaker Canepa in September 2016, which I referred to in last month's session. It was mainly to do with preambles, but there is some more information connected with that and I would like to read it out so everybody can take it on board:

... should the questioner make a statement, instead of asking a supplementary question, or make what I consider to be too long a preamble before asking the supplementary question, then, having allowed the Minister to reply, I will move on to the next question on the order paper. As I have previously said, I expect supplementary questions to be, in the main, short, sharp and to the point. Needless to say, however, I will always exercise discretion.

After yesterday's marathon, particularly in the supplementary question parameters, I think we need to focus on keeping the supplementary questions at a reasonable level.

Thank you.

10

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can I just rise? Of course, I hear what Mr Speaker says on that, and of course we respect your ruling.

On the short, sharp, to the point issue, it would be helpful sometimes if ... The answers sometimes are extremely long and perhaps not short, sharp and to the point. This is not because I am encouraging them not to give us information, but a lot of the answer is sometimes not information, it is a lot of ... (A Member: Gas.) yes, gas around the edges.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Government is here to give information. Sometimes that information is about gas, as it was yesterday in relation to the LNG facility. But your ruling, rightly, and the rules relate to questions, they do not actually relate to answers. The Government will always seek to provide the information requested, if it is possible to provide it, in the most succinct and politically necessary manner that the Government considers appropriate, and always subject to your ruling, of course.

20

If we answer shortly, hon. Members opposite complain that we do not provide information. If we answer at length, hon. Members opposite complain that we have answered at length. So we shall continue to do our best not to entertain hon. Members' preferences, but to inform the public of the information we believe should be put in the public domain in this Parliament in providing accountability in answer to such questions as hon. Members may put.

25

Hon. K Azopardi: Speak, if I may – 30

Mr Speaker: I think we are now developing into a debate. I will give you just one opportunity to make a short statement quickly.

35 Hon. K Azopardi: If I may, the only point that I wanted to make to Mr Speaker is that I am not discouraging anyone from answering in the way that they want. All I am saying, Mr Speaker, is that you have made a ruling, but of course have said at the same time that it would impact on the number of supplementaries because there were marathon sessions yesterday. But a lot of the length of the session has nothing to do with the questions; the answers make it very long. We 40 cannot be penalised as the Opposition from asking questions because the answers just make us go into a longer session. We do not have a problem sitting here as long as necessary, and I just wanted to make that point, Mr Speaker, respecting, of course, your authority on the issue. I am not seeking to overturn anything. All I am saying is that looking at it overall, it would be seen that it is not the questions that are prolonging the session, it is the answers – and I do not have an 45 issue with that, by the way.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if I might respond to that. The answers sometimes are shorter than the questions, and I think that if the hon. Member wants to sit there and pretend otherwise and say from a sedentary position that it is not true, I invite him simply to bring out a ruler and 50 measure the lines of Hansard, which show that in some instances the questions are much longer than the answers, whether he likes it or not.

Mr Speaker: We are now going to proceed to the question and answer session. (Interjection) We are now going to restart the question and answer session, and we start with the questions to 55 the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Questions for Oral Answer

CHIEF MINISTER

Q198/2023

Financial statements 2016-17 and 2017-18 –
Principal Auditor's changes

Clerk: Question 198/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Can the Government advise, further to Q387/2022, if the Principal Auditor has now completed his work for the financial years 2016-17 and 2017-18 as stated by the end of 60 December 2022, and what was the nature and quantum of the changes he requested for each of those financial years?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

65 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Principal Auditor has advised me that the changes to the 2016-17 and 2017-18 public accounts of Gibraltar are almost complete. The amendments to the financial statements at this stage relate to inaccuracies in the information presented.

70 Hon. R M Clinton: I am grateful to the Chief Minister for his answer.

Can the Chief Minister elaborate as to the nature of the inaccuracies? And I do not believe I have heard anything about the quantum of these inaccuracies.

75 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am told there are a very small number of amendments for the financial statements ended 31st March 2018. He is finalising his report on two sets of the accounts and awaiting responses from a number of heads of department, within a set deadline, to include their explanations and comments on the most significant audit matters.

I do not think I have anything else which is anywhere near being able to give him an answer in respect of amounts. I have not been provided with that information by the Principal Auditor.

80

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, from what the Chief Minister has said, I get the impression that there is still work ongoing. Would I be correct in that assumption? Would I also be correct that the Principal Auditor, in fact, has not finished his work as he had suggested he would have been able to do by December 2022?

85

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman is asking me to surmise based on his interpretation of the answers that I have given. This is not my work, this is somebody else's work. I surmise a little like him, but I do not want to comment because it is not for me to comment. I am presenting the information that has been provided to me in answer to a question the hon. Gentleman has put. I could simply have said no because the Principal Auditor's work is completed when he sends me the accounts for me to table, but I have tried to provide some background – because I have not yet got the accounts – as to why I have not yet got them.

90

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, my last supplementary on this: has the Principal Auditor given any indication of when he might be in a position to deliver the accounts to you?

95

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q199/2023

Business Improvement District – Amount spent

100 Clerk: Question 199/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Can the Government advise how much money it has spent in supporting the Business Improvement District (BID) project from initial conception to the date of the moratorium?

105

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, legal fees of £37,507.28 have been paid from the initial conception. The BID was paid the annual Government contribution of £250,000 for 2022. We are not yet aware of the exact amount spent as at the date of the moratorium. We have been informed by the directors of the BID, however, that any remaining funding will be refunded to HMGoG once the accounts have been prepared.

110

We expect to meet with the directors of the BID in coming weeks. I would be very happy to provide a fuller breakdown of the part of the £250,000 that may have been spent when we have the information from the BID.

115

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Chief Minister for his answer. In terms of the £37,000 legal fees, does that include the cost of ... I believe it was somewhere in the region of £14,000 for the actual ballot?

120 Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q200/2023
Eastern Beach –
Location of CCTV cameras

Clerk: Question 200/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

125 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, what CCTV cameras, and where, are in place in the Eastern Beach area to assist in the prevention of criminal activity in that area, even if they have not been installed for that specific purpose?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

130

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, there is no CCTV in place in the Eastern Beach area. There is one livestream camera installed on the northern lifeguard post at Eastern Beach, which is operated as part of the beaches.gi website. This is not CCTV as such, since the video signal is broadcast live on a public website, as opposed to a closed – that is to say non-public – surveillance circuit. CCTV, of course, means closed circuit television.

135

Operationally, the Royal Gibraltar Police makes use of cameras maintained by third parties, and I am advised by the RGP that disclosure of their location is not in the public interest.

140 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, does the Government accept that there are no GDPR issues in CCTV cameras to be put in place in Eastern Beach for the specific purposes of law enforcement?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, there are other questions on the Order Paper that relate to that issue. GDPR would not apply to CCTV for law enforcement.

Q201/2023
Eastern Beach –
Whether CCTV cameras continuously functioning

Clerk: Question 201/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

145

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, can the Government confirm that any CCTV cameras in place in the Eastern Beach area which would assist law enforcement agencies to assist in the prevention of criminal activity in that area have been continuously functioning?

I think he has answered that.

150

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, as set out in answer to the previous question, there is no CCTV in the area of Eastern Beach.

155

Hon. D A Feetham: Given that he answered, in relation to his previous supplementary, that nothing prevents the setting up of CCTV cameras for law enforcement purposes, is there any reason why CCTV cameras have not been set up in the Eastern Beach area for law enforcement purposes?

160

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I gave him an answer that suggests that there is coverage of that area by other cameras, but I would refer him to his next question because the supplementary is asking, in effect, what his next written question is asking.

Q202/2023

Eastern Beach –

Whether number of CCTV cameras sufficient

Clerk: Question 202/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

165

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, is the Government satisfied that there are sufficient CCTV cameras in place in the Eastern Beach area to prevent criminal activity in that area?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

170

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, yes, sir. No law enforcement agency has requested that the Government should fund any CCTV for the area of Eastern Beach.

Hon. D A Feetham: Does the Government believe, given the recent incident at Eastern Beach involving the Spanish customs vessel and the throwing of stones at that vessel, that there would be benefit in having CCTV cameras in that area in order to prevent criminal activity in that area?

175

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I refer the hon. Gentleman to an answer I gave a few moments ago about the fact that the law enforcement agencies, who are the ones responsible for law enforcement, have not suggested that we should be having CCTV in that area. In fact, I believe that there is another question on the Order Paper that deals with ... or may have dealt with already ... that there is coverage maintained by other parties. In fact, it is the first question, I think, I answered from him, Question 200, where I will repeat to him that operationally the Royal Gibraltar Police makes use of cameras maintained by third parties, and I am advised by the RGP that disclosure of their location is not in the public interest but it is in relation to Eastern Beach. So there is a lot of video of the incident in question, Mr Speaker. He might like to reflect on what I have said already.

180

Hon. D A Feetham: And is the Government satisfied that if the allegations that have been made on social media and elsewhere that there is smuggling activity on a continuous basis via Eastern Beach, that activity would be caught by those cameras, which he says he cannot disclose, in or about the Eastern Beach area?

190

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, although that deals with questions that are to come on the Order Paper, I can tell the hon. Gentleman, as I have just told him, that the RGP relies on such cameras when they bring prosecutions in respect of such activity, if and when it happens. So I believe that if what he is doing is seeking simply to pursue a strand of questioning based on what has appeared on social media, he needs to listen to the answers that I give him, so that the hon. Gentleman can, having heard what I have said, clear up to those that may be putting it to him that in fact there is a lot of coverage – video coverage, if we can call it that – of the area, and that the Royal Gibraltar Police and HM Customs do not believe that additional CCTV in the area would be necessary in order to curtail any illicit activity or indeed to be used for evidential purposes in respect of the prosecution of such illicit activity.

Hon. D A Feetham: With your indulgence, if I may ask a final question in relation to this, has he personally had discussions with the RGP and HM Customs about the quality and indeed whether the CCTV coverage in place is adequate in relation to all those areas that he has just outlined in his last answer to my question?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have had a number of discussions with a number of different agencies. I am not going to disclose which they are, because by doing so I might disclose where those cameras are placed and the nature of those cameras. But I will tell him this. The cameras are such that I would be able to tell the brand of the button that his shirt enjoys, given where they are placed and given the power of magnification that they enjoy.

Mr Speaker: Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: In the example he has just given, would they be able to tell the brand of the button on the shirt of the person during the day, but also during the night? Are they as effective during the night?

220

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, sir.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q203/2023

British Gibraltar Territorial Waters – Early warning systems to detect incursions

Clerk: Question 203/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

225

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, what early warning systems are there in place to detect incursions into British Gibraltar Territorial Waters?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

230

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, as the hon. Member is aware, tracking and responding to incursions falls under the remit and responsibility of the Ministry of Defence, as per the 2006 Constitution which the Hon. Leader of the Opposition reminds us he is the architect of, although I know the hon. Member asking the question was also a member of the team negotiating that Constitution, alongside the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister and the Father of the House.

235

The Royal Gibraltar Police obtains information from the Gibraltar Defence Police, who monitor and co-ordinate the response to incursions into BGTW with the Royal Navy. Additionally, the Gibraltar Port Authority has three radars and four PTZ camera stations deployed around Gibraltar, together with AIS receivers and other sensors. These systems are optimised for tracking and monitoring commercial shipping movements and operations, and their siting is tailored for this purpose.

240

245 Hon. D A Feetham: Is the Government satisfied that those systems that are in place are adequate for the purposes of detecting incursions into British Gibraltar Territorial Waters? And in particular, if I may, so that I can cut my supplementaries in relation to this, are there any examples, that he is aware of, of incursions not having been detected by those systems, or are all of them detected?

250 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, there is a question on the Order Paper where the hon. Gentleman asks me for the detail of incursions for a period of time. I will be able to give him chapter and verse on every incursion in Gibraltar. We are satisfied that we can spot them all, we are satisfied we see them coming and we are satisfied that we do not need anything else in order to be able to do that. But stopping them, when you are dealing with something happening at sea, in particular on a night which is stormy, where it is advisable not to be at sea, is something 255 completely different, although if we are able to develop Spider Man's web, we might be able to stop them just where BGTW starts. Until then, it is more complicated.

Hon. D A Feetham: One question. I could have asked it in some of the others as well, but I think it is probably convenient to ask it here. When the systems detect an incursion into British Gibraltar Territorial Waters, can he give us a flavour of ...? Is there an attempt on the Gibraltar side immediately to make contact? Is that possible at all? I am not technically ... Obviously it is not part of my expertise. Would it be possible for the Gibraltar authorities, in those kinds of situations, to make contact at an early juncture in relation to those vessels that are incurring into British Gibraltar Territorial Waters? And does that happen habitually?
265

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, this is a matter that has been debated in this House before and is public. When there is an incursion detected into British Gibraltar Territorial Waters, the Royal Navy engage the vessel, if it is a vessel of another state. They read a warning based on the behaviour of that vessel, warning A. Depending on the subsequent behaviour of that vessel, they may read warning B, and the warnings may increase depending on the activity of that vessel in BGTW.
270

Gibraltar law enforcement agencies will not read sovereignty warnings in respect of state vessels of other nations because we are not empowered to do so, but Gibraltar law enforcement agencies will communicate with their law enforcement colleagues, if it is one of those law enforcement colleagues' vessels that are in BGTW, to try to ascertain why they are here and to try to ascertain why they have not been in touch before. All of this is publicly available information; we have debated it already in this House.
275

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q204/2023

Pursuit of suspects in waters around Gibraltar – Co-operation between Spanish and British Gibraltar law enforcement

280 Clerk: Question 204/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, what systems are in place to assist co-operation between Spanish and British Gibraltar law enforcement officers when engaged in the pursuit of suspects in the waters around Gibraltar, including British Gibraltar Territorial Waters, international waters and Spanish waters?
285

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

290 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, as the hon. Gentleman is already aware, there are routine communications between Spanish authorities and the Royal Gibraltar Police in the policing of illegal activity. In fact, I am advised that the RGP has an excellent working relationship with its Spanish counterparts, which is demonstrated on a daily basis in their fight to combat drug smuggling across the Straits. We continue to seek further enhanced co-operation.

Q205/2023

Co-operation between law enforcement agencies –
Conventions and international standards

Clerk: Question 205/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

295 Hon. D A Feetham: What conventions or international standards underpinning co-operation between law enforcement agencies do British Gibraltar law enforcement agencies adhere to when pursuing suspects between territorial waters of different countries and between international waters and those territorial waters, or assisting the law enforcement agencies of other countries in the same situation?

300

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Royal Gibraltar Police marine assets continue to abide by standing instructions not to leave British Gibraltar Territorial Waters unless specifically authorised to – for example, in the event of the need to save lives as required under the Safety of Lives At Sea Convention (SOLAS). This is a provision in line with the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea.

305 The Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation, known as the Hague Convention on Hot Pursuit, has not been extended to Gibraltar.

Hon. D A Feetham: Just arising out of that answer, assume that Gibraltar law enforcement agencies are pursuing a suspect in British Gibraltar Territorial Waters – as soon as that suspect goes into international waters, what would happen in that kind of situation?

315

Hon. Chief Minister: The chase can continue.

Hon. D A Feetham: Did he say the chase would continue?

Hon. Chief Minister: I said the chase can continue.

Hon. D A Feetham: I thought he said in answer to the previous question that Gibraltar law enforcement agencies have standing instructions not to leave British Gibraltar Territorial Waters. So the exception is there for hot pursuit, essentially. Sorry. Can he perhaps clarify the confusion on this side?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, hot pursuit only applies when you are going into the territorial sea of another state, not into an international sea.

330 Hon. D A Feetham: So is he saying that there are standing instructions not to pursue into Spanish territorial waters, for example, but they can pursue if the suspects go into international waters?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, different rules would apply to each of those circumstances.

335 Hon. D A Feetham: That may be so. I am just interested to test the information in accordance with the answer he has given me, because I am not clear in my own mind.

In answer to the previous question he said there are standing instructions for the RGP or law enforcement agencies not to pursue into ... I thought it was international waters. It appears that it is into Spanish waters. That must be correct, given that he answered in relation to one of my 340 supplementaries that if the suspect goes into international waters, the law enforcement agencies can pursue into international waters. Is that correct? Is my understanding now correct?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I am afraid he is mixing apples with pears, but I am not here to give him legal advice on public international law, all of which is public and the case law of 345 which he can research. Although it would make for a very interesting debate, this is Question Time.

There are standing instructions that our Royal Gibraltar Police vessels and our Customs vessels should not leave BGTW because their role is to patrol BGTW. There are some instances when they may do so, in keeping with their instructions and in keeping with international law: first of all, for 350 example, if they are liaising with their Spanish colleagues and they agree that they should go into Spanish waters; second, if they believe it is necessary for them to go into international waters, whether or not they have cleared that with Spanish colleagues who have no role there, although they may be co-operating; and thirdly, if there are issues relating to safety of life at sea or there are other good reasons why they should go out, but they should clear that with their command.
355 But all of those things are matters of public international law for which I am not answerable in this House. The hon. Gentleman can look up one of the fantastic texts on this subject and soon learn more than I know about the whole subject.

Hon. D A Feetham: With respect, it is not entirely about international law. I was asking about the standing instructions. He mentioned standing instructions to the RGP, and the standing 360 instruction to the RGP was that they should not leave British Gibraltar Territorial Waters. What he is now saying, as I understand it – please correct me if I am wrong; that is my question – is that there are standing instructions not to leave British Gibraltar Territorial Waters, certainly not to go into Spanish Gibraltar territorial waters but not to leave British Gibraltar Territorial Waters except 365 in a situation where there is a hot pursuit into international waters or where there may be some rescue situation involved in international waters. They can go into Spanish Gibraltar territorial waters if they receive permission from Spanish counterparts and they are perhaps liaising in some form of co-ordinated approach with law enforcement agencies into Spanish Gibraltar territorial waters. Have I got it right?

370 That is not entirely about public international law. It is also about the instructions that they receive from Gibraltar because those instructions may well constrain the position from what the pure international law position may be.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do not think it is helpful for the length of the proceedings 375 for the hon. Gentleman to seek to summarise what I have said and ask me to confirm that that is the position I have set out. Hansard will show the position I have set out and it remains as set out.

Additionally, I will put it to him again that this is actually just the application of public international law with the interplay of the powers of this House as a legislature known in international law as a colonial legislature and the reach of our jurisdiction and when we can go 380 beyond it and the circumstances which allow our Gibraltar Police to exercise what would otherwise be known as extraterritorial jurisdiction, which is permitted in some instances but not in most. That also is a matter of public international law which the hon. Gentleman can research.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q206/2023
BGTW –
Incursions by Spanish law enforcement agencies

385 Clerk: Question 206/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, how many incursions have there been in the last five years into BGTW by Spanish law enforcement agencies which have involved (1) innocent passage, and (2) pursuit of suspects involved in criminal activity?

390

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

395 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I now hand over a schedule with the information requested. However, it is questionable whether passage can ever be innocent in the context of a sovereignty claim over the waters which is prejudicial to the peace, good order or security of the coastal state.

Answer to Q205/2023

Innocent Passage Record
Year
Month	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023
January	77	80	70	98	42	62
February	97	65	101	129	54
March	88	105	76	81	70
April	119	117	100	122	116
May	130	152	98	147	136
June	170	101	119	153	129
July	150	115	126	127	121
August	142	87	88	140	97
September	136	102	90	146	189
October	124	117	114	95	250
November	87	72	84	69	93
December	75	42	90	52	28

Mr Speaker: I do not mind waiting a few moments for you to digest the information.

400 Hon. K Azopardi: Sorry, Mr Speaker, I am not sure that that is the answer to the question. That is only the answer to half the question, surely.

405 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, this is the schedule I have been given, because I believe that this is the only way that we record incursions as incursions. We do not consider them innocent passage, for the reason I have suggested. The question is about innocent passage, but we do not consider these to be innocent passage, (Interjection) and we are not able to give a breakdown as to pursuit of suspects involved in criminal activity.

410 Hon. D A Feetham: But the problem with this schedule, Mr Speaker, is that it is headed 'Innocent Passage Record' at the very top.

Hon. Chief Minister: Because the question is about innocent passage.

Hon. D A Feetham: No, the question is about innocent passage and pursuit of suspects, so where is the breakdown? This is the – 415 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, let me see if I can explain it to hon. Members in a way that is more helpful.

We do not believe – and that is what I told him in the answer I was giving him – that there is such a thing as innocent passage through our waters by any state vessel of Spain, so we do not record anything as innocent passage, for a simple reason: there is a maxim of public international law that if a state has a claim on the other state, everything they do around the coastal state is interpreted as being not innocent. Separately, we are unable to give a figure in respect of which incursions relate to any chase that may have been ongoing, because that is not how the figure is maintained by us. And so the only number I can give him is the record of incursions for each year, which is what I am giving him, and that is what the table provides.

Hon. D A Feetham: Okay. Just for the purposes of Hansard, does he therefore accept that the answer to Question 206 has to be amended so that the table does not reflect innocent passage record, but says ‘Incursion Record’?

430 Hon. Chief Minister: For the purposes of Hansard, Mr Speaker, I have said what I have said, and I have actually said it in the course of the introduction for the handing over of the table.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, the Hon. Chief Minister earlier said that there was excellent co-operation between the Police and the Spanish police. When they are following a vessel into Gibraltar waters, pursuing someone who they consider has committed a crime, do they notify the Gibraltar Police? And is that number of vessels included in this table, or is that a separate table?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the answer is sometimes, and I believe that such eventualities would not be recorded on this table.

Hon. K Azopardi: So if we were to ask for the number of times that that has happened, we would be given a different statistic by year. Is that correct?

Hon. Chief Minister: That is the next question on the Order Paper, Mr Speaker, I believe, or the one after that.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am not going to cut across my learned Friend’s questions because it is his question, but it also uses the word, in the question, ‘incursion’, and what I am trying to establish is in compiling the statistics and giving the explanation that he has given, is he using that explanation under the umbrella word ‘incursion’ to distinguish from a situation where the Spanish authorities have communicated to our authorities that they are following a vessel in hot pursuit; and, if so, whether there is some kind of distinguishing information, table or number as a result of that, which would therefore not come in the answer to the next question.

455 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, in the circumstances that the hon. Gentleman describes, we should not be dealing with an incursion.

Hon. K Azopardi: Precisely. If he does not consider that an incursion, we are not going to get the information in the next question, so I am asking if we were to table a question asking how many times they have had information that they are pursuing a vessel in the same years that my hon. colleague has asked, over the last four years, we would presumably get a different answer. Is that correct?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman is, in effect, asking me a supplementary to Questions 207 and 208 when we are dealing with Question 206. I think that we need to not pre-empt questions on the Order Paper. It is one of the basic rules.

470 Hon. K Azopardi: I give him a final opportunity because I do not think I am trying to do that at all. I am trying to understand the answer he has given. The answer he has given is, 'I cannot distinguish between innocent passage and pursuit of suspects,' for the explanation that he has given. He also talked about the co-operation of the Police. When I have probed him on that he says, 'Sometimes we get told,' and I want to know whether those stats are here or not. He said some of them might be, some of them will not be, and what I am trying to – 475 Hon. Chief Minister: They are not incursions and therefore they are not there is what I said.

Hon. K Azopardi: And therefore, if they are not incursions and they are not there, were we to put a question ... I am trying to understand – 480 Hon. Chief Minister: It is one of the next two questions to come.

Hon. K Azopardi: With respect to the Hon. Chief Minister, who is answering from a sedentary position, he said the answer to my question is that they are not incursions and therefore would not be in this table, which refers to incursions. But the following questions also refer to incursions, so they would not be there either, so I am trying to clarify whether if we ask a question that does not mention the word 'incursions' we will get the right statistic for the number of times that the Spanish police or authorities have notified our authorities that they are pursuing a vessel.

485 Hon. Chief Minister: And that question, therefore, can only be a supplementary to Questions 207 and 208, and we should not be jumping the Order Paper, Mr Speaker.

490 Hon. D A Feetham: The answers are the answers. However inadequate we feel the answers are, they are the answers and we just plough on.

Mr Speaker, just in relation to this table – which, with respect to the hon. Gentleman, should read 'Record of Incursions' – if we look at September and October 2022, we see that in September there were 189 incursions and in October 250 incursions. That is significantly higher than either in previous months in 2002 or indeed in previous months in any of the previous years, and certainly considerably higher than in September or October of previous years. Does he know or has he inquired as to why there is a spike in the number? Does he have a theory as to why there is a spike in the number of incursions in those two months in 2022?

500 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, sometimes I feel as if hon. Members want to pretend that we are operating in a different world to the reality in which we operate. How do I know why Spanish state vessels came into our waters, contrary to our laws and contrary to international law, 250 times in October instead of 124 times in October 2018? I do not know why they came in 42 times in January 2022 instead of 98 times in January 2021. Neither do I know why they came in 28 times in December 2022 instead of 90 times in December 2020, because they should never be coming in, in a way that is an incursion. I do not believe it is acceptable that Spanish state vessels should come in once into British Gibraltar Territorial Waters, into what is undoubtedly British Gibraltar Territorial Waters and what the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea leaves no doubt is British Gibraltar Territorial Waters in respect of a convention where they filed a reservation which has absolutely no legal force based on a dry coast argument, which is medieval. I do not know, but it is nonsense that they should try to pretend that they can stop the application of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and therefore the very existence of BGTW by coming in 250 times or 2,500 times. I am not going to ask them why they are coming in more. I am going to always tell them that they should not come in, but that they will be very welcome if they co-operate with our law enforcement, communicate with them why they need to come through, and we will work with them to ensure that bad guys do not get the advantage of law enforcement agencies not working hand in hand together.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Hon. D A Feetham: No, Mr Speaker, I have a supplementary in relation to this. (Interjection) No, I am ... Mr Speaker, may I ...? I have not asked a supplementary.

Mr Speaker: I accept that the hon. Member can pose another supplementary.

525

Hon. D A Feetham: [Inaudible] incursions to a figure of 250? So that I can give an idea to listeners, it was 95 in the same month in 2021, 114 in 2020, 117 in 2019, 124 in 2018 in the same month, so it is more than double. Does that have anything to do with the Spanish government turning the screws at this moment in time?

530

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if they are turning the screw, they are turning it on the wrong guy and on the wrong government because the screws do not hurt and they do not make us blink.

535

If the hon. Gentleman wants to give them the opportunity to have that issue highlighted in this House, which is a way that would put pressure on people in Gibraltar, because nobody was talking about the figure of 250 incursions until he started talking about it, he had better think carefully about how he deploys his politics for the benefit of the people of Gibraltar, because if he cares to look at the number of incursions and he were to do the addition across the board, he would find that 2022 is not the year when there have been most incursions. It might be a month in October where there is, but in 2018 there were 1,395 incursions. So I wonder whether Mr Feetham might want to think more carefully about what is in the interests of the people of Gibraltar rather than what is, in his view, the way of asking the most provocative question in the most provocative way.

540

In 2021, there were 1,359 incursions, more than in 2022, so it does not seem to me that it is a turning of the screw, but what it does seem to me to be is entirely unacceptable. Whether it is innocent passage because we will not recognise it, whether it is pursuit of suspects without the agreement of Gibraltar authorities, whether it is to come in to see the OS35 – the hon. Gentleman seems to have forgotten that that happened – or whether it is to come in to see what was happening with the Grace 1, all of those things, whatever the justification, if it is not cleared with the relevant Gibraltar authorities or with the Royal Navy, it is just as bad, and I for one will not fall into the trap of justifying, for Spain or anybody else, in the way that the hon. Gentleman has offered me the opportunity to do, any of those incursions or to become an apologist for Spain on why she might be pursuing that. I am not Spain's psychologist, Mr Speaker, but I suggest that some people should visit theirs.

545

550

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q207/2023

BGTW incursions by Spanish law enforcement agencies – Number involving requests for assistance

555

Clerk: Question 207/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Thankfully, I have never visited a psychologist myself, but there is always a first time.

560

How many incursions, in the last five years, into British Gibraltar Territorial Waters by Spanish law enforcement agencies have involved a request for assistance from law enforcement agencies or authorities in Gibraltar?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

565 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, this information is not currently available. To compile it would require a manual exercise going back, day by day, for five years.

570 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I do not understand the rationale behind the answer to the question. He has provided us with all these figures that show incursions into British Gibraltar Territorial Waters, the numbers in detail – although he has not provided the breakdown, but I accept that the numbers are there – and all we are asking is out of these numbers, or, if it is not in this table, what other numbers are there where there has been a call to British Gibraltar Territorial Waters, to put it in a way that everybody understands it ... where there has been a seeking of assistance. I just do not understand it.

575 Let me see whether at least he can be helpful in relation to this. If, for example, I were – (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) Please do not get upset about the questions.

Hon. Chief Minister: I am not upset.

580 Hon. D A Feetham: You are getting upset. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) You are getting upset and I am trying to keep calm. You are getting upset and you are then going to get me upset as well. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) Okay. All right. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) All right. Okay. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) All right, the absence of intellect that I put into the question.

585 Mr Speaker: It is now getting personal and that is not acceptable.

Hon. Chief Minister: [Inaudible] I apologise.

590 Mr Speaker: No ...

Hon. D A Feetham: If it was about me, I apologise anyway. I am in an apologetic mood, Mr Speaker.

595 How long would he need for this information to be compiled? If, for example, I was magnanimous and I offered to ask this question in the future, how long would it take the public servants to compile this information in order that he can provide an answer to this House?

600 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, let me be very clear about the answer I have given. I have not relied, as the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition suggested earlier, on the use of the word ‘incursion’ to not provide an answer to this question, because in fact the question would be improperly phrased, because when a Spanish law enforcement agency makes a request to a Gibraltar law enforcement agency to come into BGTW, then that is not an incursion. It is not an incursion. But despite the fact that this question and the next question refer to incursions and in the next question it would be an incursion, I have not relied on that in order to not give an answer to this question.

605 What I want the hon. Gentleman to realise is that in Question 207 he is asking about situations which are operationally as they should be. In other words, a Spanish law enforcement official chasing somebody gets in touch with Gibraltar law enforcement officials and says, ‘I am coming, help me.’ That is not recorded anywhere. It is not recorded anywhere as an incursion or as a non-incursion or as a co-operation. Therefore, it is not an instance which is recorded in the table that I have given him before. It is not one of the 1,395 for the earlier years. It is not there, because that is not an incursion.

615 To go back would require us to check every single record for every single night of operation of HM Customs and of the RGP, to check whether they had a communication from Spanish law enforcement, and therefore it is impossible to do, not just in the time available but impossible to do because we would not be able to check our records going back that time in a way that is a good use of government resources, and therefore it cannot be done. But it is not an incursion, it is not an improper entry into British Gibraltar Territorial Waters, it is a proper act of co-operation between law enforcement agencies, which would not be recorded as something contrary to either public international law or to our view of how Spanish law enforcement should co-operate with us, or indeed Moroccan law enforcement should co-operate with us.

Hon. D A Feetham: Does he not think that, as the leader of the Government, it would be beneficial to the Government to have the statistics available of incursions into British Gibraltar Territorial Waters in pursuit of suspects where there has been no call to the Gibraltar authorities, which he has already answered – he says he has already answered – in the table, and the statistics for the same period showing where there has been a call for assistance, so that he can then demonstrate the difference between the two scenarios? Does he think there would be a benefit to the Government to have those statistics available? He laughs in an exasperated way, but it is a sensible question.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, first of all, the first type of example that he refers to is in the next question on the Order Paper, which he is now leading me to. The second answer to his question is that I would ask him to once again think a little more carefully. If we were to have such a statistic and we were to publish it, it would tend to demonstrate that Spanish law enforcement officials are acting in a manner that is in keeping with our view of the application of public international law in respect of British Gibraltar Territorial Waters. What does he think – and I ask him rhetorically – would be the effect of that on the behaviour of Spanish law enforcement and their co-operation with Gibraltar law enforcement, or indeed the instructions that they might receive from higher up the chain politically, given the effect that that statistic might have on a Spanish theory of how they should behave in respect of accessing BGTW? And therefore, what would the effect be on law enforcement officials? I think if he reflects on that, he will understand that it is potentially hugely counterproductive to bandy such a figure about in public, and it could create much greater opportunity for those who are criminals seeking to squirm between these issues of jurisdiction and could create much greater danger to our highly prized law enforcement officers.

Hon. D A Feetham: And what would he have to say if I said to him that perhaps the reason for his reticence in providing me with these statistics is that they would show that only in a minority of circumstances do Spanish law enforcement officers actually do things properly when they come into British Gibraltar Territorial Waters in pursuit of suspects?

Hon. Chief Minister: I would say, Mr Speaker, that he has once again failed to understand the dynamic that we are dealing with. I have absolutely no doubt that, unfortunately, it is in an absolute minority of cases that Spanish law enforcement officials communicate with their Gibraltar law enforcement officials timeously and that that is a pity because it is politically driven, it is not law enforcement driven, and it would not be happening on my watch more than it was happening on their watch or on Sir Joe's watch or on Sir Joshua's watch. This is, unfortunately, the part of the world in which we operate. We have not been able to see a change to that in any of the periods of political leadership of Gibraltar, not because of the political leadership of Gibraltar, but political leadership elsewhere. So it is not an issue not to publish those statistics. It is regrettable that it is a minority of instances, and I hope that one day common sense will prevail and that will change.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q208/2023

BGTW incursions by Spanish law enforcement agencies –
Number not involving requests for assistance

665 Clerk: Question 208/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, how many incursions in the last five years into British Gibraltar Territorial Waters by Spanish law enforcement agencies have not involved a request for assistance from law enforcement agencies or authorities in Gibraltar?

670

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, as I have said in relation to the previous answer, this information is not currently available. To compile it would require a manual exercise going back, day to day, for five years.

675

Hon. D A Feetham: A supplementary in relation to this: if I asked him at the next session to provide the information for just one year, would that be available? Would he have that information available either publicly or privately?

680

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, not in a way that is reliable, and therefore I would not want to give it across the floor of the House, but I am happy to consider giving it to him directly.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, for me to understand this answer, he says it is not available for the reasons he has explained in relation to the previous answer, but in relation to Question 206 he has given us this table. Is he saying that someone is recording incursions but the incursions table that we have received under Question 206 is not an all-inclusive log of incursions and that there are other incursions? How are they logged? If you are logging the incursions under Question 206, who is making the decision on not logging other incursions, and why?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I am saying quite the opposite; in fact, the complete opposite. The answer to Question 206 is all incursions. We will not justify the incursion by saying, 'Ah, but in this case the OS35', or 'Ah, but in this case they were doing this, that or the other.' They are all incursions, as far as we are concerned.

690

Hon. K Azopardi: So I understand it now, the table at Question 206 is all incursions, but the only distinction he has made, at least in answer to me, is that if they are pursuing a suspect it is not considered an incursion?

695

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, if they are pursuing a suspect and they communicate with us and we are working with them in co-operation, then it is not considered an incursion. Or indeed – because we are going down the rabbit hole of chasing suspects – if they communicate with us that they are coming and we are co-operating with them, then it is not an incursion. Whether they are coming to chase a suspect, to come round the Rock to go to the other side of the coast, or whether they are coming to see the OS35 with us or whether they are coming to help us with the OS35, it is not an incursion. But when they come without talking to us and not in co-operation with us, it is an incursion, whatever they may be coming to do. I would have thought it was clear, Mr Speaker.

700

705

Mr Speaker: Next question.

710

Q209/2023

Spanish territorial waters –
Incursions by Gibraltar law enforcement agencies

Clerk: Question 209/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, how many incursions in the last five years into Spanish territorial waters have there been by law enforcement agencies in Gibraltar either (a) because of 715 innocent passage or (b) in pursuit of suspects?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, this information is highly sensitive. I am asked 720 not to disclose this information as it is data about operational aspects of the work of our law enforcement agencies. However, I am happy to have a conversation with the hon. Member behind the Speaker's Chair.

Q210/2023

Incursions into Spanish territorial waters by Gibraltar law enforcement agencies –
Number involving requests for assistance

Clerk: Question 210/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, of those incursions in the last five years into Spanish territorial 725 waters by Gibraltar law enforcement agencies in pursuit of suspects, how many involved a request for assistance from Spanish authorities/law enforcement agencies?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, for the same reasons as referred to in the 730 previous answer, this information is highly sensitive. However, I am happy to have a conversation with the hon. Member behind the Speaker's Chair.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, Question 210 is, in fact, the reverse of the questions that I 735 have been asking about the Spanish coming into Gibraltar territorial waters and seeking assistance. In relation to Spanish vessels coming into Gibraltar, he said it was too difficult to obtain that information for the last five years. That is the answer that he gave. Is this information available to the Hon. the Chief Minister? In other words, in the reverse is it available for the last 740 five years, or is this also too difficult to obtain? As I understand the answer, it is that it is available but he will have a private conversation with me. Just so that I understand it.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do object to being asked to stand up to agree or not agree 745 with the hon. Member's summary of the answers that I have given him, which in this instance is not incorrect, but I do not think it helps us at all that hon. Members should get up, replay the answer I have just given and ask me to give a yes or no answer. It is almost as if we were in comprehension back in school.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, does he not agree that it is odd? The reason why I have asked 750 this is that it is just odd, to me. There may be a reason. Maybe he can elaborate on the reason.

755 He tells me that he cannot give me the figures for Spanish vessels coming into Gibraltar seeking assistance from authorities in Gibraltar for the last five years, because, as I understood the answer, there is too much data, it is just not available. But now he tells me, in relation to the reverse, that the data is available and he is willing to provide it to me, or at least have a discussion with me privately. Doesn't he see that there is a ... not an inconsistency but a curious difference in the answers he has provided?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I do not see that there is an inconsistency or an imbalance. One is man bites dog and the other one is dog bites man.

Q211/2023
Incident at Eastern Beach –
Whether Spanish officers called for assistance

760 Clerk: Question 211/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, in relation to the recent incident at Eastern Beach, did Spanish officers at any time call for assistance from British Gibraltar counterparts or authorities? I assume he has this information.

765

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, this forms part of an ongoing investigation. It is not appropriate to comment at this stage on aspects of a live investigation.

Hon. D A Feetham: I thought it was my lucky day, but obviously it is not. Does he at least have that information, even if he is unwilling to provide me with the answer at this stage?

775 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am not unwilling to provide him with the answer. It is just that that is a live investigation. This is a parliament and a parliament should not be commenting on what is a live investigation. I have information which has been provided to me, but it has been provided to me on the basis of confidentiality, and parliaments do not debate live criminal investigations.

780 Hon. D A Feetham: Is he saying that there is a criminal investigation? It is a criminal investigation in relation to which suspects, suspects in this jurisdiction or suspects in Spain? And does it include the Spanish officers as being suspects?

785 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it would be highly unusual for a minister to answer a question in a parliament about an ongoing investigation seeking to identify or not identify who is or is not a suspect. I know that the hon. Gentleman is trying to play to the gallery and I recognise why he is doing it, but I am not going to fall into the trap of permitting this Parliament to become a place where live criminal investigations are debated. I believe, indeed, it is probably outside of the Rules, although I cannot put my hand on the rule at the moment whilst I am on my feet.

Hon. K Azopardi: Can I just ask? The Hon. Chief Minister is reluctant to comment on the ongoing investigation, yet the question –

795 Mr Speaker: I am not sure whether that is right. He is not reluctant; he has explained the reasons why, and I think the hon. Member should take that on board. I do not agree that the characterisation that he is reluctant is appropriate.

Hon. K Azopardi: I thought that I was expressing the kind of tone that he was using without using the word 'reluctant', but I am not going to put words in his mouth, Mr Speaker.

800 He has said he does not want to comment on that, but on the other hand the question is quite specific about whether there was a call for assistance, and I thought he had commented already, to GBC in the media interviews, on information which is not precisely this answer, but questions that related to whether or not they wanted medical assistance when they were here. It is just a related question. That is as much part of the investigation, surely, as the question that my hon. colleague is asking, but he has not been reluctant to answer those questions.

Hon. Chief Minister: I am not reluctant, Mr Speaker. I would be delighted to have a debate about this issue and share my views, which are no doubt in keeping with his and those of all members of our community. But one thing is what I may be able to say in a media interview – indeed, what we can say about each other in a media interview. It is quite another thing what we are able to and what is appropriate for us to say in this place.

810 When I am talking about whether or not we have tendered medical assistance to individuals who are in Gibraltar, whether they are law enforcement agents or not law enforcement agents, that is not a matter which is subject of a criminal investigation. Did we tender medical assistance? Yes, we did. That is not a criminal investigation. Where did the vessel come from etc. – and there are other questions, which we will come to now – those are part of a criminal investigation. As far as I am concerned, we do not debate live criminal investigations in this House, Mr Speaker.

Hon. K Azopardi: There is a distinction, surely, between ... What I thought was the ambit of the question is if, for example, they were in hot pursuit, did you call for assistance? That is a distinction between the quite separate investigation into whatever happened on Eastern Beach that day. Does the Chief Minister see it all as part and parcel of the same thing and is not making a distinction as to whether or not they made a call first to say, 'We are on our way into Gibraltar waters'?

825 Hon. Chief Minister: I am sorry, Mr Speaker, I think I have been abundantly clear about this issue. There are aspects which I am advised are part of a criminal investigation. As a result, I cannot answer questions about that in this House, in order to comply with the conventions and Rules of this House.

830 Hon. D A Feetham: The reason why I asked whether the Spanish officers were suspects is precisely arising out of the question that the Leader of the Opposition has asked. If the Spanish officers are not suspects in any kind of investigation, there cannot be any possible reason why the question 'Did they ask for assistance prior to coming into British Gibraltar Territorial Waters?' cannot be answered. The refusal can only be seen in the context of an investigation in relation to the Spanish officers. I have to say I would doubt that there would be an investigation into the Spanish officers in the circumstances of this case, so we are entitled to ask the question. Does the Hon. the Chief Minister not see that distinction?

840 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do not think that repeating myself is going to assist the understanding of the hon. Gentleman of the views that the Government is having to take because of the information put to us, but there is another question on the Order Paper which we will come to, about a diplomatic protest. Diplomatic protests would not be made in cases where Spanish law enforcement officials communicate to Gibraltar law enforcement officials that they are coming into Gibraltar and that they are seeking their co-operation. So there is no question of me not answering or trying to avoid answering for that reason, because, in fact, all of that is already public and there is another question on the Order Paper, which I will answer.

850 Hon. D A Feetham: I do not understand his reluctance because following that answer and in the light of the answers that he has already provided to us during the course of this afternoon, if they had requested assistance prior to coming into British Gibraltar Territorial Waters, on the basis of the answers that the Hon. the Chief Minister has provided they would not be classed as incursions, ergo they would not have been doing anything wrong, so I do not understand on what basis ... Does he not agree with me that there is no logical reason why he should not be answering the question that I have posed?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I really do not think that my repeating once again the things that I have said is going to persuade the hon. Gentleman that he should not be, for the sake of being able to say that he pursued me on it ... that he should take another course.
860

I am very clear what my views are about this incident. There has been a diplomatic protest already. Indeed, as I will say in answer to another question, a note verbale was handed in by the British Ambassador in Madrid. There is, therefore, no question of any of the things that the hon. Gentleman has suggested as my motivation for not answering the question in another way. I have been advised that there is an investigation. Therefore, the information that I have is not information that I can impart because it has been imparted to me in the context of that investigation.
865

What I can say in the media to help defend Gibraltar's reputation is different to what I might be able to say in this Parliament, because this Parliament has rules, Mr Speaker.

870 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q212/2023

Incident at Eastern Beach – Direction from which Spanish customs vessel entered BGTW

Clerk: Question 212/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, from what direction did the Spanish customs vessel involved in the recent incident at Eastern Beach enter British Gibraltar Territorial Waters?
875

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, as I have said in relation to the previous answer, this forms part of an ongoing investigation. It is not appropriate to comment at this stage on aspects of a live investigation.
880

Q213/2023

Beach livestream cameras – Night time availability

Clerk: Question 213/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, does the Government still intend not to make the beach livestream cameras available for online viewing between 11 p.m. and 6 a.m.; and, if so, why?

885

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, as the hon. Gentleman should recall, the Government is acting on legal advice regarding this issue and is therefore unable to extend the live broadcasting of the beach cameras to include the hours he is referring to, due to data protection issues.

890

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, we struggle on this side to understand those issues, given the report that there has been on the GRA views on the subject, and indeed the fact that at night time it would be less easy to identify someone than it would be during the day. Therefore, we do not understand the position or the advice that the Government is receiving in light of what the GRA has said.

895

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, what the GRA has said is that as long as individuals are not identifiable, the processing of the footage will not be caught under the data protection legislation. That is what our lawyers sought from them at the time when we were being told by the GRA that we had to remove the cameras – not that we could play them at night if we wanted to or during the day, actually that we had to remove the cameras. In fact, the hon. Gentleman might recall that at one stage we had to take them down and people were complaining, because once the cameras were up, people wanted to be able to check how the Levante was in el mal del Levante.

We have had to change the angle of the cameras, we have had to change the granular ability of the cameras to zoom in. At night. There are other issues, because the beaches are used at night sometimes by young people for eventualities that do not involve tobacco smuggling, where somebody being identified may not be the issue, but they might also be identified, and for that reason we went through a really difficult process internally where we wanted them on all the time throughout the year, 24 hours a day, and we were being told that that could not be the case because of the GDPR issues and because of the feedback that our officials were getting from the GRA. It is absolutely true that our decisions were not based on a ruling of the GRA because, based on the advice we were getting from our officials because of the things that the GRA was saying to them, we had to change the way that the cameras operated. But that is the reason for this.

None of that relates to illegal activity on any of the beaches because, as I have said in answer to earlier questions, there are better cameras that provide law enforcement functions in respect of the beaches, but we do not want to disclose where they are because otherwise people might know that they can go to one place to commit offences but not another, or what angle to commit the offence and not others.

920

The livestream cameras would not enable law enforcement to have better policing of the beaches. We have already offered the law enforcement agencies the possibility of CCTV cameras where they consider them appropriate through Gibraltar. We have rolled out a programme in that respect. They do not think that they need them at Eastern Beach etc. because there is a really powerful camera that shows them everything that is happening, and so they do not need this. This is the camera to show us whether there is Levante or not, not to show us whether Johnny and Jane have finally decided that they are going to get it together or whether or not we can all look at whether there is illegal activity on the beach – because this is not CCTV, this is live stream. This is for everyone in Gibraltar. And it is not as if CCTV is necessary for Eastern Beach, because given the affordable housing programme that we have provided for, Eastern Beach is now one of the beaches and one of the areas of Gibraltar which has the most eyes on it. There are about 500 families there already and there will be another 400 families there in coming months, or at least 200 families in coming months and an extra 300 families in other months.

935 The hon. Gentleman is obviously trying to create this idea that we are trying to stop the cameras from being on at night so that tobacco smuggling activity can go on, when in fact there are really powerful cameras that catch all that area – and the good ones, the ones which show you the brand of the button of the guy who decides he is going to turn up to smuggle the box of Winston.

940 Hon. K Azopardi: Is he saying, then, that the decision to remove the cameras at night time is a government decision or a GRA advice decision?

Hon. Chief Minister: A decision made by the Government on the advice of government lawyers after they considered with the GRA the advice of the GRA.

Hon. K Azopardi: But not that the GRA had advised that they should be removed at night time, but not during the daytime, not specifically?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, because as the Government understood it, the GRA were threatening to rule that we had to remove them completely during the day and during the night.

Hon. K Azopardi: Was there a specific GRA ruling in relation to the matter? When he says they were threatening to rule, did they actually rule?

955 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, by working with the GRA and trying to understand their parameters and change the operation of the parameters, we avoided the ruling which everybody would have wanted us to avoid, which was that we had to remove the cameras. So by changing the method of operation of the camera, the ability to zoom, the angle of the camera etc., we were able to avoid a ruling from the GRA to remove the cameras. And so we have the cameras now in 960 a way that the GRA accepts, because the purpose of the camera – and this is key – which is for people to see the weather conditions at Gibraltar’s beaches in order to be able to attend at the beaches during the day, is what the camera has to provide on the livestream. If you do not, and you let it run through the night or you let it focus on a particular individual whose physique might be more attractive to one person or another – and from the control that you have on your 965 computer you can zoom in – you do not comply with the rulings and therefore you are at threat of having to remove them completely, not just at night but also during the day.

Hon. K Azopardi: Does the Government not see that by not having the camera on at night, it looks like simply the Government is trying to avoid the embarrassment that you are going to see fast launch activity more during the night time than during the day?

970

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it is possible that somebody might reach that perverse conclusion, it is possible that somebody might be led to that perverse conclusion, but I wonder who it is that would think that that is logical given that there are 350 families overlooking the beach at the moment and there are going to be 750 families overlooking the beach as from July.

975

It would be a fool’s errand to think that the decision in respect of these cameras has been made because of activity that is, in any event, greatly reduced, as we will come to when we look at this in the context of other questions. But of course somebody could reach that perverse and incorrect conclusion if they wanted to and if they did not want to hear what I have said about the reasoning in respect of these cameras, and if they believed that everyone in their home is Gibraltar’s law enforcement agent looking through one of the cameras to see if they detect some illicit activity on the beach, when in fact we have two law enforcement agencies who are constantly patrolling our beaches, as I will come to in the context of another question, and we have very powerful, proper law-enforcement-and-beyond cameras, which do the job already of 980 showing those who need the data and the information – that is to say the security services, the defence services and the law enforcement agencies – all our beaches in all their glory, day or night. Johnny and Jane should beware.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

990

Hon. D A Feetham: But isn't it the case that if the regulator now, as a consequence of the adaptation, has no problems with this livestream being available during the day, it is less likely ...? They have already said that they have no problem at night, yes, but because of the adjustments that have been made you cannot make out people's faces, it is less likely you are going to be able to make out people's faces at night time, so I just do not understand what the problem from the Government's point of view is, switching it off at night when the GRA say there is no problem at night and when people are less likely to be identifiable at night time than during the day.

995

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the GRA has said a number of things, not just that. The GRA has said that the processing of footage must have a lawful purpose, a clear and justified purpose, with footage limited so that only the necessary personal data is processed for that purpose.

1000

These are not CCTV cameras, these are livestream cameras. The purpose is not to make every Gibraltarian a detective of what is happening on the beaches at night. The CCTV cameras in other places do not provide for that. The purpose is not to permit one partner to see whether in fact their partner is having an adulterous relationship with another, where they may not have to identify their face but they might identify their car. The purpose is not to enable us to see the full moon reflected on the glorious Mediterranean. The purpose is to see the weather, to see whether you want to go to the beach during the summer. If you go outside that purpose, you have to explain why you are doing it. On what basis would the cameras run at night? This is the issue we were faced with when we were going to run the cameras through the day and the night, innocently, not thinking of Johnny and Jane and the other things that can go on. And so the purpose is to see the weather during the day.

Mr Speaker, if hon. Members think it is a huge issue I do not mind asking the Hon. Minister to go back again and try to change the purpose, so that if anybody wants to go skinny dipping at night, they can see whether there are olas or there are not olas on Western Beach, Eastern Beach or anywhere else. I do not really give a monkey's, and neither do I think that having the livestream camera is going to enhance or curtail any activity that there may be on the beaches which may be illicit. But the hon. Gentleman has just made me realise that there is one potential advantage of all of this, that maybe somebody from Madrid could tune in to the livestream camera and be reassured that there is no constant illicit activity going on from our beaches. Maybe that would be a huge advantage.

1015

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q214/2023

Beaches –

Whether patrolled at night

Clerk: Question 214/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1025

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, do the Royal Gibraltar Police patrol our beaches overnight to prevent unlawful activity, and/or do other agencies such as HM Customs or Borders and Coastguard have such responsibilities?

1030

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Commissioner of Police and the Collector of Customs have informed me that the RGP and HM Customs patrol the whole of Gibraltar, including our beaches and coastline, to ensure Gibraltar's security and curtail illegal activity. They do so regularly and every night.

1035

Hon. K Azopardi: I am certainly glad to hear that, Mr Speaker, but the Chief Minister will have seen the comments of residents of Eastern Beach, like I have seen them, where, to paraphrase what they were saying, not many authorities were seen down there, and the beaches are used for unlawful activity. How can he reconcile that information that he has been provided with those comments? And has he asked the Commissioner of Police and HM Customs, to understand the regularity of those patrols and the nature of them given the comments that have been made by concerned residents?

1040

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, there is another question on the Order Paper about whether I have given instructions about the regularity of patrols, or anyone. I do not give instructions about regularity of patrols. I do not believe it is the role of the Government to give instructions about regularity of patrols; I express concerns to the Commissioner and the Collector. I have expressed my concerns and I do not think it is appropriate for us to do more than that.

1045

Hon. K Azopardi: What I was asking was given the concerns that have been expressed by residents and the information that he has received, putting them alongside each other, can he not see that there is obviously some factual disconnection there, and that if the residents' concerns are correct, somehow those patrols are not working the way that they should be, and has that made him have a discussion with the RGP and Customs – knowing that he will not give those specific instructions for the reasons he has just explained, but has he expressed those concerns to the Police and Customs and has he been told that the patrols would be increased?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the question and therefore I have not had that discussion in that context. The next question on the Order Paper is about instructions.

1060

Hon. K Azopardi: When he says he does not accept the premise of my question, is he saying he thinks the patrolling of our beaches is sufficient?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am saying that I do not know enough about what frequency of patrolling of our beaches to be sufficient or not be sufficient is appropriate because I am not an expert on security and how it is done, and indeed I leave that to the experts who know how it is done. The fact that we have had one incident in a very long period of time suggests to me that they are getting it right.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I was not asking about that one incident. What I was relaying to him is the wider concern that it is not just one incident, that there is unlawful activity from that beach and other beaches, and if that concern is also reaching him, as it is reaching me, and it is indeed in the public domain in the comments that people have been making, the residents, shouldn't he be having that discussion with the Police and HM Customs?

1075

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, for the reasons he has just said, if something is reaching him and it is reaching me – and it is not our job to be on top of those things; and we do not have intelligence feelers out there, we have supporters and constituents – it will be reaching the Collector of Customs and the Commissioner of Police. One has to be very careful, other than to express concerns in light of particular instances. I have expressed concerns about the incident in question, but I am not going to express concerns based on ad hoc information put on social media or referred to me which I am unable to test in the way that law enforcement is able to test.

1085 I know that there have been administrations who have told the Police what to do and how to do it and how to manage their shifts and how to change their shifts. We are not that administration, Mr Speaker.

1090 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am not asking him to just ... Of course he is not an expert, nor am I, but he is the Chief Minister and I assume he has discussions with Customs and the Police, because they have relayed this information to him. All I was saying is that during the course of that, presumably, if he had heard the same concerns that I have heard, he would have mentioned to the RGP and Customs, 'This is the information that is reaching us,' and Customs or the Police would say, 'I am sorry, Chief Minister, that is not true, because we patrol the beaches from 11 o'clock until 6 a.m. – we go every hour, we do it in a patrol car, we do it in this way, we do it in that way,' and he would either be assured or not assured. But it does not seem that he has been having those discussions of detail, and I would invite him to do so. Does he not agree that it would be relevant to do so?

1100 Hon. Chief Minister: No, sir.

Mr Speaker: We need to move on to the next question.

Q215/2023

Beaches and waters – Instructions given to RGP and HM Customs re patrols

Clerk: Question 215/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1105 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, have RGP officers or HM Customs officers been instructed not to patrol our beaches or waters at night or to lessen the frequency of patrols generally or within certain areas at certain hours; and, if so, why?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1110 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the security of Gibraltar and its people must surely be one of the highest importance to any Government. In light of this, His Majesty's Government of Gibraltar does not issue any operational instructions to its law enforcement agencies. We have never done so and we never will do so. They determine independently how best to ensure the security of Gibraltar and its people, and that includes the patrolling of our beaches or waters and the frequency of such patrols and all aspects of such patrols, including but not limited to the areas and hours in which such patrols are or are not conducted.

1120 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, the question asks whether RGP officers or HM Customs officers have been instructed not to patrol our beaches. It does not ask whether the Government has given those instructions. Is the Government aware whether RGP officers or HM Customs officers have been instructed not to patrol beaches or waters at night in particular areas or to lessen the frequency?

1125 Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, and in providing this answer, which we answer on behalf of the Government, we have obviously checked with the Commissioner of Police and the Collector of Customs. But it is frankly perverse to think that that would be the case, and to send a signal to the world that the Opposition have to even ask the Government whether it or any of our law enforcement agencies with the power to give such a direction would give such a direction.

1130 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q216/2023

Eastern Beach incident –

When Gibraltar authorities became aware of Spanish vessel in Gibraltar waters

Clerk: Question 216/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1135 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, when did the Royal Gibraltar Police and/or any other enforcement agency become aware that a Spanish SVA vessel was within Gibraltar waters and so close to shore before the incident on or about 2nd February 2023?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1140 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, as I have said in a previous answer, this forms part of an ongoing investigation. It is not appropriate to comment at this stage on aspects of a live investigation.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q217/2023

Eastern Beach incident –

When Gibraltar authorities became aware of Spanish RIB landing

1145 Clerk: Question 217/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, when did the Royal Gibraltar Police and/or any other enforcement agency become aware that a small RIB from a Spanish SVA vessel had landed at Eastern Beach on or about 2nd February 2023?

1150 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, as I have said in a previous answer, this forms part of an ongoing investigation. It is not appropriate to comment at this stage on aspects of a live investigation.

1155 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I rise just to ask him this, because again, in his GBC media interview he seemed to be quite relaxed about discussing some of the aspects of the landing and timings of when the RGP had come. There is footage that suggests that the RGP had turned up at the scene somewhere between four and six or eight minutes after the landing, but I was trying to get a more precise timing if the information was had by the Government. Is he still sticking to that original answer, that he is unwilling to do that here but willing to do so outside?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am not unwilling; I am advised that I am unable to provide that information in this House.

1165 Hon. K Azopardi: To be clear, he has advised that he cannot give information in this House but he is able to talk about it in media interviews outside this House. Is that correct?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I am advised that the information I provide outside this House, which is not the level of precision that I can give here, can be in keeping with what is in the public domain and represented for Gibraltar, in Gibraltar and outside of Gibraltar. But I am asked, in particular, in this House about when, and I have the information and it is precise. I am unable to provide it in this House whilst there is a live investigation going on.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q218/2023
Eastern Beach incident –
Diplomatic action and steps taken

1175 Clerk: Question 218/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, is Government aware what diplomatic action has been taken in respect of the landing at Eastern Beach of armed Spanish officers and the shooting of firearms at Eastern Beach, and what steps has it taken in relation to the incident?

1180 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, yes, sir, as has been reported publically, a note verbale was issued last week by the United Kingdom government as a formal diplomatic protest to Spain following the incident at Eastern Beach.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, is the Government aware of any response – official response, not just a press release and the comments in the press? Has there been an official Spanish response to the note verbale, and has the Government been informed of it?

1190 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the Government has been informed of all of the exchanges that have taken place between the United Kingdom and Spain in respect of this matter, but not of any formal response by Spain at this stage.

1195 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, does the Government agree with me that the landing and the firing of arms by the Spanish officers on Gibraltar land was entirely unacceptable?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am very pleased that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition agrees with me and with His Excellency the Governor, as we said on 3rd February that this incident was a violation of British sovereignty and it was a grave breach of our sovereignty and jurisdiction.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, does the Chief Minister agree with me that it was somewhat incongruous for a Foreign Office source to have been quoted in The Times as having apologised to the Spanish officers who had fired arms in Gibraltar, and that was somehow rather inconsistent with the filing of the note verbale? And has he asked the Foreign Office whether that represents the official position of the Foreign Office?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, that does not represent the official position of the Foreign Office. The official position of the Foreign Office is set out in the press release provided here and 1210 in the note verbale that has been given to Spain, and therefore I would caution that the hon. Gentleman should not believe things which are unattributed to individuals in newspapers.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q219/2023
Eastern Beach incident –
Whether any arrests by RGP

Clerk: Question 219/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1215

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, have the Royal Gibraltar Police undertaken any arrests in relation to the incident at Eastern Beach on or about Thursday, 2nd February 2023?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1220

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, no arrests have yet been undertaken in respect of this matter.

Q220/2023
Eastern Beach incident –
Monitoring, security and enforcement systems

Clerk: Question 220/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1225

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, does the Government accept that the incident at Eastern Beach on or about 2nd February 2023 exposes flaws in our monitoring, security and enforcement systems; and, if so, how will these be improved?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1230

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the incident at Eastern Beach is hugely concerning. The Government's concerns in respect of this incident go well beyond concerns about monitoring, security and enforcement systems. We are, therefore, already considering how best to address the issues that permitted such an incident to take place.

1235

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, we share the view that it is concerning, but my question also asked how will these be improved. Does the Government already have in mind the kind of measures that it will take, or is it early days? I accept that it has only happened relatively recently, but given the severity of the incident, has the Government been able to consider and take it to the stage where it now has a view of the kind of improvements it would want to make?

1240

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the Government has already implemented improvements and will be implementing even more improvements to address all of the issues that concern us, which go beyond the items set out in the hon. Gentleman's question, but of course I cannot go into them and I cannot explain them because then their use would be vitiated.

1245

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q221/2023
Tobacco smuggling –
Number of prosecutions in last five years

Clerk: Question 221/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1250 Hon. K Azopardi: How many prosecutions have there been for tobacco smuggling offences in the last five calendar years, namely 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021 and 2022?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1255 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, law enforcement agencies report a major fall in the instances of tobacco smuggling in recent years. This is likely attributable to the pandemic, which led many to wisely give up smoking, and the tobacco MoU under the withdrawal agreement, which set a maximum 32% differential on tobacco prices with Spain. This differential had been upwards of 50% to 60% before that. Indeed, Altadis, the leading tobacco manufacturer
1260 in Spain, has recognised publicly the significant and drastic drop of an estimated 76.7% decrease in the illicit and unlawful tobacco trade in Gibraltar since the MoU on tobacco was entered into in 2018.

In terms of prosecutions, in 2018 there were 25, in 2019 there were 6, in 2020 there were 19, in 2021 there were 5, and in 2022 there were 3.

1265 The number of cases dealt with by Customs is as follows. In 2018, there were 25 cases with 48 arrests. The total amount of tobacco seized was 1,499,710, and the total amount of rolling tobacco seized was 198,350 g. Additionally, there were 69 instances of found tobacco, which resulted in 3,329,880 cigarettes and 144,350 g of rolling tobacco being seized.

1270 In 2019, there were 17 cases, 30 arrests, and the total number of cigarettes seized was 1,303,680. Additionally, there were 38 incidents of found tobacco, which resulted in 1,848,460 cigarettes and 300 g of rolling tobacco being seized.

In 2020, there were 16 cases, 28 arrests, and the total number of cigarettes seized was 820,420. Additionally, there were 27 incidents of found tobacco, which resulted in 2,133,640 cigarettes being seized.

1275 In 2021, there were five cases, 12 arrests, and the total number of cigarettes seized was 329,800. Additionally, there were 28 incidents of found tobacco, which resulted in 1,601,800 cigarettes and 5,000 g of rolling tobacco being seized.

1280 In 2022, there were eight cases and 12 arrests. The total number of cigarettes seized was 515,880 and the total amount of rolling tobacco seized was 1,500 g. Additionally, there were 47 incidents of found tobacco, which resulted in 1,065,220 cigarettes and 46,600 g of rolling tobacco being seized.

1285 Mr Speaker, therefore the total amount of tobacco seized was 4,829,590 cigarettes and 342,700 g of rolling tobacco in 2018; 3,152,140 cigarettes and 300 g of rolling tobacco in 2019; 2,957,060 cigarettes in 2020; 1,931,600 cigarettes and 5,000 g of rolling tobacco in 2021; and 1,581,100 cigarettes and 48,100 g of rolling tobacco in 2022.

1290 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can I just understand these statistics a bit better? He has given me the number for prosecutions and also gone into some detail on the cases and so on. Do I understand, when he says ...? For example, for 2019, in the second part of his answer he says there are 17 cases and 30 arrests. And then, if you look at the number for prosecutions, in 2019 there were six prosecutions. Is it because there are more cases than there are prosecutions? Not every case leads to a prosecution – is that the correlation there?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker.

1295 Hon. K Azopardi: If that is so, then when we turn to 2020 he says there are 16 cases and 20 arrests, but he has given me the number of 19 prosecutions. How can there be more prosecutions than there were cases in 2020?

Hon. Chief Minister: Some of them may date from an earlier year.

Hon. K Azopardi: Is he saying that because he has the information in front of him, or is he speculating as to the answer?

Hon. Chief Minister: I think it is pretty obvious, Mr Speaker.

Hon. K Azopardi: It is obvious that he is speculating, or is it obvious that he has the answer in front of him?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, it can only be because they come from earlier years, or indeed because they are more than one prosecution resulting from one case.

1310

Hon. K Azopardi: Does he think that the number of prosecutions for 2021 and 2022 is quite low?

1315

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it seems to be inversely in keeping with the activity and with the revenue. There is much less seizure because there is much less revenue and there is much less activity. So the correlation seems to be exactly correct. When we had the revenue that we had, there was much more activity. Now we have much less revenue, there is much less activity, there is much less illicit activity, there are many fewer prosecutions. It is a really neat curve, Mr Speaker.

Hon. K Azopardi: Government's advice and belief is that there is now far less unlawful activity than there has been in the two or three years before the MoU. That is its position, yes?

Hon. Chief Minister: And even before, Mr Speaker, and that is borne out and justified by the low levels of revenue, which the hon. Member has seen in the Estimates Book, and with the COVID Fund if we were taking 2019 as the year. If he looks at the years afterwards, there is much less activity in respect of tobacco, licit and illicit. It is obvious, Mr Speaker.

RGP, HM Customs and Borders and Coastguard Agency – Adequacy of resources and support

Clerk: Question 222/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1330

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, is the Government satisfied that the RGP, HM Customs and/or Borders and Coastguard have sufficient personnel, equipment, resources and support to monitor and enforce Gibraltar law within Gibraltar waters and at our beaches and curb any smuggling and unlawful activity?

1335

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, yes, sir. When we were elected, the RGP had a small launch and RHIBS which were confiscated. We bought the Sir Adrian Johns and then even more additional, bespoke RHIBS for the RGP. We then also bought additional, bespoke new assets

1340 for HM Customs. Both the RGP and Customs chose the type of vessels they required. We also funded jet skis for the RGP. Obtaining, manning and operating these vessels to give our law enforcement agencies the resources necessary to monitor and enforce Gibraltar law within Gibraltar waters and at our beaches and thereby curb any illicit activity increased departmental costs, which we agreed to despite being heavily criticised by our political opponents for such 1345 increases in spending.

Customs now have six vessels, three in use and three for training, one of them acquired just last year from Damen Shipyard.

Having undertaken a strategic demand assessment arising from the recent HMICFRS inspection on our marine capability, the RGP sold the Sir Adrian Johns and committed to engage with the 1350 Government to ensure that the policing capability and capacity of the RGP continued to be well resourced. The RGP currently has three operational vessels, one of which is undergoing a refit to ensure that she can remain in service for another five years. One of the other vessels will then undergo a similar refit. Additional vessels may be purchased in future. Additionally, we have developed a new and bespoke facility for the RGP Marine Section and for Customs.

1355 The number of police officers has increased from 253 when we were elected in 2011 to 301 now, an almost 20%, or one fifth, increase in the RGP manning level. Their budget has gone from £10,566,000 to £17,549,000. The number of customs officers has increased from 113 when we were elected to 171 now, an increase of 51.3%. That is an increase by half again of customs officers. Never have such increases in manpower in law enforcement been delivered by any 1360 administration. The Customs budget has gone from £4,724,000 to £11,002,000.

So, having increased customs officers by 58 and police officers by 48, and Customs' budget going up by £6,278,000 – that is to say approximately 133% – and the Police budget by £6,983,000, or approximately 66%, the Government is entirely satisfied with both the physical and human resources available to our law enforcement agencies, which have increased substantially in every 1365 respect since we were elected into government in 2011.

Hon. K Azopardi: Are the Police and Customs telling the Government that they consider they have sufficient resources, equipment and support?

1370 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do not believe there has ever been a Commissioner of Police or a Collector of Customs so treacherous as to say to the Government that they do not want any more. Of course every head of department, whether he is Commissioner or Collector, whether he is the head of ITLD or the head of the tax department, always wants more resources, but I know that in the negotiations that we have for budgetary resources the Commissioner and the Collector 1375 are amongst those who leave most satisfied and assured that the Government will fund whatever resources they need. And indeed, as the hon. Gentleman will know, there are lines in their budgets which they are able to exceed in respect of investigatory overtime etc., where they are given a £1,000 provision so that they can exceed those amounts. I have not given the forecast outturns, which would include those amounts of additional resources, but I have given the amounts of the 1380 estimates, which only provide those £1,000 lines.

Genuinely, the relationship between the Government, the Police and Customs in all budgetary matters is very strong. We work very closely with them. We ensure that they have what they need and we will always seek to ensure that they have what they want and not just what they need.

1385 Hon. K Azopardi: And given that the answer to the question that I asked a few minutes ago as to whether the Government is satisfied that the Eastern Beach incident exposed flaws in monitoring etc. was yes and the Government agreed that that was so and that it was reviewing certain issues and so on, would that review – without pressing into the operational issues, which of course I do not want to do – lead possibly to further resources, equipment and support 1390 personnel to the RGP and Customs?

Hon. Chief Minister: Neither Customs nor the RGP who have been advising the Government have suggested that the lacuna is in any of those areas.

Q223/2023
Smuggling –
Whether sufficient is being done

Clerk: Question 223/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

1395

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Does the Government believe it is doing enough to curb illicit smuggling?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1400

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, since we were elected into Government in 2011, we have increased the price of tobacco very substantially. Additionally, the Government entered into a Memorandum of Understanding with the Kingdom of Spain in 2018 which, amongst other things, limited the difference between the retail price of tobacco in Spain and Gibraltar as well as providing for exchange of information mechanisms concerning tobacco importation and sales. In fact, although the MoU on tobacco is no longer in effect, HM Government of Gibraltar remains fully compliant with it and has continued to honour and give effect to the 32% differential in retail price from Spain agreed in the MoU. Previously, the differential could be upwards of 50% to 60%.

1405

Additionally, in 2017 the Government introduced tobacco special zones which restricts the sale and possession of significant quantities of tobacco in these areas and further enhances the RGP's and HM Customs' ability to clamp down on any illicit activity that may occur. This has eliminated matuteras that blighted the frontier area and the anti-social behaviour related to tobacco that blighted some estates.

1410

Finally, the Government believes HM Customs and the RGP are actively enforcing anti-smuggling legislation in Gibraltar, with arrests and seizures being effected regularly. I have already provided considerable statistical data in this respect and I refer, once again, to the comments from Altadis referring to a 76% decrease in tobacco originating from Gibraltar.

1415

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the Chief Minister for that answer. I was more interested, actually, on the side of things of the agencies, how he responded to the Leader of the Opposition. What would the Chief Minister say about the perception that many in local authorities or agencies and bodies such as those do not necessarily feel so supported to carry out their duties effectively in order to curb such illicit activity? Could it be that despite the hike in financial support in resources and equipment, these bodies are not being instructed to focus as much as may be required on the smuggling side, but perhaps on other maritime endeavours or chores?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, any such perception would be utterly nonsensical because a lot of the measures are designed to deal exclusively with tobacco. The tobacco special zones are an idea of a former Collector of Customs with the agreement of a Royal Gibraltar Police Commissioner. The whole structure is designed to ensure that the RGP and Customs can deal with illicit tobacco activity, removing shops from estates where people could scurry away into blocks and putting them in places where they are concentrated and therefore the RGP and Customs have direct eyes on them is part of that operation. Restricting the amount of tobacco that an individual can be in possession of in a particular area is part of that. Giving Customs and the Police the more nimble RHIBS that they have sought and are exactly designed for that purpose ...

1440 We could not be doing more. We could not be more supportive. We could not say more that is supportive in public and in private. Every customs officer and every police officer knows that what we want is for Gibraltar to be known only for licit activity and not for illicit activity. We have demonstrated that, and indeed, if the hon. Lady does not want to believe what I am saying to her, I once again refer her to what the Spanish tobacco major, Altadis, has said about the reduction of tobacco originating in Gibraltar being detected in Spain – a 76% fall. I think that speaks for itself. It is remarkable. It is not our statistic, it is their statistic.

1445 But as I have also referred to the House, the amount of money that comes into our coffers from the sale of tobacco is greatly reduced, as we debate in the context of import duty when we have our budgets, and, as I have said to the Leader of the Opposition, the number of prosecutions is down but the activity is also greatly down and the reduction in prosecutions is obviously directly related to the reduction in activity. So in fact, anybody who has the sort of perception that the hon. Lady is referring to could not be one of the law enforcement officials in any of the agencies involved in the sterling work that they have done which has seen the reduction, because that speaks for itself as being a fact contrary to the alleged perception.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q224/2023
Trade office in Tangier –
Whether yet open

1455 Clerk: Question 224/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Which was that? (Interjection and laughter) Thank you!

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Isn't that sinister?

1460 Hon. D J Bossino: Sinister? No, it is quite nice.
Mr Speaker, has the planned trade office opened in Tangier?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1465 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, was that Zeffirelli's Jesus of Nazareth? (Laughter)
The Government has no current plans to open a trade office in Tangier, although this remains under consideration.

1470 Hon. D J Bossino: I did not catch the answer because I made a comment and I should not have.
Did he say that the Government has plans to open an office in Tangier?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I said the Government has no current plans to open a office in Tangier, although of course this always remains under consideration.

1475 Hon. D J Bossino: The question was whether the planned office ... It was not necessarily a plan of the Government. I am referring to a press report, if I can help the hon. Member, back in August 2019. The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister was quoted heavily in a Gibraltar Chronicle article. It was a proposal not from the Government but the Gibraltar and Morocco Business Association for the opening of an office in Tangier, but the Government was very much in favour of it and welcomed it. That is the office that I was talking about. I think the Government then was saying 1480 that it was interested in developing and exploring new commercial markets in Morocco and elsewhere, so it would be of governmental interest that an office is open there. Now that I have explained where this comes from, can he give us some further information?

1485 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the position remains exactly as I said to him. I have the report of August 2019. I have the press release that we issued at the time welcoming a private sector initiative. It was a private sector initiative. It does not mean that the Government had any such plans, and therefore the answer I have given him is the answer that the Government stands by.

1490 Clerk: Next question.

Q225/2023
Gibtelecom Mount Pleasant site –
Plans for construction works

Clerk: Question 225/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: As with the question I posed yesterday in relation to the former GBC plot, I also wish to express an interest because I live very close to this area.

1495 The question is, Mr Speaker: please state whether Gibtelecom has any intention of carrying out construction works at its Mount Pleasant site; and, if so, please provide details in relation to this, to include what the company intends to do with the site it currently occupies at John Mackintosh Square.

1500 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, there are no plans at present to carry out any construction works at the Mount Pleasant site. Gibtelecom has no plans to leave its John Mackintosh Square site and will continue for the foreseeable future with that as its head office location.

1505

Bassadone site at New Harbours –
Relocation of government departments

Clerk: Question 226/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Please state if there are plans by government departments to occupy office space at the Bassadone site at New Harbours; and, if so, which departments, when they intend to move and at what rent.

1510

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, plans for relocations of some government departments are ongoing. No decisions have yet been made and no leases signed or fully agreed. Negotiations and indeed logistical analysis are ongoing. An announcement will be made publicly if agreements can be finalised.

1515

Hon. D J Bossino: Just to be clear, we are talking about relocations to the Bassadone building at New Harbours, because he did not specify that in his answer.

Hon. Chief Minister: I did not, but that is what the question was about and that is what I was talking about, but there are also other sites.

1525 Mr R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, as the Chief Minister will be aware, I have asked questions about the continued rental of office space by the Government from the private sector. Can the Chief Minister advise how this makes any economic sense, given that the Government has existing stock of office space, albeit it may need refurbishment?

1530 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I cannot at the moment because we have not finished the negotiations, but if we get the negotiations to where we want them to be and we get the rates that we want, then it could be very advantageous indeed for the Government.

The Government of course has stock, which the Government finds very difficult to maintain. We have it in areas where we would require nonetheless to move people out to do very deep refurbishments, and even then, within a few years we might find that we have damp coming again, if not within a few months. And so we are making a decision, in the interests of the modernity of the office space that we offer to our civil servants, to explore this possibility, and if the conclusion of the negotiation is a positive one we think it will be the right result for the modern public service that we believe we should have with the new and modern facilities that we want them to have. Alternatively, we will have to consider refurbishing, which will not necessarily be any cheaper.

Hon. D J Bossino: At what stage does he think he will be able to provide further details to this House? He is saying that he is in negotiations. I just wanted to enquire about a timeline.

1545 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, exactly at the stage that the Hon. Mr Clinton has asked me to make announcements: when the ink is dry on the paper.

Hon. D J Bossino: Does he have any indication as to when the ink is likely to be dry on the paper?

1550 Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker.

1555 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the indulgence. If can ask the Chief Minister ... I am not quite sure which Bassadone site we are talking about. Is this a new build? Obviously the current office space – at least the one I saw when they opened it – is occupied. Is this a new build that Bassadone is working on at the moment; and, if so, where is it? I am probably not sighted on – (Interjection) No, because the current one is fully occupied. I did have a tour of the building when they opened it – very nice building. I could not see any space available for government offices, so is this a new location or something yet to be built?

1560 Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman is wrong. There is space in that new building.

1565 Hon. D J Bossino: Is he aware of how much space is available, so we can perhaps, in the answer to that question, have an idea as to how many government offices may move there and which offices may move there? I know he is not willing to provide that answer until the ink is dry on the paper, but is he aware of how much space is available?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, that also is a subject of negotiation.

1570 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q227/2023
Glacis children's park –
Reopening

Clerk: Question 227/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Please provide an update as to when the children's park at Glacis Estate will be ready for use.

1575

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the children's park at Glacis is not presently expected to reopen.

Hon. D J Bossino: Are alternatives being made available?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker.

1585

Hon. D J Bossino: Which?

Hon. Chief Minister: The adventure playground, Mr Speaker.

1590

Hon. D J Bossino: That is an existing site, so is the Hon. the Chief Minister saying that there will not be a particular bespoke playground for Glacis Estate children and they will have to go to the adventure playground?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker.

1595

Hon. D J Bossino: Does the Government have any intentions in relation to the site where the playground used to be?

Hon. Chief Minister: The Government is considering many potential uses for that site.

1600

Hon. D J Bossino: Does that potential usage include the construction of a building on that site?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker.

Hon. D J Bossino: And is he able to provide the House with any further particulars in relation to that, or is it simply one of the things that the Government is considering?

Hon. Chief Minister: It is simply one of the things the Government is considering. We have asked for plans to add additional housing there, and all of this, Mr Speaker, at the request of the tenants of the area, who have asked us to close the park and use the area for the provision of additional housing.

Hon. D J Bossino: And –

Mr Speaker: One final one. This is the final one.

1615

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I am really trying my best to make my questions as short as possible and follow the Speaker's ruling.

1620 Mr Speaker: I fully appreciate that, but how many questions have you asked already? Quite a substantial number, so let's leave it at just one more and then ...

Hon. D J Bossino: The replies are coming through and I think it is very interesting, Mr Speaker. I refer the Hon. the Chief Minister to the question and answer session that we had, I think on the last occasion or two occasions ago, in relation to government housing. Is the intention to build government rented accommodation there? And if that is the case, does he have a number of flats that he is considering?

1630 Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I have told the hon. Gentleman I have just asked for plans, so I do not yet have anything. I do not know how many we could have. I have asked for plans and when the plans come we will have an idea of whether you can fit three flats in or you can fit six flats in.

1635 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, this is not another question, in the sense that I am asking for clarification to the question I think he has answered. Is it government rented accommodation that is being mooted and considered?

Hon. Chief Minister: It is at this stage, yes.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q228-30/2023

New government rental housing stock – Release dates; parking; construction costs

1640 Clerk: Question 228/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Please state when the 161 flats in the government rental stock will be released following the affordable housing flats becoming available, broken down by each development and phase.

1645 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): I will answer with Questions 229 and 230.

1650 Clerk: Question 229/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Please state if there will be sufficient parking for all residents in the first phase of Hassan Centenary Terraces when the flats are first expected to be delivered in July this year.

1655 Clerk: Question 230/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1660 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, what is the current estimated projected construction cost of each of Hassan Centenary Terraces, Bob Peliza Mews and Chatham Views, and how does the current projected construction cost compare with the original contracted construction cost and the original tendered construction cost, if different?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1665 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, in respect of Hassan Centenary Terraces there are 49 government flats being released; 22 units in phase 1 and 27 in phase 2. The numbers of flats due to be released back to housing stock on allocation of Chatham Views and Bob Peliza Mews are 56 and 54 respectively.

The first phase of Hassan Centenary Terraces will deliver 380 apartments and there will be 236 parking spaces available within the footprint of this first phase. This represents an interim shortfall of 144 parking spaces. This will be resolved by the interim allocation of parking spaces in the area.

1670 The tender processes for Bob Peliza Mews and Chatham Views are still active and it is therefore not possible to provide figures for the construction costs for these at this moment. It is anticipated that the Chatham Views process will be completed by the end of this month and that for Bob Peliza Mews next month. The projected construction cost for Hassan Centenary Terraces is of the order of £30 million higher than the original tendered construction cost.

1680 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I will ask the Chief Minister, but also, with you leave ... The reason for this question was that when I asked for this before, he said, 'Ask me in February and I will be able to tell you.' I understand what he says, that he is not yet ready, but he is going to get, hopefully, the end of that construction contracting process this month and possibly next month. I would be happy to file a question next month, subject to the six-month rule and Mr Speaker's leave, if the Chief Minister is happy to indicate to me that he would answer that question.

1685 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have been saying consistently that it is expected around February/March. He has wanted to ask me now. I have no difficulty with him asking next month. I have said that there is, as yet, no contract, so I have no answer to give.

Mr Speaker: I will allow the lodging of a question in March.

1690 Hon. K Azopardi: I am grateful, Mr Speaker. To be clear, the reason I asked this month is precisely because he asked me to ask him in February; it is not a whim of mine.

1695 The estimated projected construction cost of Hassan Centenary is £30 million higher than envisaged, and the reason for that is presumably the increased general construction costs. Is that the reason why? Is the reason that the construction cost was not fixed for all the phases? Why is any impact, which is in the public domain, of the construction costs in today's market increasing? Why wasn't it locked in?

1700 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, we have had this debate in the House already on a number of occasions. The advice I have is if we had locked it in, the amounts we would have suffered of penalties because of our inability to comply with obligations etc. would far exceed the amount that we are having to pay because of inflation in building costs. The Hon. Mr Bossino says comme ci, comme ça from a sedentary position. The advice I have is "Q.S 'd" In other words, the advice I have has been worked out to the pound and we are confident that this is a better result than the losses we would have suffered if we had entered into contracts, which we would not have been able to comply with because of the many eventualities that have occurred since we signed the first Hassan Centenary Terraces contract. If you look at the inflation that there has been in that period, in particular in the building trade but just general inflation, this is in keeping with those costs of inflation.

1710 Hon. K Azopardi: Does this mean, because it is going to cost £30 million more, that the Hassan Centenary Terraces estate is now being constructed at a loss? And will this result in extra financing having to be obtained by the Government?

1715 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, affordable housing is always constructed at a loss. There has been no project of affordable housing which has not been constructed at a loss, not least because we lose the value of the land, because we contribute it at no cost to those who are purchasing property there.

1720 Additionally, most of the estates that we have been involved in – all of the Governments have been involved in – have not factored the cost of infrastructure into the cost of the affordable homes. When provided, that has been subsidised by the taxpayer. As I previously announced in the context of these estates, we have factored the cost of the infrastructure in, in a way that was not done before, so we had an element of a cushion. Therefore, to work out the absolute loss when compared to the estates that they developed or that the GSLP first developed is not a straight calculation of saying this is £30 million more.

1725 That is the situation that we are in, and I have debated with the Hon. Mr Bossino before how any properties that are likely to come into the market now, if they are handed back in, will be recalculated on a cost per metre, which is in keeping with the cost of the Government per metre now and not as it was at the time when we sold it.

1730 Hon. K Azopardi: I am sure he has not answered the part of the question where I asked is it going to result in extra financing.

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker.

1735 Hon. K Azopardi: But presumably, given the explanation he has given, the £30 million extra cost would not have been incurred had the project originally kept to the timescale.

1740 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if the projects had originally kept to the timescale, it would have been because none of the, as we call them in the law, novus actus interveniens would have occurred. That is to say none of the acts that occurred which prevented us from being able to proceed would have occurred, and therefore the question is entirely hypothetical, and I do not think it is appropriate for us to get into hypotheses.

1745 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Damon Bossino, who lodged the question.

Hon. D J Bossino: Yes ... [Inaudible]

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

1750 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, thank you very much. If I could ask the Chief Minister ... £30 million is not loose change. He will forgive me if my memory is a bit sketchy on this because it was a while back. When we discussed the Eruca structure ... I believe he has raised something like £165 million, which is meant to be, effectively, earmarked for this project development, and maybe whatever is left for others. How has this impacted on that structure in the sense that it 1755 now has £30 million less available to it, which I believe – again, my memory may be sketchy on this – was going to be used for some of the other projects, Chatham and Bob Peliza? With the benefit of hindsight, if he had known of this £30 million extra cost, would he have priced the apartments any differently?

1760 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, we do not have the benefit of hindsight in politics. That is to ask me to hypothesise.

1765 I cannot speak to the Eruca structure on my feet, other than from memory, like he is doing. As he knows, a lot of money comes back into the structure as people complete on the 50%, because they pay into the structure and the structure once again has cash. If we had done all of the projects at the same time, the project outlay at one moment would have been higher and all of the money would have come back at the same time. Here, by doing it in phases, we have at least the advantage that some of the money from the purchases comes back – that is to say the 50%

1770 completions come back – in respect of phase 1 before you reach the highest part of spending on phase 2. So it is swings and roundabouts. The structure is funded earlier, with 50% completions for part of HCT, than it would have been if we had completed all of HCT at the same time, because we would have had to push a lot more money out before getting half of the money back in.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Damon Bossino.

1775 Hon. D J Bossino: Grateful, Mr Speaker. In relation to that last question, the £30 million excess amount by way of the price tag, unless the information that I have received is doubtful in relation to this point, does that include a reclamation which needs to be done in relation to one of the blocks, the final block, in phase 2?

1780 Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker.

Hon. D J Bossino: Is he able to confirm the premise of my question that there will require further reclamation to be done in order to complete the final block of phase 2? And if that is the case, how much is that going to cost?

1785 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the agreement in respect of the East Side, where we have already announced publicly that as part of the East Side deal that is being done by the purchaser of the East Side, that reclamation has already been done and the work has already commenced for all of the blocks.

1790 Hon. D J Bossino: Is he saying that the purchaser of the East Side is paying for the reclamation on which the fourth block of phase 2 of Hassan Centenary is going to be built? Is that the case?

1795 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I would have thought that he reads government press releases, especially on something as important as that, especially when he then comes here to say 'If the information that I have been given ...' The information has been given publicly by the Government in a government press release and I refer him to it so that he reads it, understands it and asks me questions in this House which are not in respect of already publicly available information.

1800 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, in relation to Question 229, where he has said in answer to the question that in effect there is a 144 shortfall in parking spaces in respect of the first phase of Hassan Centenary, the keys in respect of which are going to be delivered to purchasers in July of this year, does he not accept that there has been a failure to properly plan in relation to that and it is a case of significant mismanagement?

1810 Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, of course this Government has failed to manage things properly. We are a complete and utter failure. We should not be allowed to continue in office and hon. Members should be ushered in, in great fanfare and with the playing of the Gloria, so that they can come back here to do what they did for eight years between 1996 and 2003, which was to build absolutely no affordable houses.

1815 What we have done is deliver more affordable houses in 12 years than they were able to deliver in 16 years. What we have done is to plan properly, and what we have had to do is deal with a pandemic and with leaving the European Union. But despite that, we are delivering. The shortfall is only an interim shortfall and the reason for the shortfall has nothing to do with planning or failing to manage; it is because of design, because the estate is designed as a whole. If it had not been designed as a whole we would be accused of designing an estate that does not hang together as a whole. Because you are still building a second phase, some of the parking is in an area which is common to the first phase and the second phase, and for that reason you will not be able to 1820 have them on the first day. But in order to have them and to have them properly, we will provide for them in the appropriate way, and nonetheless already have a plan to ensure that those who are purchasers in phase 1 and who might not have parking exactly where it was designated that they should have it will have parking that might even be closer to their homes than the one they will eventually have.

1825 I call that excellent planning. I say it is the right way to deal with the contingency and I say that not everything is a great party political point. Some things are just logistically difficult and it is sometimes logistically difficult to deliver in a timeline when you are dealing with reality and not with the Potemkin village that hon. Members appear to want to be dealing with.

1830 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I will continue to ask questions and hopefully elicit responses.
He has said, not only now but I think in the previous session, that the extra floor at the Eastern Beach car park is designed in part to provide for the shortfall. Is he able to confirm here and now that those 144 spaces will be available when the keys are delivered to residents in July of this year?

1835 Hon. Chief Minister: To the first part of the question, no. To the second part of the question, yes.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

1840 Hon. D J Bossino: I have a supplementary in relation to Question 228 which I would like to ask, which related to the 161 flats that are going to be made available. The Hon. the Chief Minister answered the question very quickly. I think and I hope that I have taken an accurate note of his replies. He has stated which affordable housing developments are going to be releasing which 1845 number of government flats. If you do the addition, is it the case that it is in fact slightly higher than the 161, and it is, in fact, 186? Have I taken a wrong note, or is my maths wrong?

Hon. Chief Minister: What number did he say he got – 189? Mr Speaker, I cannot get to that number however I calculate these. I am sorry.

1850 Hon. D J Bossino: Does the hon. Member get to 161, then?

Hon. Chief Minister: In fact, I get to 159, Mr Speaker. I think that may be because of reallocations etc., but it is 159, 161. Those are the numbers we get. I do not know how on earth 1855 he gets to 186.

Mr Speaker: If I may interject, I think he added the ... said 49 government flats ... released 22 units in phase 1 and 27 in phase 2. Those two together are 49, so he added 49, and 49 plus ... The hon. Member came up with the higher figure.

1860 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, maybe the Hon. the Chief Minister could repeat the reply. I get 49, 27, 56 and 54, so I have probably got a number wrong.

Hon. Chief Minister: I see what he has done, because with the numbers you gave I got to 202 ...
1865 208, sorry. So 49 is the composite of 22 and 27: 22, 27, 54, 56, yes.

Hon. D J Bossino: And then it is 49, 56, 54?

Hon. Chief Minister: Forty nine, 56, 54, yes, if he wants it that way. Yes.

1870 Hon. D J Bossino: And the number slightly lower than the 161 that the Government in previous replies to this House had given would be the direct release of Government's rented accommodation, which would happen once the affordable flats are made available. So then the question is why is there an, albeit slight, discrepancy.

1875 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, because people may have pulled out for some reason. I think that is probably what I have seen. I think that there are two who were going to hand over flats, who are the ones who have pulled out.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, that could lead to having five more flats available because the people who take over might release two or three flats rather than just one, because that is what we give priority to. So that is why everything is an estimation until it is finalised.

1885 Hon. D J Bossino: [Inaudible]

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes.

Q231/2023
Parliament (Amendment No. 2) Bill 2019 –
Whether similar Bill to be brought to Parliament

Clerk: Question 231/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1890 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, does Government intend to bring a Bill to Parliament in the form of or along the lines of the Parliament (Amendment No. 2) Bill 2019?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1895 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Government has no intention of introducing a Bill to increase the number of Members of the Gibraltar Parliament without a further, detailed public consultation process. The question was left to a Select Committee of the Gibraltar Parliament, which has been unable to meet due to the high demands on government time and resources posed by the COVID-19 pandemic and our departure from the European Union, which have logically taken priority. The matter has not been raised by the Leader of the Opposition with me at any time since 2019.

Hon. K Azopardi: I have raised before the issue of the meetings of the Select Committee on Parliamentary Reform. Presumably he accepts that.

1905

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, we had a discussion about it last month where I said I was surprised that he had not pressed me about it before.

1910 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, the Government has from time to time said that there were going to be meetings. Indeed, as far as I can recollect, it was said, just after the COVID Unlock the Rock document, that there were going to be meetings, and they did not take place. It is up to the Government to convene the meetings, is it not?

1915 Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker. We got a majority, we can convene the meetings. We did Unlock the Rock and three months after Unlock the Rock we locked down the Rock again because we had something called a second wave. That was 2020, and in December 2021 we had to lock down again and close down every restaurant in Gibraltar. So despite having a majority, what we have not got is a magic wand.

1920 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q232-33/2023
Blue and green ID cards –
Applications filed and granted in 2022

Clerk: Question 232/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: How many applications for blue ID cards have been filed and granted in 2022?

1925 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Question 233.

Clerk: Question 233/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1930 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, how many applications for green ID cards have been filed and granted in 2022?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1935 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, a total of 1,786 applications for blue civilian registration cards and 1,025 applications for green civilian registration cards have been filed in 2022.

Hon. K Azopardi: And granted – is that right?

1940 Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, that is the figure I have been given as filed and granted.

Q234/2023
Tunnel operating services –
Cost

Clerk: Question 234/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1945 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, is the tender award of 20th January 2023 to Jebel Tarik Security Ltd in the sum of £1,041,912 for tunnel operating services a fixed per annum cost, and what is the reason for the high cost of the contract?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1950 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the sum of £1,014,912 represents the total value of the award for a three-year contract and equates to £347,304 per annum. This represented the most economically advantageous tender in relation to the award criteria published in the tender notice.

1955 Hon. K Azopardi: Oh, I see, it is £347,000 per year, not £1 million a year. I see. All right. As I understand the award, this is a contract to run the control room of the tunnel, and the personnel will be concentrated in the control room. Is that correct?

1960 Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, and the tunnel control room will be manned on a 24/7, 365-days-a-year basis, with two operators manning the control room at all times. They will require extensive specialist training to undertake their role.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

1965 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I would be grateful if the Chief Minister could advise the House why this tunnel requires this level of supervision, whereas obviously we have other tunnels, perhaps a lot longer than this one and a lot older, and they have no supervision at all. What is so special about this particular – we call it a tunnel in a loose sense of the word – construction, as opposed to the much longer other tunnels we have in the Rock?

1970 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it is almost as if the hon. Gentleman were hearing me making the same point to my officials.

1975 Rules as to how tunnels operate have changed and safety standards have changed, and we are required to be able to demonstrate in respect of a new facility – one that is not grandfathered – that we have in place all of the facilities to be able to remove smoke from the tunnel in the event that it is there.

1980 This particular tunnel is also exposed to wave elements and could be flooded at any time. None of our other tunnels could be flooded at any time. The design of this tunnel, which we inherited, is a tunnel by the sea and therefore wave action could overtop and could flood the tunnel completely. The tunnel then has systems and cisterns underneath to be able to take that water.

If it is filled with petrol because there is an escape of a large amount of petrol or fuel inside the tunnel, then there is another cistern that will take petrol and another cistern that will take water. If there is a fire, there are fire retardant cisterns that will operate.

1985 All of those things require to be monitored, not least because the tunnel is under a live, active runway. All of that criteria means that the tunnel cannot be operated in a way that will be deemed to be safe and in keeping with the Government's obligation to operate a safe system unless it is opened with the tunnel control systems manned in this way.

1990 Hon. R M Clinton: Excuse my ignorance, but under what regulations does he refer ...? Are these European regulations or international regulations? What regulations are they?

Hon. Chief Minister: United Kingdom rules which we have adopted in Gibraltar as well, Mr Speaker.

1995 Hon. R M Clinton: So these are UK rules or UK standards –?

Hon. Chief Minister: [Inaudible]

2000 Hon. R M Clinton: But if it is EU rules, presumably it is in our discretion as to whether we want to adopt them or not, if we are no longer in the EU.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, these are health and safety rules, and we can disregard them if we wish. We can simply consider that because it is going to cost £300,000-odd a year, we do not 2005 give a hoot about health and safety and the highest standards and we will put money ahead of people perishing in a barbecue in a tunnel under a runway. However, that is not a serious way to do government, and therefore, having taken advice on the subject, we felt that there was no alternative but to continue to comply with the highest modern UK and European standards of health and safety in respect of the operation of such a tunnel, although we operate much larger tunnels which have opened in previous times when this was not required.

2010 This is not something that we imagined or thought of. When we were elected and we inherited what the Hon. Mr Bossino has called the golden legacy of the GSD, which included the litigation in respect of this tunnel, the litigation in respect of Mid Harbours and the liabilities in respect of the £7 million bond etc., we found a tunnel under construction which included a tunnel control building for exactly this purpose, to be manned in exactly this way, even then priced at a higher per-year amount than the one that we have been able to achieve. So this is what we had. Should we have decided to make a change to the tunnel contract to exclude the tunnel building, we would have suffered a penalty, and so we had no alternative but to progress. Once you have the tunnel building and you have the tunnel control room and you do not operate it, you are exposing yourself to a completely different kettle of liability because you have decided, despite having the safety systems, not to man them if something goes wrong. That would potentially even put the permission that we have obtained from the RAF to go under their runway at risk, because of course we have obtained the permission on the basis that we are going to be able to control a fire in that runway tunnel, if it happens, which protects the integrity of the runway, and that if it floods we are going to be able to deal with it in a particular way, etc. So all of those things are in play and they lead to this part of the golden legacy, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q235/2023

Trade union recognition –
Consultation re legislation

Clerk: Question 235/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

2030 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What consultation has there been with stakeholders and interested parties regarding the legislation on trade union recognition?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

2035 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, firstly, we consulted the public and got popular support for the introduction of trade union recognition legislation at two successive general elections.

2040 Secondly, as I told GBC in an interview on GBC News on Thursday, 2nd February, the Government published a Command Paper on 18th June 2020 in respect of recognition of trade unions, namely the Employment (Trade Union) Regulations 2020, which was Command Paper 2/2020. This is a public document on consultation published in the lifetime of this Parliament, which the hon. Lady should have notice of.

2045 A press release accompanying the publication of the Command Paper invited interested stakeholders to comment on the legislation. To this effect, the Government received multiple comprehensive written submissions highlighting amendments that were subsequently considered by the Government. Submissions were received from Unite the Union; the Gibraltar Chamber of Commerce; the Gibraltar Federation of Small Businesses; the Gibraltar Finance Centre Council, consisting of individual written submissions from the Law Council, the Gibraltar Funds and

2050 Investment Association, the Association of Trust and Company Managers, the Gibraltar Society of Accountants and the Gibraltar Association of Pension Fund Administrators. Furthermore, the Gibraltar Finance Centre Council obtained verbal feedback from the Gibraltar E-Money Association, the Gibraltar Insurance Association, the Society of Trust and Estate Practitioners and the Gibraltar Association of New Technologies. I also met with Unite and with the Chamber on various occasions to discuss this matter as part of our regular engagement.

2055 So there has been very considerable engagement and extensive consultation with stakeholders and interested parties.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, despite all the examples that the Chief Minister cites, there are two very unequivocal press statements, as he will know, from the Gibraltar Chamber of 2060 Commerce and the GFSB, where they accuse the Government of no consultation, no reasonable notice, no mention of implementation for three years, no fair notice of legislative change, correcting the Hon. Minister Linares regarding detailed consultation, saying it is highly regrettable.

These are things that these two very substantial bodies in the private sector have highlighted and are black upon white, so my question would be whether the Chief Minister accepts this 2065 disconnect, at best, that he may have right now with these two bodies and whether he is keen to repair this broken relationship for the sake of future constructivism and consensus.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do not recognise any of what the hon. Lady has suggested.
There is no disconnect between the Government and the Chamber simply because we have a 2070 disagreement as to how much consultation they wanted on this particular thing. We are working with the Chamber on many other things. There is no disconnect between the Government and the Federation of Small Businesses because they say that they wanted more consultation than we have done.

Consultation is something that happens, not something that is necessarily ongoing, and in the 2075 context of the way that we have done this – which is to produce a Command Paper and to have the written submissions and then discuss the written submissions, and then go away and produce a new Bill, publish a new Bill, which permits at least six weeks, if we do not certify it as urgent, for consultation, and explain that the new Bill is going to lead to the regulations – I think we have done more, probably, than any other Government has done in respect of most pieces of legislation 2080 ever passed by this House.

I recognise, of course, that when you take into consideration only part of what you are told by a particular organisation they want in a Bill, they are not happy that you have only taken into consideration part and that they want you to take into consideration everything that they are putting to you. The union feels the same way. The union says it is very pleased with the legislation, 2085 but there are things that they wanted which we have not taken into consideration and things which they put to us in the consultation that we have not taken into consideration. I also do not think that the Government's relationship with the union is broken and needs fixing. It is just that we all have different obligations and we have to push the issues which are relevant either to our members in the context of a union or the context of an employer representative organisation like 2090 the Chamber or the Federation, and we have to do what is sometimes a Solomonic exercise of doing what we think is in the right balance between those two entities to deliver the best legislation for our community. We think we have done that. We think it is appropriate. We have put it to the people in a general election that we will do trade union legislation for the recognition of trade unions in the private sector, and that is what we have done.

2095 Our relationship with the Chamber is a very strong one, with the Federation it is a very strong one and with the union it is a very strong one, but as hon. Members would find if they were ever in government, in government you have to decide. You have to decide between competing interests and you have to decide in a way that is balanced, and that is what we have done. Of course I recognise that people have the right to challenge that and to dispute that we have got 2100 the right balance, but we think we have got the right balance.

As I said also in my interview on GBC, in the United Kingdom this type of legislation was actually done by a Conservative government, a government which therefore is usually the type of government that would be closer to the thinking of a federation of small businesses or a chamber of commerce. In the context of what we are doing in Gibraltar, the union have criticised us because our legislation is sometimes not as generous to them as the UK legislation done by a Conservative government might be, so I think that is a demonstration of us having got the balance right.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the Chief Minister for his reply, but I just wish to remind him that this has nothing to do with me. I am not even actually advocating for any of these bodies. I am just taking the press statements word for word and asking the Chief Minister how he plans to take forward these accusations, which are quite substantial.

Is he saying that he is going to let them subside, instead of facing the issue head on? Is his strategy to just leave it until it is forgotten? Or will he actually engage these bodies in a meaningful way? This is about a breakdown in communication, as I can see, and just trying to repair that relationship with relevant bodies – not that I am actually debating with him the policy angle of it, but just how he will repair this situation.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I just go back to what I have told her. I do not agree with the premise. I do not agree with the way that she thinks that the relationship between the Government, the Chamber and the Federation and the union is at the moment. All of that is entirely wrong. From where I am sitting, we are working very closely with the Chamber and the Federation on other issues and with Unite on other issues, so there is not a breakdown in communication. There is certainly no breakdown of the relationship. Those things are, frankly, fiction and based on her reading of the public statements that have been made on one particular issue, the detail of which I have already explained, when in fact the reality of the relationships is completely different.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I do not want to dwell on the subject matter that the hon. Lady to my left has raised about the discontent from various representative bodies, but would the Chief Minister consider the manner in which the amendment was brought through to the House, in that when he stands up and says the Bill was published and there was six weeks' notice, does he not accept that the notice he gave was for a simple amendment to the employment regulations, if I recall, a one-liner in which the various interested parties and stakeholders, whether it is the unions, the Chamber or the Federation, would not have had the benefit of seeing what the ultimate regulations would look like, whereas of course the Command Paper envisaged the Bill that would be doing exactly what the regulations did? If those regulations had been put in the Bill, it would have allowed all the various stakeholders to peruse it, as he suggests they should have done. I know he is shaking his head from a sedentary position, but wouldn't that have been a better procedure, and therefore, if there was any tweaking to be done, it could have been done before the Bill is read at the final stage, whereas by publishing by way of regulation there is no opportunity for this House even to have had sight of it beforehand?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am going to assume that the hon. Gentleman has just not understood the procedure that we followed. I will explain it again.

We published a Command Paper. The Command Paper was for a Bill. That Bill became regulations, but it was that Bill, which went to consultation, which people gave us feedback on, which resulted in changes proposed by the Chamber, changes proposed by the Federation and changes proposed by the union to the regulations which we then made.

One of the submissions that we had from one of the parties was that it should be regulations, not a Bill, so that if it required amendment we would be able to provide amendment without

2155 having to bring a Bill to the House to further amend a new Act, and it would be possible for a Government to make amendments to those parts of the regulations which needed to be changed in the future without having to go through the legislative process. So the feedback, the consultation, actually led us to the change in the legislative architecture. And then, when we published the Bill, which, as he says, was a one-line Bill, we published it saying this is to make regulations in the form of the Command Paper that we published and was going to be a Bill – we 2160 did not hide away from it – so it was all entirely in keeping with the desire to exchange views with the Chamber, the Federation and the unions, to have their feedback. Part of that feedback was the change in the legislative process.

2165 Nobody was surprised by what was in the regulations because it was the Command Paper with the changes that we had discussed with the parties and we told them we were prepared to make, and then they saw the regulations. Nobody will be surprised, because if they do a document compare between the regulations and the Bill they will see that they are almost identical, except for the changes that have been made as a result of the consultation.

2170 So we think this was a process well done. It was a process in keeping with delivering a manifesto commitment. The manifesto commitment talks about legislation. It does not talk about principal legislation or secondary legislation. We are delivering on a manifesto commitment, and I am just put in mind of the words of the Father of the House, who may or may not be watching us, to say that this is the only place in the world where one gets criticised in Parliament for delivering one's manifesto commitments during a general election campaign.

2175 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful again.

2180 Just a final point. This may be a question of procedure, I guess, for the House in the future, but if there is a Command Paper and people have a legitimate expectation to see a Command Paper to produce a Bill, they would have a legitimate expectation to see a Bill, and then if they are happy or not happy with what is in the Bill, they are able to make representations. What the Chief Minister is telling us is that representations were made and taken into account. But that is not ordinarily the way, in my humble view, that a Command Paper should be driven. You should then produce the Bill, and people then have a final opportunity, where we in this House can debate the merits of the Bill as to whether it does what it says on the tin. Again, I am not getting into the 2185 merits of what it would have said.

2190 The other point he makes is that by doing it by way of regulation it means we can tweak it later on. We get many Bills in this House where there is a little clause at the end that says the Minister may, by regulation, amend this as he pleases, and that is not unusual, so I cannot see how one representation caused the Chief Minister to change the way in which we legislate in this House.
What stakeholder has such influence over the Chief Minister such that he changes the way we legislate?

2195 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if I may say so, with the greatest of respect to the hon.
Gentleman, everything he has said is complete and utter poppycock. Nonsense. A Command Paper can be published in respect of any legislative instrument. Indeed, it could be published about a policy rather than a piece of legislation. A Command Paper is a consultation. It is something published by command of His Majesty in order to take the views of the general public.
So, when we published a Command Paper for a Bill, it did not have to lead to a Bill being published or indeed that Bill. That Bill could have been published with many changes to it, and here the Bill 2200 is published with fewer changes to it but simply not as a Bill.

When we debated the one line and we explained that it was for the purpose of making the Command Paper through legislation, through regulations, something which was clear from the notice that appeared on the Bill, none of the hon. Members opposite said, 'Now that you are about to make this legislation, I would like to talk about what it is that you are going to do with it, 2205 and I would like to know how the regulations you are going to make are different to the Bill that you published in the Command Paper.' None of that. They had the opportunity to do it because we had a debate in this House on that one-line Bill and none of them raised the issue.

2210 And then, of course, the idea that they would happily support a clause in a piece of primary legislation that said that the Minister can change any part of the legislation when he wants is also for the birds, because we have all said to each other that we all believe that that is very bad legislation, that legislation to amend primary legislation through secondary legislation must be maintained within very tight tramlines. It must be used only for very particular purposes. We have only given wide powers on one occasion, and that is the Henry VIII powers that the Deputy Chief Minister and I sought in respect of amendments arising from our departure from the European Union, where we accepted in correspondence and in undertakings to this House that we would only use that regulation-making power to amend primary legislation in very defined circumstances.

2215 And so I think everything the hon. Gentleman has said completely misunderstands the legislative process in its entirety. He is wrong, wrong, wrong.

2220 With that, Mr Speaker, I move that the House should now recess for 15 minutes until 20 past six, when we will take the final set of questions and perhaps move on to other matters on the Order Paper.

Mr Speaker: The House will now recess for 15 minutes and return at 6.20.

The House recessed at 6.10 p.m. and resumed at 6.20 p.m.

BUSINESS, TOURISM AND THE PORT

Q168/2023

Ministry of Tourism trips in 2023 – Details

2225 Clerk: We continue with answers to questions.
Question 168/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Please provide details of the recent trips conducted by the Ministry of Tourism in 2023, to include the destination, who attended, the cost and the purpose of the visit.

2230 Clerk: Answer, the Minister for Business and Tourism.

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, trip 1: destination – United Kingdom; attendees – myself, CEO of Gibraltar Tourist Board Mr Kevin Bossino, and Mr John Reyes for the Ministry of Tourism, who was there for two days of the four-day trip; cost – flights £783.87, and hotel £3,136.50; purpose of the visit – tourism-related meetings and meetings with potential investors.

2235 Trip 2: destination – Italy; attendees – myself and CEO of Gibraltar Tourist Board Mr Kevin Bossino; cost – flights £629.54, and hotel £315; purpose of the visit – cruise related.

2240 Hon. D J Bossino: In relation to, as he puts it, trip 2, and he says it is cruise related, is he able to give further information in relation to that? It may be related to the other questions I have on the Order Paper. That is possible because it is related to Royal Caribbean and what the Minister has done in respect of that. Is he able to provide that reply?

2245 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member is absolutely right, it is related to the next question.

Hon. D J Bossino: Is he able to provide further information in respect of trip 1, where he said that basically he was ...? I think it had to do with potential investments or potential new business.
2250 Is he able to state who he met – he is shaking his head; it is probably commercially sensitive – and whether anything has resulted from that?

Hon. V Daryanani: Yes, Mr Speaker. As the hon. Member will understand, we are always having meetings with potential investors. It is difficult to mention names across the floor ... tourism-related meetings related to marketing and also to introductions with the new CEO. We are still 2255 introducing him to people and our contacts in the industry, so a lot of the meetings are also to do with that and also with the work that he is doing in bringing new contacts to us.

Hon. D J Bossino: Did he provide the House with the dates of those trips? I do not think he did.
2260 That is just a small matter of detail, but is he able to provide to this House any information as to any future visits, or is that not information he would be able to share?

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, when it comes to future visits, sometimes they are planned a couple of weeks in advance, and sometimes ... This trip to Italy was planned 24 hours before I 2265 actually left, so it is difficult to ...

Hon. D J Bossino: Just one final matter of detail. I am not sure he has the information as to the precise dates, but does he have the precise destinations? He says UK and Italy, but I am not too 2270 sure that he has provided the exact cities in those countries.

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, in the question there is no request for dates. I am happy to provide them, of course, if he wishes.
Insofar as the United Kingdom is concerned, it was London, and Italy was Venice.

Q169-71/2023

Royal Caribbean –

Enquiries and plans to mitigate re non-inclusion of Gibraltar in itinerary;
last contact with Department of Tourism

Clerk: Question 169/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.
2275

Hon. D J Bossino: What enquiries has the Government made of Royal Caribbean in respect of its decision not to include Gibraltar in any of its itineraries for 2024?

Clerk: Answer, the Minister for Business and Tourism.
2280

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 170 and 171.

Clerk: Question 170/2023. The Hon. J. Bossino.
2285

Hon. D J Bossino: When was the last time that the Minister for Tourism or anyone in his Department had contact with Royal Caribbean before January 2023?

Clerk: Question 171/2023. The Hon. Miss M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Does government have a plan to mitigate the departure of Royal Caribbean cruise liner stops in Gibraltar?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business and Tourism.

2295

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, the last time I met with Royal Caribbean officials before January 2023 was three months earlier, in October 2022. Approximately two weeks ago, CEO Mr Bossino and I met with Royal Caribbean to discuss their 2024 itinerary.

2300

In answer to the hon. Lady, there is no departure of Royal Caribbean, as she puts it. What we have seen is one brand of the Royal Caribbean Group taking the decision not to stop in Gibraltar during 2024 due to operational reasons. This means that Royal Caribbean will not be operating as they used to in the Western Mediterranean. It is not that Gibraltar has been dropped, it is that this brand of the Royal Caribbean family will be elsewhere in the world for that season. Four of the other brands from Royal Caribbean will continue to visit Gibraltar in 2024.

2305

The Government will continue engaging with all cruise companies to increase calls to Gibraltar, as we have done.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Damon Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, there is quite a lot in that reply which I think is deserving of specific supplementary questions.

When he says that he last visited officials within Royal Caribbean in October 2022, and given what I took as his surprise when I put it to him during the course of the last question and answer session that Royal Caribbean was not coming in 2024, did they not advise him then what their intentions were in relation to the 2024 itinerary?

2315

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I have answered the hon. Member's and the hon. Lady's three questions. Having consulted with Cabinet colleagues and with the CEO of the Tourist Board, the Government would ask hon. Members not to seek to further address this matter across the floor of the House in further supplementary exchanges.

2320

The company in question is a publicly listed company. Any reference to it in our Parliament is scrutinised by shareholders etc. and those advising the company. Understandably, a large multinational corporation such as this prefers not to involve itself in politics, especially when the decision to reposition away from the southern Western Mediterranean has nothing to do with politics, the excellent tourist offering in Gibraltar or anything else Gibraltar specific. A lot of the matters which are the subject of discreet discussion at the moment are, moreover, commercially sensitive. Many people abroad are aware and are listening to statements being made in this House. The Government is clear that such remarks are now prejudicing Gibraltar's opportunities and position.

2325

I am happy to brief the hon. Member and the hon. Lady on a confidential basis in my office tomorrow at 12 noon and answer any questions they may have. Indeed, I believe that we can even work together in some ways that would benefit Gibraltar, and I will not be shy to give them credit if we are able to do so when we see the fruits for Main Street, our transport sector and the whole of Gibraltar.

2330

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, there is a lot there that I do not accept the premise of, but I hear what the hon. Member says.

As to a specific time tomorrow – he says 12 p.m. – I am not sure that I will be available, for example, but it is not necessarily a general invitation that I would necessarily shy away from. I am not saying no to a possible meeting with him to be briefed in relation to this, but I think this is a matter of public interest. It is a matter of public concern.

2345 Just to press him further, is he telling us that the question I posed, which is what elicited that response – I will not describe the response; if we say it was a response ... is he not able to provide that information? I simply said was he not advised in October 2022 of Royal Caribbean’s decision not to come to Gibraltar in 2024? That is the only question I asked. Is he saying that is a veil we cannot pierce because it falls under all the things he has just said, that it is not possible to provide that level of detail? He was surprised when I put it to him in the last question and answer session, so I am assuming and I think he can say that he was not advised in October 2022 of Royal 2350 Caribbean’s decision in relation to the 2024 itinerary.

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member was asking me what I was told in a private meeting with a commercial entity discussing Gibraltar, and as I said, this is something that not only is Royal Caribbean listening to, but all cruising companies are listening to – our competitors 2355 are listening to. He does not expect me to discuss here, across the floor, what I am discussing with cruise companies so that our competitors can also be aware of that. That is why I am telling him I am happy to give him all the information that he wants on a confidential basis, so he knows the work I am doing. I am happy to talk to him whenever he wants.

2360 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, this is a matter of public interest. It does impact heavily in respect of one of our main economic sectors, tourism, and it has elicited a lot of public interest. It is my duty to point out to him these things, but he needs to provide us with the answer, in my view. He has provided some information and I would ask him to perhaps develop that a bit further.

2365 He said, during the course of his answer – I am paraphrasing, and if I am wrong he needs to correct me, but I am paraphrasing – that the decision by Royal Caribbean, and I think I took an accurate note, has nothing to do with Gibraltar’s excellent tourism offering. Is he able to discard that as a possibility? In other words, it is not that Royal Caribbean is not coming to Gibraltar because of anything in respect of our tourism offering? Is that what he is saying?

2370 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, what the Minister has said is that it is not in the public interest of Gibraltar that we continue these exchanges, that he will tell the hon. Gentleman and the hon. Lady why, that there is a way that we might be able to turn this around for Gibraltar but that it has to be relatively discreet at this stage. He has consulted with me and with other Cabinet colleagues. We have agreed that position. It is a position of the Government. It is not a 2375 position that we have taken lightly.

Of course there is interest in people knowing what these issues are. The hon. Gentleman has then asked the Minister to disclose what was said to him in a private meeting with this company. He has then, when the answer has been the same, said, ‘Well, can you tell me whether it is this reason or that reason?’

2380 Mr Speaker, I think that we should be very clear with the hon. Gentleman. We have wanted to be very constructive. We think that there are issues in which governments and oppositions can work together. We think this is one of them. We think there is an opportunity of actually producing something very positive for Gibraltar. We are extending an opportunity for him to come and form part of that discussion. The meeting can be tomorrow at 12, or no doubt we can reschedule it for 2385 when his diary permits him to be able to discharge his functions as a public elected official and come and meet with the Minister. No problem. If he has other things to do which are more important than discharging his functions as an elected official, it is up to him, but that is our position. So I put it to the hon. Gentleman that he should consider the Government’s position as being a position of good faith and of seeking to take the matter forward together for the benefit 2390 of Gibraltar, which is really the public interest of Gibraltar, and that any other interests that he may wish to pursue, any other curiosity, any other answers that he may wish to have at this stage are of interest but not in public interest, because in public interest we all know what it would be.

2395 Any other questions that will be asked, Mr Speaker, will be politely met with the similar invitation to come and work with us and hear the information that we are willing to impart to him and to the hon. Lady discreetly. If he does not want to come and she does, she will be very welcome, as usual, and we will continue to try to work in the interests of Gibraltar and not fall for partisan traps on issues such as this.

2400 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I have to characterise what the hon. Members are doing as nothing but a brick wall response, and I must say I am very surprised because they very often – very often indeed – pray in aid the public interest issue. But this is a matter which is of public interest. It affects and impacts. It is a very serious decision which has been taken by, as he puts it, a very important commercial entity in this sphere, Royal Caribbean, and I think it is proper that this should be fully ventilated in public.

2405 I will continue to ask the questions, which I hope, bearing in mind what the hon. Members have said ... I do not accept their position, but that is the answer that we have had, so I am going to pursue a line of questioning which hopefully will elicit some response. I thought that my previous supplementary question was fair enough and specific. Now I will ask this. I think he said that the Italy visit to Royal Caribbean was to discuss their 2024 itinerary. We know what Royal 2410 Caribbean's position is in relation to 2024, there will be zero visits to Gibraltar, but is he able to provide any information at this stage as to whether Royal Caribbean will change its mind, will change its position in relation to Gibraltar and have visits beyond 2024, which would be something which would be very welcome, certainly by me and on this side of the House?

2415 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the Government does not pray in aid the public interest when it is not in the public interest that we should do so. The Government is very careful before praying in aid the public interest. Nothing could make me happier, given what I know and the hon. Gentleman has told me, to see the Hon. Minister deploy the information that we have and batter the hon. Member around this House, but we believe that it is in everybody's interest, the public 2420 interest, the public interest of our tourist sector, the public interest of our tour operators, of our shore excursion agents, of our Main Street, that we share information that we have – some of it may be what the hon. Gentleman is asking us, but discreetly at this stage for the reasons that the hon. Gentleman has already set out.

2425 The hon. Gentleman, in getting up and insisting, despite what he has been told, is, in my view, demonstrating that he does not care about whether something is in Gibraltar's interest or not, and therefore the Government's answer will remain the answer that I and the Hon. Minister gave a few moments ago. However many times we are asked, however many questions we are asked, all of the information we will impart to the hon. Gentleman tomorrow at midday, or at such other 2430 time as he is able to make himself available to discharge his obligations as a public elected official, in an attempt to work with the Opposition to deliver a better result for Gibraltar, which at the end of the day is why we are here in this House.

2435 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, it is very obvious and clear what the Government is doing. It is as old as the hills. We have seen it before, indeed, in previous administrations when these gentlemen are ... when the hon. Members – excuse me – are in office, but it is very clear what they are doing.

2440 Let me pursue this line of questioning. Is he able to ...? Let me just take umbrage at the characterisation of the intentions, as far as I am concerned. I am not doing this for political reasons. (Laughter and interjections) I am doing this because it is an important matter of public policy and it does have an impact on our economic well-being.

Can I ask the Hon. the Minister for Tourism, who I would assume is the one who had allowed his spokesman from his Department to say that, at the moment – and I am quoting from the Gibraltar Chronicle article on the matter – the ports of Malaga and Cadiz will only receive one call 2445 from the brand in 2024 ...? Will he accept that that is, in fact, incorrect, and that Malaga will be receiving five calls in 2024 and Cadiz three?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hills are alive with the sound of selfishness. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave a few moments ago.

2450 Hon. D J Bossino: By that, do I take it, Mr Speaker, that the Government is not even willing to accept that it was incorrect and imprecise when it said that only one call had been received in Malaga and in Cadiz, which is totally wrong, and that they are not willing to provide that information by way of confirmation that they were wrong because it is contrary to Gibraltar's public interest. Is that really the position?

2455 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave a few moments ago.

2460 Mr Speaker: We are not making much headway here. Just ask a further question and then we will move on to –

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I –

2465 Mr Speaker: I think we need to do things ... I understand, but let's do things as I would like to see them being done. Okay, one final ... and then we will go on to the hon. Lady.

Hon. D H Bossino: Mr Speaker, I agree with the Chair's description that we are certainly making very little headway, but it is what it is.

2470 This is an aspect which, as I have said during the course of my supplementaries, is going to have, I think, an impact in terms of our economic activity in this area. Is he able to confirm across the floor of the House that in fact another commercial entity, Cunard, is not coming to Gibraltar in 2023?

2475 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer we gave a few moments ago.

Hon. D J Bossino: I have another question, but ...

2480 Mr Speaker: As I said before, I do not think we are going to be moving forward in any practical way, so we will now ask the hon. Lady to ask her supplementary.

2485 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, regarding the dimension that I have about a supplementary, it is not actually about Royal Caribbean. They have left, they have taken those slots and it is happened already, but the fact of the matter is that this actually represents a gap for our businesses because they have stopped coming, so my question was moving away from that, actually. Does the Government hold a vision on a strategy to fill this gap at home, be it another tourist product completely?

I am happy to accept an answer now, or I am available to meet the Minister tomorrow.
Thank you.

2490 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Lady for wanting to meet me tomorrow and discuss this further.

2495 Mr Speaker: That completes the oral question and answer session. (Interjection) I beg your pardon, it is my mistake. There is still one, which is Question 172. I beg your pardon.

Q172/2023

Termination of easyJet Edinburgh route –
Discussions held with easyJet or other carriers

Clerk: Question 172/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What discussions have there been, if any, with easyJet or any other air carriers since the Edinburgh route pulled out, in order to mitigate or replace the loss of travellers from this cancelled route?
2500

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business and Tourism.

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, easyJet took the decision to no longer fly the Edinburgh route because it was not financially viable. They have said they will keep the route under review for the future. No discussions have yet taken place with other airlines about this route.
2505

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, does the hon. Member have any data as to how much tourism – not people from our community, how much tourism – we may have lost? Again, I am happy to discuss this at another time if he considers it something that could be counterproductive to be discussed now, but this is the data that I am after in order to understand how this actually impacts our tourist product.
2510

Hon. V Daryanani: I will have to check on the exact date for that, but obviously the fact that easyJet have stopped the route is because the route was not popular enough and they actually made a loss on the route.
2515

Questions for Written Answer

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to table the answers to Written Question W8/2023.

2520 Written Questions W9/2023 to W14/2023 were questions from Mr Clinton to the Hon. Mr Bossano. Those are not yet ready and Mr Bossano is not available to answer questions in this House which are oral questions, so I wonder whether we might have a discussion about how we deal with those within the five-day window for decision, and indeed even the written questions that would usually have been available for distribution at this stage.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I obviously wish Sir Joe well and that he recovers as soon as possible.

2530 I am happy to take the oral questions that I had tabled for Sir Joe as written, and if I can have those as soon as they are available I would be grateful if I would be allowed leave to ask supplementary questions on those in due course.

Mr Speaker: Absolutely. At the next meeting of the House, in March, any supplementary questions arising from the questions which have been converted into written questions will be allowed in the form of questions.

2540 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can I just get clarity? There were a couple of questions of mine that have not arisen, but one of them in particular I would not have thought would ordinarily have been answered by Sir Joe, so I just want some clarity from the Government as to whether they are taken by Sir Joe, because one of them in particular ... There are two questions. One is on changes to the pension rates for married and unmarried couples. That might be a Sir Joe question, I accept that, and might be on his list. But there is another one, where I was asking Government to consider introducing regulations on the registration of personal details of reload or burner phones. I do not know whether that would be taken by Sir Joe.

2545 Hon. Chief Minister: Communications.

Hon. D A Feetham: I would opt to defer the questions to the next session of Parliament.

2550 Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member in the Opposition wish to defer their questions? They can be asked at the next meeting of the House.

2555 Hon. K Azopardi: For clarification before I make my decision, Mr Speaker, if we ask for a written answer, will we be able to ask supplementaries on it next time?

Mr Speaker: Absolutely. That is the ruling we did in the past, yes.

2560 Hon. K Azopardi: For clarity, on the basis that we file fresh questions or on the basis that we can get up and ask questions?

Mr Speaker: Fresh questions.

Hon. K Azopardi: Well, then, Mr Speaker, I will ask for answers to be supplied to my questions.

2565 Mr Speaker: Written answers? This is for the Hon. Damon Bossino also? You want it in written ...?

Hon. D J Bossino: [Inaudible]

2570 Mr Speaker: Right. And I think in respect of Roy Clinton, yes, the same.
The only change in that is the Hon. Daniel Feetham, who will want to ask the questions at the next meeting of the House.

Adjournment

2575 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I move that the House should now adjourn until tomorrow at 5.30 in the afternoon.

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question, which is that this House do now adjourn to Wednesday, 15th February at 5.30 p.m.

I now put the question, which is that this House do now adjourn to Wednesday, 15th February at 5.30 p.m. Those in favour?

2580 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can I just —?

Several Members: Aye.

2585 Hon. K Azopardi: Sorry, can I just clarify on a point of order because I thought last time when we had spoken there was quite an explanation given about supplying the business Agenda of the House so that people can plan their diaries. Yesterday we were given the business Agenda, which said that we would take some business today and some business tomorrow, and then about 15 minutes before today's session we were served with a new agenda, which told us that we were taking all the business today. It was only 15 minutes' notice, but if that is the reorganisation on the basis that we had time to do it ... we thought that we were going to take the whole Agenda. But suddenly we are now back tomorrow without any advance notice. It is not what I thought the break and new rules were going to do. I thought that we were going to organise ourselves properly and I do not understand why it is necessary to give us such short notice of it.

2595 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, there is nothing I can do. They took three hours to ask me questions. Looking at the number of questions and the subjects and the answers I had, I thought we could deal with them in an hour to an hour and a half, and therefore we would have an extra hour and a half to deal with questions. We also have said that we do not want to sit very late if we can avoid it, because that is also not conducive to being able to have the best business practices. People need to be able to go to their families etc. We feel that if we start now with the motion etc., we are going to be here until nine or 10 at night, and that is not conducive. Unfortunately, Mr Speaker, they did not give us any notice that they were going to keep me for three hours instead of one, and so ... I do not mind, I enjoy it, I answer for three hours, but that means that we are three hours closer to the late evening. That is why the timetable says it is published in order to assist the public but parliamentary business may have to change at short notice or may be delayed by the length of debates, and as a result we have to come back tomorrow. I am sorry to impinge on their Wednesday.

2610 Mr Speaker: If I may comment on that, I would like to see the system that has recently been introduced, which has been working fairly well, continue.

Hon. D J Bossino: Just insofar as diary management is concerned for tomorrow, if the Government might indicate what their position is on the motion and we can ... It might be helpful.

2615 Hon. Chief Minister: We look forward to the debate is our position, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: We are going to continue with the procedure for the adjournment. I believe the hon. Lady wishes to say something.

2620 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I would just like to put on Hansard that, to me, this new arrangement gives us no more clarity than it did before. In fact, it is more confusing, I would have thought. We had three days, then we were told two, now it is three. From where I am at, from seeing that yesterday as an example, I thought I had the evening to prepare for the motion tomorrow. Then I came in, I started rushing, I wrote it, and then we were told otherwise from the paper, and then we are back. To me, if anything, it seems a little disrespectful to this side of the House because we keep catching up ... We are supposed to have enhanced communications with this, and it is actually more confusing.

2630 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the Government is trying to give hon. Members more notice than we have to of the business of the House, to enable them to plan their lives better. We are also trying not to sit very late, to enable them to have a family life, which is also something that is important. Instead of keeping them here for three days, we tried to keep them here for two days because we thought the business could all be resolved in two days. We are down one Member of the Government, so there is one set of questions less.

2635 I am very sorry that, for what they earn, they feel it is terrible that they have to come three times a month to the House. (Interjections) I am very sorry. We will continue to do our best to provide as much advance notice as we can, but if the questions take longer than is reasonable, then the session takes longer than is reasonable and we cannot finish in the time allotted, and that affects their timetable.

2640 The disrespect comes from people who, from a sedentary position, make remarks across the floor of the House designed simply to try to drown out (Interjections) why the Government is explaining we cannot keep the standards –

Hon. K Azopardi: [Inaudible] to this House and to the Members of the House.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition is behaving like a bar room lawyer. He is shouting from a sedentary position simply because he thinks that coming tomorrow is too much of an effort. (Interjection by Hon. K Azopardi) Well, I move that the House adjourn to tomorrow, that we come for three days this month and that they earn their keep for once – that they earn their keep, that they realise that this Parliament is the place where we debate, that we debate properly and that we have a consideration of all of the issues that are relevant, and let us consider what are the issues that are in the public interest of Gibraltar and not what the hon. Member wants to do. (Interjection by Hon. K Azopardi)

2650 I put it to him that the best thing he could do is to calm down and settle down and not continue to shout (Interjection by Hon. K Azopardi) from the position where he is standing up when another Member is already speaking and on their feet, which is contrary to the Rules of the House, (Interjection by Hon. K Azopardi) because in this House, when a Member is on their feet, nobody should be trying to make them [inaudible]. (Interjection by Hon. K Azopardi) One Member standing up should be respected and the other Member should sit down. That is exactly what the Rules of the House provide for and what we are not seeing from a Leader of the Opposition who has behaved really like no other Member of this House has behaved in all of the time I have been here, in a boorish and improper fashion.

2655 This is the sort of thing that gives politics a bad name. It gives all of us a bad name out there. We should behave with respect to each other. We are trying to bring a new system to this House so that people know when they have to be prepared, people know when they are going to be facing a Bill. What we are being asked to do by the manner of behaviour of Members opposite is to go back to the way that they used to run the House, which was to surprise everyone with the Agenda when they wanted to. We will not behave like that. We will try to continue to act in keeping with your ruling, Mr Speaker, and try to stick to an agenda. But where we cannot, we cannot, in particular where we cannot because they have kept us longer on some subjects, of which we make no complaint – they are entitled to. We make no complaint, but we then cannot stick to the Agenda. If we say something is going to happen at four o'clock and they are still asking us questions at five o'clock, then it cannot happen, and the hon. Gentleman should not be so upset about that. He should realise that there are exigencies that apply to the way the timetable is planned and delivered against and we should really not be giving this sort of show to the public, because that is what turns them off all politicians.

2670 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am not giving a show to any –

2680 Mr Speaker: Hold –

Hon. K Azopardi: I am not cross on the issue.

2685 Mr Speaker: Please resume your seat. If the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition wishes to speak, then he seeks my authority to rise and say a few words.

Hon. K Azopardi: I thought I had.

Mr Speaker: Well, you had not, but anyway, you are asking now – fine.

2690

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am not cross and I understand when things need to be shifted. The reason for my reaction is because the hon. Member goes beyond making the point that he did, that the Agenda needed to change for a legitimate reason. He made a big song and dance about the rules changing to help everybody, but then he mucks the Members on this side of the House around by moving the Agenda around in the way that has been discussed. That is the issue.

2695

The more fundamental issue is that the reason I reacted in the way that I did is because he disrespects Members on this side of the House by raising the issue of our salaries and what we earn and all of that. We never make that point. We never say that they earn double or triple what we earn, and for that reason they should be doing this, that and the other. We never raise that because that is what gives politics a bad name, when people talk about the salaries of the Members on this side or that side. He does that for effect and he knows it. He knows he does that, and he overextends himself deliberately. So he is the one who is giving politics a bad name sometimes – not always, but sometimes he does, and he does it deliberately, Mr Speaker.

2700

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, in rounding up on –

Mr Speaker: A final word.

2710

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am rounding up on the adjournment. I think that the Government's desire to bring a structured timetable to this process is one that is entirely laudable. I think that the Opposition have understood, at least in the way that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition has now presented it, that where we are unable to keep to the timetable it is not because we want to muck them about, although he has also said that we muck them about. I do not know how it is that we muck them about by continuing to answer their questions, which is what puts us off the timetable that we try to provide for them. The reality is that this is chaff. What matters is that we are going to be dealing with legislation and motions tomorrow, that we want to be able to do that in a way that is efficient.

And yes, Mr Speaker, frankly, I do not think that it is unfair to refer to the fact that hon. Members earn a salary to be Members of this House and that they come for three days a month. It is not true that our salaries are not referred to. We have had our salaries referred to by hon. Members opposite on a number of occasions, as Hansard will disclose. Frankly, I am one of the ones who believes that every Member of this House is entitled to draw a remuneration for being a Member of this House, but they are also entitled to be asked by their constituents and by their fellow parliamentarians to understand that they draw a salary to be Members of this House and therefore, when they are asked to be in this House, they should not be complaining that they are being asked to be in this House.

2725

With that, Mr Speaker, I move that the House should now adjourn to tomorrow at 5.30.

2730

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question, which is that this House do now adjourn to Wednesday, 15th February at 5.30.

I now put the question, which is that this House do now adjourn to Wednesday, 15th February at 5.30. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

This House will now adjourn to Wednesday, 15th February at 5.30.

The House adjourned at 7.00 p.m.

Order of the Day

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Medical (Group Practice Scheme) (Amendment) Bill 2022 – First Reading approved

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Wednesday, 15th February 2023.

(ix) Bills – First and Second Reading.

5 A Bill for an Act to amend the Medical (Group Practice Scheme) Act to ensure that the dependants of persons registered on the Group Practice Medical Scheme by virtue of undertaking a full-time academic course at the University of Gibraltar will not be considered dependants under the Medical (Group Practice Scheme) Act.

The Hon. the Minister for Digital, Financial Services, the Health Authority and Public Utilities.

10 Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola):
Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Medical (Group Practice Scheme) Act to ensure that the dependants of persons registered on the Group Practice Medical Scheme by virtue of undertaking a full-time academic course at the University of Gibraltar will not be considered dependants under the Medical (Group Practice Scheme) Act be read a first time.

15 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Medical (Group Practice Scheme) Act to ensure that the dependants of persons registered on the Group Practice Medical Scheme by virtue of undertaking a full-time academic course at the University of Gibraltar will not be considered dependants under the Medical (Group Practice Scheme) Act be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Medical (Group Practice Scheme) (Amendment) Bill 2022 – Second Reading approved

25 Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola):
Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the Bill for the Medical Group Practice Scheme (Amendment) Act 2022 be read a second time.

This short Bill introduces a change that is required in order to establish that a person will not be able to register on a medical group practice scheme established under the Medical Group Scheme Act by virtue of being the dependent of a student enrolled on a full-time academic course at the University of Gibraltar.

30 The Bill, in conjunction with supporting amendments to its subsidiary legislation, as well as the Bill for an Immigration, Asylum and Refugee (Amendment) Act 2022, will put the University of Gibraltar on a competitive financial footing with its counterparts in the UK by offering those on a full-time academic course at the University who also require private medical insurance the option to pay for access to our own medical scheme.

35 These changes are beneficial to all parties involved and are a clear sign of Government's continued commitment to Gibraltar and its educational institutions.

Mr Speaker, I commend this Bill to the House.

40 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. Elliott Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I thank the Hon. Minister in relation to his explanation. He did kindly explain the rationale yesterday and this Bill will enjoy the support of the Opposition.

45 Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

50 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I have not understood this and I would appreciate it if the Hon. the Minister might explain by reference to an example that I am just going to put to him. Honestly, I just have not understood the purpose of the Bill. For example, if one of our children at university, God forbid, contracts cancer or something like that, would they be able to be treated through the GHA in the normal way – in other words, at public expense in Gibraltar – or would they, because they are in full-time education at university, have to go through the NHS in the UK, which, God forbid, is in a worse state than the GHA here in Gibraltar?

55 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Gilbert Licudi.

Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Speaker, thank you.

60 The explanatory memorandum talks of somebody not being a dependent for the purposes of the Medical Group Practice Scheme Act by virtue of being a dependent of a person enrolled at the University of Gibraltar on a full-time academic course. The actual amendment that is being made refers to someone who is enrolled at the University of Gibraltar on a full-time academic course who has been charged and paid the student health surcharge to the University of Gibraltar. Could I ask the Minister simply to confirm that the reference to persons on a full-time academic course

65 in Gibraltar does not include those Gibraltar residents who are already part of the scheme, notwithstanding that they are enjoying a full-time academic course at the University? In other words, there may be circumstances where there may be foreign students who come and undertake a full-time academic course at the University of Gibraltar. They are charged the student health surcharge and therefore their dependents are not entitled to be treated as dependents for 70 the purposes of the scheme. So it is not the case – and I would just ask the Minister to clarify that it is not the case – that this applies to any person carrying out a full-time academic course, for example the children of Mr Feetham or anybody else who is enrolled under the scheme, but only those who come from abroad and are charged this particular surcharge.

75 Mr Speaker: Does the mover of the Bill wish to respond?

Hon. A J Isola: Yes, Mr Speaker, I will respond. I will confirm to my hon. Friend and colleague Mr Licudi that that is indeed the case. The Bill solely strikes at those who are not already members of the GPMS scheme and who come from outside, and therefore are not otherwise eligible for membership of the scheme, to become members of the scheme if they make the contribution and if they are in full-time education at the University of Gibraltar. That is the sole purpose of the Bill and those are the only people affected by it.

I am not sure I quite understood the hon. Member's question. This has no impact on any of our students outside. It is simply –

Hon. A J Isola: Yes, it simply applies here in Gibraltar in respect of those coming into the jurisdiction, not members of the scheme who wish to be members of the scheme. They will have to pay both full-time education and the contribution. I hope that –

Hon. A J Isola: Thank you.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Medical (Group Practice Scheme) Act to ensure that the dependants of persons registered on the Group Practice Medical Scheme by virtue of undertaking a full-time academic course at the University of Gibraltar will not be considered dependants under the Medical (Group Practice Scheme) Act be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Medical (Group Practice Scheme) (Amendment) Act 2022.

Medical (Group Practice Scheme) (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) (Amendment) Bill 2020 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) Act 1995 in order to extend the functions of the Maritime Administrator for the purposes of compliance with instruments of the International Maritime Organisation, and in particular, the IMO Instrument Implementation Code (III Code, Resolution A.1070(28)).

The Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port.

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) Act 1995 in order to extend the functions of the Maritime Administrator for the purposes of compliance with instruments of the International Maritime Organisation, and in particular, the IMO Instrument Implementation Code (III Code, Resolution A.1070(28)) be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) Act 1995 in order to extend the functions of the Maritime Administrator for the purposes of compliance with instruments of the International Maritime Organisation, and in particular, the IMO Instrument Implementation Code (III Code, Resolution A.1070(28)) be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) (Amendment) Act 2020.

Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) (Amendment) Bill 2020 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Merchant Shipping Act 1995 be read a second time.

The Bill, together with the next Bill on the Order Paper to amend the Gibraltar Port Authority Act 2005, introduces obligations on the Gibraltar Maritime Administrator and Gibraltar Port Authority respectively to (a) assign responsibilities to monitor, update and revise policy in order to comply with International Maritime Organisation obligations and (b) to advise the Government on the legislation, guidance and procedures required to ensure the consistent implementation and verification of the IMO obligations.

In short, this Bill and the Bill to amend the Gibraltar Port Authority Act 2005 impose duties on the Gibraltar Maritime Administrator and Gibraltar Port Authority to ensure that laws and policies are implemented as required by the IMO. The reason why the amendment is required in both Acts is because each Act deals with different areas of responsibility which broadly align with the different responsibilities held by the Gibraltar Maritime Administrator and the Gibraltar Port Authority.

The Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) Act imposes obligations on the Maritime Administrator, a statutory post which heads the Gibraltar Maritime Administration. The GMA is responsible for what are described in the maritime industry as flag state and port state matters. The term 'flag state' refers to matters of vessel registration and compliance with standards required in order to be registered under the Gibraltar flag and to maintain that flag. The term 'port state' addresses the responsibility to exercise prospective enforcement action over foreign vessels within the Gibraltar port. The amendment to the Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) Act therefore imposes on the GMA the obligation to ensure the implementation of laws and policies in relation to flag state and port state matters.

Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. Elliott Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, again, in relation to this Bill the Hon. the Minister has consulted with us on a number of occasions now, given the certain complexities in relation to this Bill, and I am happy that the Opposition will support the Bill.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill?

I call on the mover to respond.

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Mr Phillips, who has been very helpful. We spoke a couple of times and I am happy for the support of the Opposition.

Thank you.

165 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) Act 1995 in order to extend the functions of the Maritime Administrator for the purposes of compliance with instruments of the International Maritime Organisation, and in particular, the IMO Instrument Implementation Code (III Code, Resolution A.1070(28)) be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) (Amendment) Act 2020.

Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) (Amendment) Bill 2020 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

175 Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

Gibraltar Port Authority (Amendment) Bill 2020 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Port Authority Act 2005 in order to extend the functions of the Gibraltar Port Authority for the purposes of compliance with instruments of the International Maritime Organisation, and in particular, the IMO Instrument Implementation Code (III Code, Resolution A.1070(28)).

The Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Port Authority Act 2005 in order to extend the functions of the Gibraltar Port Authority for the purposes of compliance with instruments of the International Maritime Organisation, and in particular, the IMO Instrument Implementation Code (III Code, Resolution A.1070(28)) be read a first time.

185

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Port Authority Act 2005 in order to extend the functions of the Gibraltar Port Authority for the purposes of compliance with instruments of the International Maritime Organisation, and in particular, the IMO Instrument Implementation Code (III Code, Resolution A.1070(28)) be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

190

195 Clerk: The Gibraltar Port Authority (Amendment) Act 2020.

Gibraltar Port Authority (Amendment) Bill 2020 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Port Authority Act 2005 be read a second time.

200 The Gibraltar Port Authority Act 2005 establishes the Gibraltar Port Authority and details the duties and responsibilities to be undertaken by it. The nature of the responsibilities carried out by the Gibraltar Port Authority are described in the maritime industry as coastal state matters. This term incorporates areas such as ensuring the safety of navigation to protect the environment, guarding against maritime pollution, and protection of the security of coastal populations. The amendment to the Gibraltar Port Authority Act 2005 therefore imposes on the GPA the obligation 205 to ensure the implementation of laws and policies in relation to coastal state matters.

Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. Elliott Phillips.

210

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, briefly, the Opposition will support the Bill.

Mr Speaker: Does the hon. Member wish to respond?

215 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, once again, I am grateful to the Hon. Mr Phillips. We discussed this yesterday and on a few occasions before that.

Thank you very much.

220 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Port Authority Act 2005 in order to extend the functions of the Gibraltar Port Authority for the purposes of compliance with instruments of the International Maritime Organisation, and in particular, the IMO Instrument Implementation Code (III Code, Resolution A.1070(28)) be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

225 Clerk: The Gibraltar Port Authority (Amendment) Act 2020.

Gibraltar Port Authority (Amendment) Bill 2020 –

230 Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

COMMITTEE STAGE AND THIRD READING

Clerk: Committee Stage and Third Reading. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bills clause by clause: the Medical (Group Practice Scheme) (Amendment) Bill 2022, the Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) (Amendment) Bill 2020 and the Gibraltar Port Authority (Amendment) Bill 2020.

In Committee of the whole House

Medical (Group Practice Scheme) (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Clauses considered and approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Medical (Group Practice Scheme) Act to ensure that the dependants of persons registered on the Group Practice Medical Scheme by virtue of undertaking a full-time academic course at the University of Gibraltar will not be considered dependants under the Medical (Group Practice Scheme) Act.

240 Clauses 1 to 3.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Chairman, I assume they get picked up in 2023 and I have no need to make reference to them.

245 Mr Chairman: I am grateful that you have brought it up. The title of the Act is shown as 2022 and the hon. Gentleman is saying that that should be amended to read 2023.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, we have this discussion on a number of occasions. The Bill has the date of publication. The Act, when it is passed, is published with the date of publication of passing of the Act. It is not a point that we need to make. I am grateful that it is made, but we do not need to make it.

250

Mr Chairman: Clauses 1 to 3 stand part of the Bill.

255 Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: The long title stands part of the Bill.

Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) (Amendment) Bill 2020 –
Clauses considered and approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Merchant Shipping Act and the Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) Act 1993.

260 Clauses 1 to 4.

Mr Chairman: Clauses 1 to 4 stand part of the Bill.

265 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Chairman, are we dealing with the Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) Act?

Mr Chairman: Yes.

270 Hon. G H Licudi: Just one point. In relation to clause 4, I would propose a very minor amendment. At the very end it says:

for the purposes of this sub-section, the Maritime Administrator may arrange for the discharge of any of its functions ...

and it seems to me that it should say 'any of his functions'. The Maritime Administrator is an individual. In fact, the Gibraltar Merchant Shipping Registration Act provides that the Minister 'shall appoint and may remove an officer to be styled the Maritime Administrator and confer upon him powers', and therefore this should say any of 'his' functions' rather than 'its' functions.

275 Mr Chairman: The hon. Lady.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Instead of 'his' ... It could well be a female or a male.

280 Hon. G H Licudi: Mr Chairman, as I understand it, the Interpretation and General Clauses Act deals with that, and in fact the legislation that we have in relation to the Maritime Administrator deals with 'his' functions and anything that is conferred upon 'him'. Clearly, when we say 'he' in legislation, 'he' includes 'she' or 'them'.

285 Mr Chairman: Hon. Elliott Phillips, do you have a ...? No. Clause 4, as amended, stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

290 Mr Chairman: The long title stands part of the Bill.

Gibraltar Port Authority (Amendment) Bill 2020 –
Clauses considered and approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Gibraltar Port Authority Act 2005 in order to extend the functions of the Gibraltar Port Authority for the purposes of compliance with instruments of the International Maritime Organisation, and in particular, the IMO Instrument Implementation Code (III Code, Resolution A.1070(28)).

295 Clauses 1 to 4.

Mr Chairman: Clauses 1 to 4 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

300 Mr Chairman: The long title stands part of the Bill.

Medical (Group Practice Scheme) (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) (Amendment) Bill 2020 –
Gibraltar Port Authority (Amendment) Bill 2020 –
Third Reading approved: Bill passed

Clerk: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

305 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to report that the Medical (Group Practice Scheme) (Amendment) Bill 2022, the Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) (Amendment) Bill 2020 and the Gibraltar Port Authority (Amendment) Bill 2020 have been considered in Committee and agreed to with some amendments, and I now move that they be read a third time and passed.

310 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that the Medical (Group Practice Scheme) (Amendment) Bill 2022, the Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) (Amendment) Bill 2020 as amended, and the Gibraltar Port Authority (Amendment) Bill 2020 be read a third time and passed.

Those in favour of the Medical (Group Practice Scheme) (Amendment) Bill 2022? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

315 Those in favour of the Gibraltar Merchant Shipping (Safety, etc.) (Amendment) Bill 2020? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Those in favour of the Gibraltar Port Authority (Amendment) Bill 2020? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTION

Miscarriage, ectopic and molar pregnancies – Amended motion carried 320 Clerk: Private Member's motion. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name, which reads as follows:

THIS HOUSE:

NOTES that Gibraltar legislation does not currently provide for a legal right to paid leave for parents who are grieving the loss of a pregnancy before 24 weeks.

NOTES that His Majesty's Government previously introduced a legal entitlement to two weeks paid leave for working parents in respect to the loss of a child of any age or those who suffer a stillbirth from 24 weeks of pregnancy commonly referred as 'Jack's Law'.

NOTES the introduction of groundbreaking legislation in New Zealand to provide workers with three days' paid leave in the event of miscarriage.

NOTES that a Bill for the provision of miscarriage leave has been presented by Angela Crawley Member of Parliament for Lanark and Hamilton East before the British Parliament.

NOTES that the loss of a baby by miscarriage is a devastating experience for families and for some in our community miscarriage is tragically not a singular event.

NOTES that whilst employers and organisations in Gibraltar are sensitive to the grief and loss associated with miscarriage and may have made provision in the context of their employment policies and practices, it is important that support by way of paid leave be enshrined in Gibraltar law for those persons who have suffered the devastating loss of a pregnancy before 24 weeks.

AND CALLS on His Majesty's Government to present either: (1) a Bill before the House to make provision by way of: (i) the introduction of new legislation; or (ii) amendment to employment and/or benefits legislation for paid leave for people who have experienced miscarriage, ectopic pregnancy or molar pregnancy; or in the alternative (2) to amend secondary legislation such as for example, the Employment (Maternity and Parental Leave and Health & Safety) Regulations 1996, amongst others, pursuant to powers provided to the Minister responsible under any Act(s) to widen the scope of the same to make provision for paid miscarriage leave.

Mr Speaker: At this stage, you simply speak on the motion.

325 Hon. E J Phillips: I know, Mr Speaker. [Inaudible] motion, of course, because obviously I filed an amendment to the motion to extend miscarriage leave insofar as those pregnancies where it was recognised by a medical practitioner and advised by a medical practitioner that they were not viable. I have spoken with the learned Leader of the Opposition and he will introduce that amendment at the relevant time, but I certainly can make my main contribution now.

330

Mr Speaker: Please proceed.

Hon. E J Phillips: It is important for us to reflect on the route that this motion has taken. On Monday, 6th February 2023, some 10 days ago, I filed a motion in the terms I have set out and I emailed both the Chief Minister and the hon. Lady, copying in the Leader of the Opposition, to ensure that we secure cross-party agreement to the motion standing in my name. I remain confident that the motion can and indeed should enjoy cross-party support because it ensures that those who suffer the devastating effects of pregnancy loss up to 24 weeks can be provided with support in the form of paid bereavement leave. There can, in my view, be no justification, on 335 any objective analysis, for the Government not joining with the Opposition and the hon. Lady on this issue, and any disagreement on the principle is simply playing party politics.

Mr Speaker, by way of background, I filed a motion on this subject because it is the right thing to do and I have been previously encouraged by the Chief Minister himself to use this parliamentary process as a more efficient way than utilising a Private Member's Bill. In the past, 345 the Chief Minister has attempted to dissuade me from using a Private Member's Bill given the Opposition do not have at their disposal a drafting team, which is of course readily available to the Government. On that occasion I agreed and proceeded by way of motion. I have sought to repeat the same process, allowing the Government to lead on the legislative process. It now seems likely that I am about to be criticised for introducing a motion and doing my job for my community.

350

It was suggested by the Hon. the Chief Minister yesterday that he was not happy that I did not obtain his consent to file a motion. That comment yesterday from him, the Chief Minister, was disappointing and I expected better, particularly given that we were talking about bereavement loss. It has never, thankfully, been the custom or practice of this House for a Member of this House to seek the Chief Minister's consent to file a motion, and therefore the Chief Minister's emotional 355 response from a sedentary position should be of deep regret to anyone who purports to have the democratic interests of this community at their core. Whilst I do not seek the Chief Minister's consent, which I am in any event not required to do, I did extend him the courtesy of now 10 days to reflect on the Government's position and provide the hon. Members opposite the opportunity to support my motion, which, in light of yesterday's skirmishes in this House on timetabling, is, as 360 I am sure Mr Speaker will agree, more than reasonable.

365

I am pleased to report to this House that my motion enjoys the support of the hon. Lady, who has constructively engaged with me on this subject. I thank her for her collaboration and look forward to her contribution this evening. I also look forward to further collaborating with the hon.
Lady on areas which are of collective good for our community.

370

Pregnancy loss at any stage of a pregnancy can have a devastating effect on any couple expecting the birth of a child. Statistically, one in eight pregnancies result in miscarriage, one in 90 are ectopic and one in every 20 is a stillbirth. Tragically, some people have experienced all three. For a number of families, pregnancy loss or miscarriage before 24 weeks is sadly not a one-off occurrence, doubling the pain and suffering for those who have gone through that experience.
It is right that we, as a community, recognise that parents in these circumstances may need 370 additional support, and I have no doubt that workplaces and organisations around Gibraltar understand the trauma and the need to allow parents the time and space to grieve the loss of a pregnancy.

375 As this House has recognised previously, the Government committed to the introduction of bereavement loss for pregnancies beyond 24 weeks. The Government went beyond that provision that was provided for in the United Kingdom and they recognised that bereavement should apply irrespective of the age of the child, be it 25 weeks, 18 years or 37 months, and I congratulate the hon. Members opposite for extending that beyond the 24-week period.

380 As the law currently stands, there is no legal entitlement to any leave or pay in circumstances where the pregnancy loss occurs before 24 weeks. What my motion seeks to do today is simply to encourage the Government to recognise that the trauma associated with pregnancy loss can happen at any stage of pregnancy and therefore it is right that this House promotes primary or secondary legislation that introduces an entitlement to paid bereavement leave before 24 weeks. What I am essentially asking is for the Government to close the gap. As the position currently 385 stands, we are leaving employers and organisations to add pregnancy loss to their policies and to make reasonable adjustments where necessary.

As a community we have not tackled this question, but it has been and is being addressed in other countries, including the United Kingdom, where the Bill is going through the various stages in the Westminster Parliament. Thus far, those countries that have not introduced a provision for 390 statutory paid bereavement leave have, as I have just said, left the matter to individual companies to extend pregnancy loss bereavement as an employee benefit. In my view, providing employers with the choice or discretion as to whether they wish to create or extend their own benefit schemes and employment policies to make provision for bereavement leave before 24 weeks can create a two-tier system where larger and more competitive industries are likely to offer more 395 enhanced benefits as opposed to smaller employers, who may wish, for whatever reason, not to make the provision. We cannot allow for a two-tier system to be created and we must make provision for a level playing field in respect of this. We cannot leave it to the discretion of employers as to whether they will support working parents who suffer loss in this way, and it is right that statute and/or regulation intervene in this way, as I have suggested.

400 Lastly, I would like to publicly acknowledge the hard work of Baby Steps Gibraltar, who have campaigned on this issue in the past, and to express my deep sympathy to all parents who have suffered and are suffering the loss of pregnancy in our community. It is hoped that this small but very important provision will go some way in supporting grieving parents in the workplace.

I commend my motion to the House, Mr Speaker.

405

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. E J Phillips.

The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition. We are going to deal with the amendment first.

410 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, as my hon. colleague to my right indicated, after further reflection – and I believe a draft of this has been circulated to hon. Members in the House with the tracked change – we are moving an amendment to the motion that stands in my colleague's name:

To add the words 'or where a pregnancy is determined by a medical practitioner to be unviable before 24 weeks' in the last paragraph and striking out the 'or' before 'molar'.

415 I think the hon. Members have a copy of this letter dated 14th February in front of them – they should have a copy of it – and the reasons are as explained by my hon. colleague.

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question in terms of the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition.

420 I put the question in terms of the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

What the House now has before it is the original motion as amended. Does any hon. Member wish to speak on the motion – the original and the amendment? The Hon. the Chief Minister.

425 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, this motion comes before the House with the Government having been given notice of it but not having been consulted on whether or not we would support it if it was brought. I think it is important that I deal with that issue because I have never asked any Member of this House – indeed, even on this side of the House – that they should seek my consent before they do any of the things that they are empowered and indeed required
430 to do by their membership of the House. There is a difference between seeking consent for something and seeking support for something.

When a Member of the Government wants to move a Bill, they come to the Cabinet and discuss with others whether or not it is in keeping with the policies that we believe in. We have a good feel for what we are defending and we are usually on the same page on these subjects, and if we 435 are not, we consider them and find a consensus position. When Members are on the opposite side of the House and they represent – or should represent – different principles and ideologies to us, if they want to come to the House with a measure, be it legislative or a motion, they know that it will prosper and succeed only if there is support from the Government benches. Indeed, that support does not have to be from us as a Government, it can be from individual Members on 440 issues where Members may be free to vote as they wish, as they always are.

So I have never suggested that the Hon. Mr Phillips or anyone else should seek my consent before they move a motion. I have asked that they should consider seeking the Government's support before moving a motion, because it may be possible that a motion moved with some amendment that does not affect the underlying substrata of principle may move with full support 445 of the Government – that is to say the nine votes on this side and, indeed, potentially the vote of the hon. the backbencher also – if it is something that we have discussed and our support has been sought for. If our support is not forthcoming, hon. Members can still put the motion and we will have a debate on the floor of the House on why we do not support it or seek to amend it in a way that it is supportable. That is not consent. It is erroneous entirely for the hon. Member to 450 have suggested to this House that I have sought that he seek my consent for anything. I would ask him to reflect on that and to withdraw that when the time comes, because nothing that I have said in this House – and we have had this debate on a number of occasions – and nothing I have said outside of the House can ever be interpreted as me saying that my consent is necessary for a motion to be moved. If the hon. Member does not want to withdraw that, I have no difficulty with 455 him not doing so because the record shows what I have said.

Mr Speaker, this motion, which deals with an issue on which there can be support from this side of the House, was moved by the hon. Member giving me notice that he had moved it but not asking me whether we would support it. Indeed, he did not ask the Minister for Justice whether it was a measure that would enjoy her support or the Minister for Industrial Relations and 460 Employment whether it is a measure that would enjoy our support in respect of an area of his policy, but that is a matter entirely for him. I therefore do not believe it is fair either to suggest that I had an emotional response or reaction to the hon. Gentleman's reference across the floor of the House yesterday, with microphones off, as to whether or not I would be supporting the motion. Indeed, my support is not relevant. The support that is relevant is the support of my hon.
465 colleagues and the Government. I was not in tears, I did not show any other emotional affliction, and so I put it to the hon. Gentleman that it is unfair for him to refer to what he says was my factual reaction as an emotional one, when it was not. For all of those reasons, the part of the hon. Gentleman's speech which he has devoted to denigrating my approach to this particular parliamentary procedure I think is not just unfair, I think it is factually entirely wrong and I do hope 470 that we do not have to spend more of this debate dealing with that issue.

I am delighted to hear that the hon. Lady is going to be constructively involved in this debate and that she is going to be supporting this motion. I am also hoping to demonstrate that the Government would have given support, if the hon. Gentleman had called me before he had put the motion, to a motion that I would have asked him to amend in some ways, which would have 475 been then a motion, given his track record in other matters in this House, that we could have moved with full Government support.

In any event, I do believe that the hon. Gentleman has said something which is absolutely true, important, relevant, and of which we must take notice: that there is a gap in our law for those who lose a child before 24 weeks of gestation. It is true that other countries are now turning their 480 attention to that and we have not yet done so because we have an eye to what is happening in the United Kingdom and has not yet happened. It is also true that we have done very positive work with those who run Baby Steps, and the fruit of that work is already in our legislation and in the approach that we take within the government service to those who may find themselves losing a child before 24 weeks' gestation and after 24 weeks' gestation.

485 So the position of the Government is going to be to propose to amend the motion in a way that I hope hon. Members will see is not designed to do anything other than address the issue that the Hon. Mr Phillips has himself referred to, which is to close the gap, but to close the gap fully, not to close the gap and leave another gaping hole.

490 First of all, in the second paragraph – and I will give hon. Members written notice of this in a minute – I will propose that the second 'NOTES' should say 'NOTES AND WELCOMES that His Majesty's Government', and not 'previously' but 'in 2022', to set that in its proper chronological context.

In respect of that amendment that I am going to propose, I refer the House to Press Releases 44/2020 and 75/2020. Press Release 44/2020, issued by the Government, was headed 495 'Bereaved parents to be entitled to two weeks of paid leave from work' and said this:

Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar

– as we then happily were –

is set to introduce 'Jack's Law,' under which bereaved parents will be entitled to two weeks of paid leave from work. In the UK, this initiative became known as 'Jack's Law' in memory of Jack Herd whose mother, Lucy Herd, campaigned relentlessly on the issue.

Under 'Jack's law,' working parents who suffer the devastating loss of a child under the age of 18, or who suffer a stillbirth from 24 weeks of pregnancy, will be entitled to two weeks statutory leave.

Parents will be able to take the leave as either a single block of 2 weeks, or as 2 separate blocks of one week each taken at different times across the first year after their child's death. This means they can match their leave to the times they need it most, which could be in the early days or over the first anniversary.

This proposed initiative follows the UK's Parental Bereavement Leave and Pay Regulations which are planned to come into effect on 6 April 2020. However, the implementation date for Gibraltar is 1 February 2020.

And then I said something in that press release.

On 11th February, we had considered the matter further and we said as follows in Press Release 75:

'Jack's Law' To Apply To All 'Children,' Regardless Of Age.

500 So this is going in the other direction, not under 24 months:

Last month, Her Majesty's Government of Gibraltar announced that it was set to introduce 'Jack's Law' under which bereaved parents would be entitled to two weeks of paid leave from work. This legislation had become known as 'Jack's Law' in UK, in memory of Jack Herd.

In its original announcement, the Government of Gibraltar specified that, under 'Jack's law,' working parents who suffered the devastating loss of a child under the age of 18, or who suffered a stillbirth from 24 weeks of pregnancy, would be entitled to two weeks statutory leave. Parents would be able to take the leave as either a single block of 2 weeks or as 2 separate blocks of one week each which could be taken at different times across the first year after their child's death. This meant that parents could match their leave to the times they needed it most, which might be in the early days or around the first anniversary.

However, the Government feels that the parents' pain and suffering are the same whether the 'child' is 17 or 37 and so it has now decided to remove the threshold of 18 years of age. 'Jack's Law' will apply, no matter what the age of the 'child' and, as a result, bereaved parents of adult children will also be entitled to the two weeks of statutory leave.

The amended regulations will take effect from April.

So, in 2020 we moved to change our law so that anybody who lost a child over 24 weeks' gestation, whatever the age of that child, 18, 38 or 68 – at 68 the person probably would not be working, but it is possible – would be entitled to leave. The period in question, therefore, is the period now, below 24 weeks. But it is important that when we are welcoming that change in respect of the period over 24 weeks, we reflect in the motion when it was done, in 2020.

Then I would propose after the second paragraph to introduce a new paragraph:

NOTES that His Majesty's Government of Gibraltar had provided for this to be the case in the public sector from 2016 as a matter of policy.

In that respect, I refer the House to a circular to all heads of department which was circulated by the Human Resources Department on 27th July 2016. That dealt with issues relating to maternity and adoption leave and sickness absence during pregnancy. In relation to maternity and adoption leave, the reference that this note to all heads of department includes is as follows, under the heading 'Definition of confinement':

The definition of confinement under General Order 4.1.11 is amended to reflect the birth of a living child or the birth of a child, whether living or not, after 24 weeks of pregnancy. Heads of department must ensure that all these provisions are applied to employees who commence their leave on or after 1st April 2016.

So that which we made law for all employers in Gibraltar in 2020 we had made a provision internally for us in 2016. I think it is important that that is reflected in the motion. I am sure it will not be controversial that that should be the case.

The next paragraph, on the introduction of groundbreaking legislation in New Zealand should remain as it is.

Then I propose a further new paragraph, which will say as follows:

FURTHER NOTES that His Majesty's Government of Gibraltar already provides for paid leave in the event of miscarriage for its public sector workers because that is the position generally in the public sector. That does not affect the position that the motion is seeking to address, but I think it does put in context that the Government is applying to itself that which it is seeking to apply to third parties. It is important that the Government has taken this step already, although not in respect of the period below 24 weeks.

The next three paragraphs remain the same, Mr Speaker.

I then propose that we do the thing that Mr Phillips has said he seeks to do but I believe his motion as drafted does not do, and we then introduce a further paragraph that says this ... So after the paragraph that says, 'NOTES that whilst employers and organisations ...' a new penultimate paragraph which would read as follows:

525

FURTHER DEFINES the 'devastating loss of a pregnancy before 24 weeks' as being inclusive of any pregnancy loss as a result of an abortion, as provided by Gibraltar law.

Mr Speaker, this House debated how we should take to our people the vote on the amendment to section 163A of the Crimes Act and that that should be put to a referendum. That law was 530 passed by this House and its implementation was a matter the commencement of which was put in the hands of the people of Gibraltar. A referendum was held, delayed as it was by the pandemic, and the result of that referendum was that what I can only describe as by an overwhelming majority the people of Gibraltar chose that that law should come into effect, and therefore now 535 section 163A of the Crimes Act is the Law of Gibraltar and a pregnancy may be terminated under our law in the period below 24 weeks. In that instance I am sure that no one in this House will argue that the loss of that pregnancy is not potentially as devastating as a loss that occurs by other means.

Mr Speaker, therefore as a result of those amendments I would also move that after the amendment that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition has moved for Mr Phillips we should add 540 a further limb, obviously deleting the 'or' and putting a comma, that would say, at the end of 'unviable before 24 weeks', which the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition has just moved, 'or have undergone a medical termination'. I think that 'before 24 weeks' can stay where the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition has put it, or it can move to the end of this part of the sentence.

And then, at the end of the whole of the motion as it stands, I would add the words:

For all of the abovementioned instances of the loss of a child or for any of the above reasons.

545 I will circulate to hon. Members now a notice in writing of those amendments.

Mr Speaker, I am moving that amendment. I think perhaps before I do, it would be helpful to say that in relation to the words 'a Bill' in paragraph (i) of the final paragraph of the motion, we may have to consider whether that Bill is attached to a Command Paper initially to give the Chamber of Commerce and the Federation of Small Businesses and others the opportunity to 550 engage in consultation constructively with the Government. That is a comment which is general.

I would now move that the amendment I have spoken to is put to hon. Members and I would circulate to them this, which does not contain the words which were moved by the Leader of the Opposition, so that will have to be read into this. There is one for this side as well.

Mr Speaker, I therefore now formally move that amendment and await discussion of it.

555

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question in terms of the amendments moved by the Hon. the Chief Minister. The amendments are going to be circulated and I will give all Members an opportunity to read through them, digest and then come back. We will be considering right now the amendments. If anybody wishes to speak, it will be on the amendments at this stage.

560 Does any hon. Member wish to speak on the amendments as proposed by the Chief Minister?
The hon. Lady.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, this is why I am glad that the Chief Minister indulged me in going before I did, because I really did want to understand where the Government was going 565 with their response to this motion, so I thank him.

In the main address of my motion I was going to suggest that although the motion and the amendment to the motion as set by Mr Phillips did encompass all medically induced terminations or miscarriages, active consideration should also be given to the type of doctor-certified severe psychological distress or related or medically recommended terminations, because this is a 570 relevant demographic of sufferers that should have recourse to similar benefits that serious support intends to provide.

As long as abortions in Gibraltar continue to be allowed in cases outside the physically medical, as stated in the motion, we cannot ignore the plight and aftereffects on women who terminate their pregnancies. Some of these women terminate not because of a simple desire not to be 575 pregnant, but because their socio-economic situation does not allow for more children, or because that future child would be born into a life of uncertainty, scarcity and strife. Some pregnancies are a result of sexual violence and are born out of toxic, abusive relationships. Some women become pregnant through rape. Doctors often recommend abortions based on these 580 circumstances of severe psychological distress, and these women deserve no less time off than those who end their pregnancies or have their pregnancies ended for physical or foetal non-viable reasons.

585 I do understand that some may take issue with the fact that the choice of having an abortion is different to the serendipitous loss that happens in the event of a miscarriage, and it is a point I have thought about deeply, but as long as we, as a society, require that women suffer from severe psychological distress to be granted permission to have a termination, then we have the responsibility to respond to that severe psychological distress humanely. I am pleased that the Chief Minister has recognised this and incorporated it in the motion; I think it is in the last paragraph. Obviously, needless to say, I am grateful for this and will be supporting it.

590 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, speaking as someone who has been in the regrettable position of having lost several children before 24 weeks, I am very happy that in this House we are able to coalesce around a motion that will deliver a recognition of the devastating consequences of the loss of pregnancy, which are devastating, of course, under any circumstance. I am happy to confirm the Opposition's support for these amendments for that reason.

Mr Speaker: I call on the Hon. the Chief Minister, as the mover of the amendments, to reply.

600 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am very grateful that hon. Members have indicated so fulsomely their support for the Government's amendments. I think it is demonstration that the Government would have engaged positively if it had been communicated to us what the terms of the motion were before it was published and that we might have been able to see the Hon. Mr Phillips publish the motion from the word go in a way that enjoyed the benefit of these changes and could have been expressed to have been moved with the support of the Government.

605 I think it is hugely important that when we are making provision in our law for something as life changing and devastating as the loss of a child we should be one of the first places in the world that, given the changes I have reflected in the amendments to the first paragraphs, which were implemented by us in 2020 and in the Government from 2016, and the changes that we will make now, we will be one of the few places in the world that will have in our law provision for consideration to be given to those who suffer such loss, whatever the age of their child. As I have said, we uncapped it already – it does not matter whether you are 17, 18 or any age – and now we are opening also the bottom age range, not just to those lost to miscarriage in 24 weeks, but those lost below 24 weeks, even where the termination occurs under the provisions of section 163 of the Crimes Act.

610 The hon. Lady, in her intervention, has referred to pregnancies that might arise out of violence and might therefore have to be ended, and other circumstances in which terminations may occur. I think it is beholden upon all of us not to seek to set out exhaustively the circumstances that can give rise to a termination under section 163 of our law and not to prejudge the devastating effect that that can have on the parent who suffers that termination. I think, therefore, it is fundamental that we have all been able to agree that terminations under section 163 of our Crimes Act should also be within the scope of this provision and I am very grateful to the House for that.

615 And so now, Mr Speaker, speaking to the motion as amended ... Well, I think we have to take a vote.

625 Mr Speaker: I now put the question in terms of the amendments moved by the Hon. the Chief Minister. Those in favour?

630 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I call a division.

A Member: [Inaudible]

Hon. Chief Minister: I do not need to seek anyone's consent to seek a division. The Rules say any Member can seek a division at any time before a vote is taken.

635

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister has called for a division.

Voting resulted as follows:

FOR

Hon. K Azopardi
Hon. P J Balban
Hon. D J Bossino
Hon. R M Clinton
Hon. Prof. J E Cortes
Hon. V Daryanani
Hon. D A Feetham
Hon. Dr J J Garcia
Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon
Hon. G H Licudi
Hon. S E Linares
Hon. E J Phillips
Hon. F R Picardo
Hon. E J Reyes
Hon. Miss S J Sacramento

AGAINST

None

ABSENT

Hon. Sir J J Bossano
Hon. A J Isola

Mr Speaker: The result of the division is as follows. There are 15 Members in favour of the motion and there are two Members absent, in which case the motion is carried. The motion containing the amendments ... We are talking about the amendments, not the motion. We are talking about the amendments which have been moved by the Hon. the Chief Minister. Those have been carried.

640

Hon. Chief Minister: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I am –

645

Hon. K Azopardi: [Inaudible] in the form of how the Chief Minister has ... But he also asked for the wording that I had moved to be written in, so as long as that is reflected, because it is not in the –

650

Mr Speaker: It will be reflected at the next stage. What we have before us in the House is the original motion as amended initially by the Leader of the Opposition, followed by the amendments moved by the Hon. Chief Minister.

655

Hon. Chief Minister: So now, Mr Speaker, the motion has been put to a vote. I have replied on it and the motion I am speaking to now is the motion as amended. I am not going to say very much. I have moved the amendment.

Mr Speaker: I know, but I do not think you are – 660

Hon. Chief Minister: Can I just ...?

Mr Speaker: Yes, go on.

Hon. Chief Minister: I think this will be common ground between us. When I stand up, the motion is as it was. I then say I want to amend the motion before I carry on speaking to it. The amendment is put and it is replied to, and then the motion is amended. So I am still speaking now with the motion as amended, and that is how I have always understood it and how it has always been. (Interjections) In other words, now it is passed like this, and having moved that amendment, I am still speaking to the motion as amended.

670 All I would wish to say – and just to develop, so the hon. Members know what my thinking is – is that in respect of this part, which says ‘a Bill before the House to make provision of’ ... I think that this is a relatively easy Bill to draft, or indeed that we can do it in another way. It may not be, because sometimes when we look at these things, parliamentary counsel find that there are many other references in our law than just the ones that we think there are. That can have other consequential amendments, and therefore the Bill may first appear as a Command Paper. I want 675 to make that clear, so that it is understood that there may have to be an element of consultation on this in order to get it right and to ensure that it does what we want it to do and we do not cause other difficulties.

680 Other than that, Mr Speaker, I am very pleased that we have now before the House a motion which includes all the elements that I have put and for all the reasons that I have put them and the House will be able to find itself unanimously supporting the motion as amended.

Mr Speaker: As the original mover of the motion, the Hon. Elliott Phillips has a right of reply. The Hon. Elliott Phillips.

685 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful and I thank all hon. Members who have contributed to the debate on this motion. I am very grateful for those contributions, that they have ended in a motion that enjoys the unanimous support of everyone in this House.

Just to address a couple of the points that have been made by the Chief Minister in his contribution about consultation, I think it ultimately comes down to this. It is bereavement loss. I 690 take the view that I have, by emailing him directly and asking him the question ‘Would this enjoy Government support?’ ... That, for me, should be sufficient insofar as the consultation. I am sure he will take it to his Cabinet and take a view thereafter. Insofar as whether it should prosper and succeed, I think it is, as the Chief Minister alluded to, a plain and simple but important amendment to our law, which might have some nuances or some wrinkles that might need to be ironed out 695 with the drafts people tasked with this.

Mr Speaker, the amendments that have been proposed by the Leader of the Opposition and the Chief Minister are ones that enjoy my fullest support and I am grateful that that we have managed to coalesce, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, around this particular issue so those affected by tragic pregnancy loss can at least have recourse to a provision in the law which 700 allows them at least two or three days – that is reference to other jurisdictions; it may be more, depending on what the Bill looks like as it comes before this House – and I am very grateful to all hon. Members who have managed to support this Bill today.

705 A Member: [Inaudible]

Mr Speaker: Yes, you would have had the right to speak, but because the mover of the motion has already responded, I am afraid, with regret, you are unable to speak.

I now put the question in terms of the motion proposed by the Hon. E J Phillips, as amended initially by the Leader of the Opposition, followed by the amendments moved by the Hon. the 710 Chief Minister. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Adjournment

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I move that the House should now adjourn sine die.

715

Mr Speaker: I now propose a question, which is that this House do now adjourn sine die.

I now put the question, which is that this House do now adjourn sine die. Those in favour?

(Members: Aye.) Those against? Passed.

This House will now adjourn sine die.

The House adjourned at 6.46 p.m.

PRAYER

Mr Speaker

CONFIRMATION OF MINUTES

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Wednesday, 15th March 2023.

5 Order of Proceedings: (i) Oath of Allegiance; (ii) Confirmation of Minutes – the Minutes of the last meeting of Parliament, which was held on 13th, 14th and 15th February 2023.

Mr Speaker: May I sign the Minutes as correct?

10 Members: Aye.

Mr Speaker signed the Minutes.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Ministerial Code and Code of Conduct for Members of the Gibraltar Parliament – Statement by the Chief Minister

Clerk: (iii) Communications from the Chair; (iv) Petitions; (v) Announcements.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

15

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Government has always been firmly committed to the policy of a Ministerial Code of Conduct for Ministers of His Majesty's Government of Gibraltar and a Code for Members of Parliament. I have asked you, Mr Speaker, this afternoon, for leave to make a Statement in respect of that, which you have graciously agreed to, and I have given a copy of my Statement to the Leader of the Opposition.

20

A draft Code of Conduct for Ministers and another for Members was published and circulated in September 2015. The intention then was that those Codes, along with other matters, would be reviewed by the Select Committee on Parliamentary Reform, as was suggested by my predecessor and former Chief Minister Sir Peter Caruana.

25

The House knows that the hectic schedule imposed on Government by our departure from the European Union, the COVID-19 pandemic and the future relationship negotiation with the European Union has meant that the Committee has not been able to meet and perform its functions of review. However, the draft Codes have been published and have always been available online on the website of the Gibraltar Parliament. The Government has not received any comment or feedback on the publication of these draft Codes during all this time and, as I said at the time that we adopted them, we would be behaving in keeping with those Codes. Although we have been criticised for not formally implementing them, we have adhered to them.

In order not to delay matters any further, I have the honour today, after my Statement, when we come to it on the Order Paper, to lay before the House a Code of Conduct for Members of the Gibraltar Parliament and a Code of Conduct specifically for Ministers of His Majesty's Government of Gibraltar. In doing so, I want to thank my friend and colleague the Deputy Chief Minister, who has led the detailed work on both, although it is my obligation as Leader of the House to be the one to lay these particular Codes.

The draft Ministerial Code available until now was largely based on the Code applicable to Ministers of His Majesty's Government of the United Kingdom from time to time. It was the first such Ministerial Code for Gibraltar, which we had the honour to publish. However, that Code, which was first published in September 2010 in the United Kingdom, was subsequently amended several times. There were amendments in October 2015, just after we had published our Code in September 2015, in December 2016, in January 2018, in August 2019, in May 2022 and most recently in December 2022, and usually, if I may put it colloquially, scandal-led amendments which were made to the Code.

The new Gibraltar Code is based on the latest United Kingdom version and has been amended and updated by the Deputy Chief Minister to be in line with the most recent December 2022 version, which is applicable in the United Kingdom. This means that the 2015 Gibraltar Code has now been updated and the relevant amendments have been incorporated into it, so that the Code laid today is bang up to date with the Code in the United Kingdom.

There are some areas which are completely irrelevant to the circumstances in Gibraltar which are envisaged in the UK Code, for example the question of special advisers and their behaviour, and parliamentary private secretaries. None of those concepts exist in Gibraltar and therefore we have expunged the Code of them.

The Gibraltar Code provides for the appointment of an independent adviser who would investigate alleged breaches of the Code. This can come about if the Chief Minister, having consulted the Chief Secretary, feels the matter warrants further investigation. An investigation can also be initiated by the independent adviser where he or she believes that an alleged breach of the Code warrants further investigation and the matter has not already been so referred.

The Ministerial Code is divided into 11 sections and restates at Annex A, at the end of the Code, the Seven Principles of Public Life, which are identical in Gibraltar to those applied in the United Kingdom.

The Code of Conduct for Members of the Gibraltar Parliament more generally was also first published in September 2015. The Government has received no comment or feedback from hon. Members opposite since the publication of the Code for Members.

The new updated version is also based on the Code applicable to Members of the House of Commons, where relevant, and amended to the circumstances of Gibraltar. This, too, repeats the Seven Principles of Public Life as being applicable to Members of the Parliament, as it is to Ministers, in the same way as the Ministerial Code sets out.

The Code provides for the Gibraltar Parliament to appoint an independent expert panel with the relevant experience to investigate a specific matter relating to a Member's adherence to the rules of conduct under the Code and the allegations that might be made of breaches of the Code.

The Government has been very conscious that to a degree this was unfinished business, and we recognise that the process of giving effect to these Codes could have been different in other circumstances, which unfortunately did not apply. However, the point is that it is preferable to give this matter some finality and to get it done, than to allow the situation now to continue any further. If we have to amend, we can amend going forward, but from the position of having already made the Codes fully applicable going forward from now.

80 It is for this reason that the Government remains open to any ideas and suggestions for further improvement that hon. Members or any person may wish to put in writing to the Government. Further, it is also a condition of both the Code of Conduct for Ministers and the Code of Conduct for Members of Parliament that they shall be subject to annual review by the Gibraltar Parliament, which will provide another opportunity to further review the Codes, but that should not stop us 85 from amending these Codes at any time before a year is up after today, if the House should consider it necessary.

Mr Speaker, on that basis, when the moment comes, after I have clarified any questions that may be raised or any points for clarification that may be made, I shall be laying both these Codes at the appropriate moment under the Agenda item.

90

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, thank you.

Indeed, I received, earlier today, at quarter past one, the Statement of the Chief Minister that he intended to make, together with a copy of these Codes that he will lay a bit later, subject to 95 the comments that we may make.

Of course we welcome the introduction of the principle of a Code of Conduct for Ministers and indeed for Members on both sides of the House; it was in our own manifesto at that last election. However, I have to say it does look like a bit of a box-ticking scramble ahead of the next election, given that this is a commitment that the Members opposite had in, I believe, their first manifesto and indeed it was discussed in their second and third manifestos – indeed, the last one. I do accept, 100 as the Hon. Chief Minister has said, that since the last election there have been intervening events that have made it difficult perhaps to have a more detailed discussion on some aspects, but it is also true that before that moment there were opportunities to do so. Indeed the drafts that were 105 first published were some time ago, so there could have been an opportunity to properly introduce these earlier.

Can I just ask him to clarify, if he will ...? As I said, we welcome the principle of these documents. We would like to, obviously, study the detail of it, because the Hon. Chief Minister has indicated that these documents that he intends to lay are different to the ones that we saw some time ago;
110 he says both of these documents are updated. So subject to a review of the detail – because we may have the opportunity to then engage with the Government on improvements to these, and he says there will be an annual review, which of course we welcome – we may want to go further, and in that context we may be able to engage with Government if we have any particular thoughts in that regard.

Can I just ask him to comment, though, because from a formalistic point of view, we would see the Codes quite distinctively in this sense: it seems to me that the Government can introduce a Ministerial Code of Conduct to the extent that it wants and lay a copy in this House – and it would be effective, of course, because it binds the Ministers of the Crown in that sense – but to the extent of a Code in relation to the Members of this House, I wonder whether it would be effective 120 simply to lay it in the House, and I ask the hon. Member perhaps to reflect on the comments that I make in this regard.

I start from the premise that he did, himself, acknowledge ... on that side of the House the Members opposite did themselves acknowledge in their last manifesto, and indeed the one before that, I believe, that the approval of a Select Committee would first be engaged before there was 125 an attempt to introduce this document. Can I just say that nothing I say is to suggest that I am placing hurdles on the introduction of this document, but rather what I would like us to do is to make sure that it is effective in that sense.

In the short time available, I reflected on the provisions first of the Constitution that allow the Parliament to prescribe its own rules of procedure in sections 36 and 39. It seems to me that that,

130 together with the provisions of the Parliament Act, would allow us to perhaps pass a resolution or a motion that would give effect to the Code, but I am not sure it would become effective by simply laying it in the House. The Standing Orders of this House themselves are made, on the face of them, by express reference to section 39 of the Constitution and it seems to me – and it is 135 something that I would ask the hon. Member to consider, reflect on and, if necessary, clarify, if it is not a point that catches him at all by surprise, because he may have thought about it himself ...
It seems to us on this side that this may require a resolution or a motion insofar as the Code of Conduct that would bind the Members of this House. I say that because section 39 of the Constitution says ‘The Parliament may from time to time make, amend and revoke rules of 140 procedure’ for the regulation of the proceedings, and section 36 of the Constitution allows the legislature to ‘prescribe the privileges, immunities and powers of the Parliament and its Members’, but it seems to me also that the prescription of that would require some degree of formality, a decision of the House, and the laying of a Code in the House does not seem to me to amount to a decision of the House to do so.

145 I give way to the hon. Member and those are my closing remarks. Perhaps the main issue, as he can see from my remarks, is a matter of formalistic procedure and adoption.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. Member for recognising that 150 I provided him quite considerable notice of my Statement – almost two hours before I delivered it, which is more than is usually the case even in the House of Commons – and for the fact that in his address he is not in any way challenging the content of the Code or indeed the objective of the Government in providing for the Code. But he, of course, as usual, does not permit the form to get in way of the substance – or does he? – because what the hon. Gentleman has talked about is 155 really just the form in which we have submitted the Code. The fact that the two Codes are now before the House I think is a remarkable step forward for governance of the Rules of this House and the ministerial standards to which people will be held in the form of this new Code. But of course the hon. Gentleman starts not seeking to clarify, not seeking to question, which is what he should be doing in the context of a Statement I have made. He starts by pugilistically seeking to 160 engage a party political debate, for which I am always up. He says this is a box-ticking scramble. It can only be a box-ticking scramble in respect of seeking their adherence to the parliamentary Code, it cannot be a box-ticking scramble in the context of our adherence to the Ministerial Code, because in 2015 we published the Code and we said, at the request of the GSD, ‘This is going to go to a Select Committee before it gets formally adopted, but we subject ourselves to it from 165 now.’ So if the hon. Gentleman had stopped to consider the position as it has applied and appertained from 2015, he could make the argument that in 2015, in September, after four years of work in Government and the report of the Canepa committee, we scrambled in September to ensure that the Code was applicable to Ministers before an election in October – perhaps November. In the autumn. (Interjection) November? Fine, November, yes. Sixty-eight per cent, we 170 got. I will never forget that: 68%. So box-ticking scramble in September to ensure that it was in place for November, but not in 2023, eight years on from our subjecting ourselves voluntarily to the Code. The only scramble would be to subject them to the Code, because it is the parliamentary Code that we are saying should be applicable from today, because they have not professed voluntary allegiance or adherence to the parliamentary Code like we professed it voluntarily to 175 the Ministerial Code.

I would say to the hon. Gentleman that a little thought might have delivered him a little bit more logic behind his argument because, as a result, what he has done is demonstrate that if there is a need to scramble to secure adherence to a Code, it is in respect of Members who are not Ministers, because Ministers have subjected themselves voluntarily to the Code. That is where he 180 started, with this pugilistic party political point that unfortunately, like the proverbial firework, blows up in the palm of his hand because of the lack of generosity with which he approaches the point.

185 The second point that he makes is the formalistic point, as he calls it, having said that he will study the detail and he wants to check the amendments. As I have told him, he will find that the amendments are designed to ensure that figures and issues that are referred to in the UK Code and are not relevant here have been provided for. The Deputy Chief Minister has done it in very great detail. He has taken me through it. I have agreed the differences with him. I am sure they will not be controversial. But what he will have to study the detail of, I assume, are the differences between the Code published in September 2015 and the Code published today, because he has 190 not, since 2019 when he was elected, raised with us any issue in respect of the 2015 Code. Therefore, one has to assume that either he has not read it, although he has said repeatedly that this is an important part of the architecture of the Government he would like to lead, or he has not thought that there was anything in there worth commenting on. So he can look at the differences between the 2015 Code and this Code and how that has been affected in fact by changes in the United Kingdom.

195 He has said that perhaps they want to go further. Well, they may want to go further than the United Kingdom, which is seen as a lead jurisdiction in many respects in the concept of the Seven Principles of Public Life etc., although in the past year and a half we have seen some of the shortcomings of the system in the United Kingdom, but it is recognised as one of the best systems 200 in the world in that respect, in terms of accountability of Ministers and Members of Parliament. If he wants to go further than the United Kingdom, he should tell us where it is that he wants to go further. We are happy to consider it in some circumstances where Gibraltar might be able to do things which are not provided for even in the United Kingdom.

205 Is a resolution necessary? Well, the analysis the hon. Gentleman does I think is otiose, because what we are talking about here are not offences. Nobody is going to be tried by a court. These are issues of political responsibility and adherence to rules that we subject ourselves to. Indeed, the Canepa Commission talked about the Ministerial Code being reviewed – because we had one at the time – drawn up, made applicable to Ministers and kept under review. It did not say anything about a resolution. What former Speaker Canepa said in respect of his recommendation for a 210 parliamentary Code, not a Ministerial Code, was that that should be adopted by resolution. But it is not required to be adopted by resolution because the Canepa Commission was a commission giving advice and making recommendations.

215 We have wanted to ensure that the Code is published and that it is known, but I have absolutely no difficulty with the principle that we pursue that which Mr Canepa as a Member of the House did when they introduced the Declaration of Members' Interests, I think in 1982 or something like that, which was to do it by way of resolution, which is how Speaker Canepa must have come to the conclusion that it was prudent to advise a resolution in the Code. The Government is happy to give notice now – because we only need 24 hours for a Government motion – that we will be putting a resolution in this session of the House to adopt the parliamentary Code, and the Code 220 can then be adopted by resolution.

225 The approval of the Select Committee, however, is not necessary for us to do this because, to the extent that we are Members of Parliament, I tell the House today that this side of the House gives a commitment to adherence to the principles of the Ministerial Code and the parliamentary Code, which would apply to all of us, including Mr Licudi as a backbencher, whilst the Ministerial Code will apply only to those of us who sit on the front bench. So without a resolution, the House knows that the GSLP-Liberal side of the House will adhere to the Code. By resolution, we will all be bound to adhere to the Code, but they could vote against and we could vote in favour. Because we have the inbuilt Government majority, it will still apply, so to an extent we are playing an element of a 'formalistic' – to use the hon. Gentleman's word – game.

230 In terms of the effectiveness of the Code if it is not adopted by resolution or by motion, there is no difference, because it tells us what we are supposed to do. There is nothing in here which is rocket science. These are the rules of public life, the ones that we all instinctively must know we 235 have to abide by, and any breach of them would require, in any event, a motion of censure in this House. So the hon. Gentleman would forgive me for connecting the way that he has tried to weave his references to the Constitution and the Parliament Act and his opening gambit on a box-ticking scramble, to see only an attempt to get up to say something which might gain him some party political advantage, if there is any to be had in standing in the way of a Ministerial Code and a parliamentary Code, when in fact what the Government is doing is giving further effect to the commitments we gave in 2015 in respect of both of these Codes and which they have singularly failed to do.

240 I shall, Mr Speaker, give written notice of the resolution that I propose to present in a few minutes when I am able to prepare it, so that the House has it in good time to be able to deal with it in the timetable that I believe we will be working to during the course of this session between now and Friday. I hope that despite the party political points that the hon. Member has made, the underlying reality will be that hon. Members opposite, even between today and Friday, even though they have not between 2015 and today, will confirm their voluntary adherence immediately to the Code of Conduct for Members of the Parliament.

I am happy to deal with any other points that any other hon. Member may raise.

250 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I have just had sight of the document now because I am a third entity and not a part of the official Opposition. I would have been to receive the paper with the same two hours' notice afforded to the Leader of the Opposition so that I could have perused it and offered a more considered set of questions. We are trying to enhance democracy in general and parliamentary conduct in this House. Why not afford me that gesture? I do not think it would have taken the Chief Minister more than 10 seconds to add my email address to the correspondence he sent to the Leader of the Opposition.

260 Anyway, it has been almost eight years that this incentive was first thought of or designed and we see a pattern that we normally see before an election, something which reminds me of how the Government also tried to ram the parliamentary reform three months, or even less, before –

Mr Speaker: I think the hon. Lady must ask questions seeking clarification, not make political points.

265 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: If I can, yes. We saw the same thing eight years ago, and if it were not for the public outrage it would have been a fait accompli, as it looks like this one is.

270 What I would like to ask is, firstly, when does this Code actually materially come into effect? If there are any Ministers who have taken advantage of gifts or hospitality by donors or funders of the party, for example, when would that end? Would it end today? Would it end next weekend? Would it end this weekend?

275 And why is there not ... because we can definitely see clearly here that there is no really good will from the two sides, that we have seen, in terms of giving us a meaningful opportunity for exhaustive discussion before this is set in stone? The fact of the matter is, even though we can harp back to 2015, eight years have passed, many other things have taken over the agenda, and we get this today – the Leader of the Opposition got it two hours ago; I got it 10 minutes ago – out of the blue, as a fait accompli. So how could the Chief Minister think that this was a constructive way to bring this Code into the House at this present moment? Doesn't he want more input from across the House? It seems to me that the Chief Minister has all his answers ready. He has the dates, he knows when it started, he knows when it was reviewed, but we do not have that privilege today. We have two hours and 10 minutes here. He knows all the pathology, everything that is going on, but how can he think that it is a good idea to present this across the board, bring it here and win by majority and tell us that we have until Friday?

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

285 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, can I start by wishing the hon. Lady a happy birthday? She has been remarkably pugilistic for a day that should be celebratory for her, but I do wish her all the very best on a day like today, and I do look forward to my cheat day at coffee time, when the time comes for us to be able to raise a glass of coffee and nothing else to her good health.

290 The hon. Lady has confirmed that she is a third party, as she described herself – actually a fourth party in the House (Interjection by Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon) – in the sense not a part of the official Opposition, despite the wishes as expressed on national television by the Leader of the Opposition. Despite his wishes, she remains, rebuffing him, a third party and – 295 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: It is not relevant.

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, it is, because you were the one who said that you were not.

300 Hon. M D Hassan Nahon: How is that relevant to what I was saying or coming to?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am replying to the points that the hon. Lady made in the way that the hon. Lady made them. (Interjection by Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon) And so that is, in itself ... She asked me a question: ‘Why didn’t you send it to me?’ For a simple reason: because she is not the Leader of the Opposition, and the Rules require, as we explained them in the House last month, that I should share with the Leader of the Opposition a statement before I share it with other Members in this House, and she is A N Other Member. She did not say anything at the last meeting when we explained that, she accepted that, and in this meeting she has seen the consequence of that rule. In the United Kingdom, statements are shared with the Leader of the Opposition; they are not shared with every other Member.

305 I have no difficulty if the hon. Lady wishes me to share my statements with her, but this is an issue for the Leader of the House and the Leader of the Opposition, because it is about parliamentary procedure. She says that she has had 10 minutes to consider this. The same point applies to her with even greater force and vigour than to the Hon. the current Leader of the Opposition, because she has been a Member of this House since 2015. He has been a Member of the House since 2019 and of the GSD since 2018 ... 2017, whenever it was ... that was not in keeping with the constitutional rules. But she has been a Member of this House since 2015, when we laid the parliamentary Code – now he gets it! – so she has, I would have thought, familiarised herself with the Codes. She, no doubt, who lectures us on standards in public life ... the first thing she would have done, in November 2015 when we held the General Election, upon becoming a Member of this House was to say, ‘Let me have the parliamentary Code, I have to familiarise myself with it.’ Or is it that despite the lectures that she gives us on standards in public life, she had not read the Code to which she should have been voluntarily adhering from the day that she was elected in 2015? Maybe the Leader of the Opposition could have said, ‘Look, I became a Member in 2019 – that is when I looked at it.’ So she cannot tell me that she has had 10 minutes. It may make good copy to get up and say, ‘The dreadful Chief Minister has given the Leader of the Opposition two hours of notice and me only 10 minutes.’ Yes, but of something that you have all had since 2015. The changes are relatively minor. We are talking about a few sentences here and there, and they are the changes that anybody who has been following United Kingdom politics would have read on the front page of The Times each day that those changes were made to the Ministerial Code and, indeed, has led to leaders in The Times in respect of those changes in the Ministerial Code. So anybody politically aware will know what those changes imply – of course, if you have read the Code since you have been elected in 2015.

320 There is a pattern, of course, emerging. The hon. Lady is absolutely right, a pattern of things being done before the end of the lifetime of the Parliament. Well, surprise, surprise. We are elected for four years. Our obligations are to do things in those four years, and despite having got the red light of COVID that stopped us in our tracks, in 2016 the amber light of Brexit that made everything harder and like going through treacle because of, first of all, negotiation of the withdrawal agreement, then negotiation of the future relationship ... Despite all that, we published these Codes and now we are updating them. The sin of which we are attacked today is the updating of the Codes to which we subjected ourselves voluntarily in 2015. So it is not credible to say that you have had 10 minutes to consider this. You have not had 10 minutes. Indeed, much of the discourse of the Opposition ... Indeed, a year ago, when I understand that they thought an election was going to be called, they held a press conference on these issues – not her, them – and the Ministerial Code etc. So these are live political issues and what we are doing is giving effect to these things. So the fait accompli to which she refers is a fait accompli which has applied to this side of the House for eight years. It is not that this weekend or next weekend the hospitality/not the hospitality, the gifts/not the gifts. We have subjected ourselves since 2015.

Hon. Members can believe all the rumours they like about what we are given or not given. As hon. Members know, I was told in a memorable Direct Democracy some months ago on GBC that people said I had a great villa in Portugal that had been gifted to me by a contractor locally who had built it in Portugal etc. If somebody would at least tell me the address, I might be able to visit this great gift that I have been given and enjoy the benefit of it. There are rumours about gifts that we are told they get from people who are supporting them so that they will replace us, and they will hear rumours of gifts that we get 'para asermos el peloteo' so that people are going to get tenders. Nonsense on stilts. I do not believe it when I am told of them. I say No me diga. I trust that they do not believe it when they are told it of us. There are rules about that. There is a register in my office of anything that comes in which is a gift. It is assessed for value and it is put in the register. So these things, for us, to answer her question, have been set in stone since we published the Codes in 2015. I just told the Leader of the Opposition that when she got up to ask me again. So getting it today 'out of the blue' should not be a surprise. She should have said, 'Long time coming – why didn't you do it sooner?' I would have said, 'I did it in 2015.' But not that it is out of the blue.

In terms of wanting to be constructive, the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister rightly said that we tried to be constructive – in one of his Budget speeches, I think, on this subject – by agreeing the GSD proposal that instead of putting a motion in 2015, which we said we were going to do when we introduced the Commission's report, we agreed the GSD position, which was not to do that and send it to the Select Committee, and there it lay, because the Select Committee was not able to meet. But in the time that those who represent the GSD, as she did since 2015 in this House until the schism in the late part of the second decade of the third millennium, none of them wrote to us to say, 'We want to improve the Code in this way. When we get to the Select Committee, this is what we are going to be proposing in respect of the Code.' They have never said that. So if they wanted to be constructive, they have had a lot of time to be constructive, and if they now want to be constructive, we will welcome any constructive suggestions for amendment of the Code. We might or might not agree it, it depends on what they propose and whether it is constructive or whether it is actually designed to be destructive whilst dressed up as being constructive, which is so often what we see. But most of what she had said had already been answered in the statement that I gave earlier in the context of replying to the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition, because these Codes have been in Parliament since 2015.

Mr Speaker, none of that response, which I know is perhaps a little, for me, uncharacteristically vehement in respect of the hon. Lady, diminishes my good wishes to her on this happy day.

Mr Speaker: Before I ask the Hon. Roy Clinton to respond – he wishes to say a few words – I would like to remind the hon. Lady and Members of a ruling which I made several years ago about what was expected from persons contributing in a Statement scenario. I said:

1. The Leader of the Opposition and any member of the Opposition, the Leader of any other political party in opposition or any Member that sits on the Government bench who is not a Minister are entitled to ask questions for clarification purposes ONLY.
2. In addition, the Leader of the Opposition or any other member of the Opposition that shadows a Ministry to which the statement refers is permitted a short contribution on the merits of a Statement. This also applies to the leader of any other political party in opposition.

Thank you. The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I rise to raise a point of order and I would really like your ruling on it.

390 The Opposition has been accused today of engaging in games. The tabling of a paper which is meant to bind Members of this Parliament I do not believe is a matter of games or semantics.

The Hon. Chief Minister did mention the Register of Members' Interests, which I did have a look at with the Clerk to the Parliament before the session started, and that was on 31st October 1979. What happened there was that the Select Committee made a report to Parliament, there was a question put to Parliament as to whether the report of the Select Committee should be adopted and that resolution was passed. I think that is an important precedent and I think it is logical that any rules that are meant to bind any Members of this House should be passed by this House. I do not think that the mere laying of a paper is sufficient that that should be seen to have the endorsement of this House. The Government may lay whatever paper it wishes, but at the end of the day it is the House that should pass a resolution as to the applicability of that paper. I am glad to see the Chief Minister has agreed to that procedure, but I would be grateful, Mr Speaker, if you would formalise that, so that in future there is no misunderstanding as to anything that binds Members of this House.

400 Thank you.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, what rule of Standing Orders is the hon. Gentleman asking you to rule under? If you are going to make a point of order, you have to make it under one of the rules of order of the House.

410 What Speaker Canepa did when he was a Member of this House was lead in part in the debate on the question which was put as a motion at the time in respect of a Select Committee question. We did exactly the same thing. I do not think he was a Member of the House. We had the Canepa Commission and we brought that as a question to this House, and as a result we adopted various of the measures which the Canepa Commission set out, including the televising of Parliament, which had already been done. We adopted all of those, and in that debate which I have referred the House to, Sir Peter said, 'Please don't do this straight away, send it to a Select Committee.' So we agreed to send that to a Select Committee and everything else was adopted, and we then set out our adherence to the Codes.

415 Mr Speaker, under what rule is Mr Clinton asking you to make a ruling that the Government must provide for things to be done by resolution or motion, rather than publish by way of laying in the House? That is a matter which is entirely up to the Leader of the House at the time. Whether there is more or less legitimacy in the context of something that is done de facto unilaterally by the Government in terms of its application to Members who are not in the Government is a matter which may or may not be moot, but it is not a question for ruling by Mr Speaker at this stage. You might be asked for a ruling. Given that hon. Members have not said that they will adhere to the parliamentary Code until Friday when it is adopted by resolution, if one of them were to be found on Thursday to be in breach of the Code, you could then be asked, 'Can this Member be made subject to whatever discipline may be provided for in the Code, given that he was not able to vote for or against the Code in the resolution?' But you cannot be asked to set out in a ruling, at least without reference to which order you are being asked to rule under, that the Government can only do things by way of motion or resolution and cannot lay on the table and say we now feel bound by this. That is to seek, in my view, to ask you to create a new rule without having given you the opportunity to hear all sides in respect of such a rule and the consequences that it may or may not have.

435 Mr Speaker, if I had an opportunity to reflect on what Mr Clinton has said, I would reflect that that is seeking a ruling that could constrain the Government and the Leader of the House in ways which we would have to consider very carefully before the Government would agree to adhere by it.

440 Hon. R M Clinton: [Inaudible]

Mr Speaker: You cannot speak anymore.

Hon. R M Clinton: I am still on the point of order.

445 Mr Speaker: No. Well ... It is very unusual for a Member to raise a point of order without making reference to which order is being impinged. (Interjection) Hold on. I am happy to listen to further explanations by the Hon. Roy Clinton, but in any event I am not, here, in a position to rule on the spot, if that is what you are expecting from me. That, I cannot do. I will need to listen to what you have to say now but also take into account what the Chief Minister, the Leader of the House, has 450 said, and then I will consider and, in due course, come back to you, if I feel it is necessary.

Thank you.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I have asked you for a ruling, not the Chief Minister. I refer you specifically to Standing Order 12, on the laying of papers, and my simple question as to a ruling is: is the laying of a paper by the Government binding on the conduct of Members of this House?

455

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, sorry, the hon. Gentleman says he has asked you for a ruling, not me. I know that he often reminds us that he is not a lawyer, but there is a basic rule of natural justice, which is audi alteram partem, which means you must hear all sides. Before somebody makes a ruling, and a ruling that binds all sides, they must hear all sides.

460

The laying of a paper does not purport to bind hon. Members. The laying of the paper sets out the position, and what I have said to him repeatedly in the ... what I have said to the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. Lady is we are subjecting ourselves voluntarily to the Codes, and what they are saying by saying, 'We will not consider ourselves bound' is that they are not going to comply with the Code. That is absolutely fine, but it does not require a ruling about whether things are binding or not binding by individuals or parties, and if it did require a ruling, Mr Speaker, I would ask you to bear with the Government, because there may be rulings that set out that things which are laid on the table can be, in effect, binding, because when we lay something on the table it binds us. When I lay an account on the table, if it is not correct I will be required to come back to the House and explain why I have misled the House by laying something in the House that has a figure in it which is incorrect. And so we act, when it comes to the Budget, by reference to the papers that are laid before the Budget, which hon. Members use to inform their debate etc.

So this is not as straightforward as Mr Clinton would like to pretend, and neither is it fair to say, 'I have sought a ruling from you, don't listen to anybody else.' If that were the case, courts would be places where things are resolved very quickly because the first person to speak or the last person to speak simply would persuade the party that has to make up their mind. That is not how proper rulings are made in keeping with the principles of natural justice.

475

Hon. K Azopardi: A point of order, Mr Speaker, and only to assist, in view of the exchanges. Can I just make the point, for your reflection when you consider this issue, that it would seem to me that the Speaker must have power to always consider questions of procedure in this House and to give rulings where the Speaker considers it appropriate, not necessarily in the moment but always having considered the issue as to if there is an important question that arises in terms of 485 the effect or procedure that the Speaker can then consider the arguments and come back with a ruling, as indeed Mr Speaker has done, on occasion, on issues where you have considered it has merited a particular clarification or ruling.

480

So really I think my hon. colleague is doing no more than that and I certainly welcome what the Chief Minister has said, that in his view the laying of a paper does not bind the Members. All sorts of things get laid on the table. Regulatory authorities and all sorts of documents get laid on the table, which clearly cannot have that effect. So it seems to me that Mr Speaker does have power.

490 Can I just say, before I sit down, that the Chief Minister has said two or three times that we have said we are not bound, we are not saying we are committed to this. We are saying quite the contrary. We are saying we want to make sure it is effective and binding, and that is all we are saying, so let's not twist the words of the points that we have made.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, can I thank the Leader of the Opposition –?

500 Mr Speaker: Yes, this will be the last intervention. Before you continue, I would ask the Hon. Roy Clinton to put down his views in writing, so I will have a good opportunity to read through them, to digest them and come up with a fair conclusion.

Hon. Chief Minister: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

505 Can I thank the Leader of the Opposition for his statement, because when analysed dispassionately, what the Leader of the Opposition has done is agree entirely with the statement that you made in response to Mr Clinton and the statement that I have made. That is to say that of course you have the power to regulate the proceedings through ruling, but you want to hear all the arguments before you make a rule which is not in keeping with one of the Standing Orders as they are today, and as a result you have now asked Mr Clinton to put in writing what it is that he purports.

510 Can I also take the point that the hon. Gentleman makes about the binding nature of things laid on the table, and can I just repeat to him, because he does not appear to have appreciated the point, that of course when something is laid on the table it binds at least the person laying it on the table – this is the point I am making – and those who are Members of the House take the benefit of that. So if I lay on the table the figures for the Gibraltar Electricity Authority, hon. Members enjoy the benefit of the rule that says I will not mislead the Parliament, and if there is a figure in the report that I have laid, they take the benefit of relying on that figure and I take the obligation to amend that figure if it is wrong.

520 What we are saying here and what I said in my introduction is we are laying it on the table – when he said why not do it by resolution, I said we will do it on Friday for the parliamentary Code – but we are adhering since 2015 and from today. He says, 'Don't twist my words,' but he has not said they have studiously failed to say since 2015 and since three o'clock this afternoon that before the resolution is passed on Friday, when they will be bound by it, they will voluntarily adhere to the Code. We voluntarily adhere from 2015 and from between now and Friday. There is no twisting of words that have not been used, because they failed to say that they commit.

525 Mr Speaker: May I ask the Chief Minister also to put his views in writing, so I may consider them? Thank you.

530 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, once I have seen Mr Clinton's, because it would be in response rather than ...

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

535 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I may not have been in this House long enough to understand what is normal process in seeking a ruling from the Speaker, but surely it cannot be right that he has to see it before I send it to you?

540 Hon. Chief Minister: That is not what I have suggested, Mr Speaker, for one moment. Once he has sent it to you, either Mr Clinton can send it to me so I know what I am replying to, or you can send it to me so I know what I am replying to, which is the normal way of having an argument on the papers, and in court it would not happen otherwise. One is not expected to meet a case which has not been put.

545 Mr Speaker: I would suggest that we proceed along the lines that I sought before, which was to get the views of the Hon. Roy Clinton, then I will ask the Chief Minister to give me his views and then I will decide how we proceed.

Thank you.

PAPERS TO BE LAID

550 Clerk: (vi) Papers to be laid – the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to lay on the table the Ministerial Code and the Code of Conduct for Members of the Gibraltar Parliament, so that they be binding from today.

555 Mr Speaker: Ordered to lie.

Questions for Oral Answer

TRANSPORT

Q236/2023

Sundial roundabout – Plans to refurbish

Clerk: (vii) Reports of Committees; (viii) Answers to Oral Questions.
Question 236/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

560 Hon. D J Bossino: Are there plans to refurbish the Sundial roundabout?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Transport.

565 Minister for Transport (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, plans to refurbish the Sundial roundabout are in hand to coincide with the project to relocate the College of Further Education and the development of the new GFA National Stadium, both of which, alongside the redevelopment of the old Blands/AVIS building and the plot of the old Bayside School, will very materially enhance the area.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, it was more from a tourism angle that I asked this, because representations have been made to me about that particular roundabout, and indeed I have 570 another one on the Order Paper about the aesthetic state. I have a few questions on the Order Paper which deal with issues like those, which are basic points that we on this side of the House think ought to be addressed and sites which ought to be refurbished to make the place look nicer and more adequate. Is he able to give me a timeline as to when he thinks this particular roundabout will be refurbished?

575 And may I ask him – I appreciate I am asking a second question, but it is so closely linked, so with the Speaker’s permission – would he consider, subject to how long he thinks it is going to take to refurbish the roundabout, doing some basic refurbishment in advance of that?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer because I am dealing with matters 580 that relate to budgetary provision and making money available for this sort of work, and with the Deputy Chief Minister I have sight of what is being proposed in the area.

The hon. Gentleman has got up, in effect – and I want him to reflect on how we hear what he says – and is saying to us, ‘Make a few hundred thousand available to refurbish the Sundial roundabout.’ Gibraltar is in deficit. We are not in surplus. We have run Gibraltar through nine 585 years of surplus, and COVID came and there is no surplus. Everything that we are asked to do, therefore, involves spending. The question is does it involve spending that we should prioritise at this stage? There will be other questions on the Order Paper that will have higher priority in spending. The refurbishment of the Sundial roundabout is not a priority for government spending at the moment. Indeed, we believe that it is likely we will be able to provide for the refurbishments 590 in the area to also provide for the refurbishment of the Sundial and other parts of the public thoroughfare there, as part of the social gain that the development will provide through the funding of developers for that area.

There are many things to do in Gibraltar that cost a lot of money. Government is about 595 prioritising that spending, and when we prioritise that spending it may not be visible that we spend on something else that matters more, but it matters more. So when the Minister for Financial Stability and I are looking at the estimates for the Gibraltar Health Authority and deciding to let them have more for better healthcare in Gibraltar in a particular area which might see an improvement on ... I am not meaning to be facetious, but I want him to understand how politically 600 less valuable it is for us but important as a Government when we are going to provide better quality nappies for those in ERS in advanced age who might need them, or spend that same £100,000 on refurbishing the Sundial. It is always difficult to do the exercise, but you have to do it first by looking at the gain to our people directly rather than the gain we would have – because I am not saying it is not a gain – in having a nicer entrance roundabout to Gibraltar.

If he bears with me, I will tell him – there is another question on the Order Paper, but it is 605 already public – that the first roundabout you are going to hit when you come into Gibraltar is not the Sundial roundabout anymore. As from the end of this month, before we are back for questions the tunnel will have opened, so a huge new roundabout, planned not by us but by them when they were in government, in the area of Eastern Beach is going to be facilitated, is being planted, will have lights etc., and the first point at which people will be in Gibraltar under our magnificent 610 North Face will be at that Beach View Terraces Eastern Beach roundabout and the Sundial will be somewhere else, in an area that will be covered in construction for the better part of the next 18 to 24 months: the new stadium – well, at least the new stadium if we are elected, not if they are elected, because they will not build it; the new College of Further Education, as long as we grant the contract and it starts being built, because they might not; and a new facility where the 615 old Blands/Avis building was going to be.

If you were going to see all of that area up in development for the next 18 to 24 months, you would not be refurbishing the Sundial roundabout anyway. With all of the works that are going to be there, you would refurbish it after that. So you would make the choice to spend the money now on the other issues rather than the Sundial roundabout, and I hope that when he sees it that 620 way he will reflect that actually the Government is making the right decision in spending on the things which are directly relevant to our people rather than on a refurbishment in this area at this stage.

Of course, we can have a fuller debate at Budget time, once we have shown hon. Members, after the end of March, how we have prioritised the spending we are going to do, despite being 625 in a deficit situation, in the Book that we will circulate in keeping with the Rules.

Hon. D J Bossino:] I think he has got to the point in a rather roundabout way, if I may. Is he telling this House, in answer to my direct question as to when the Government thinks it will be in a position to refurbish that particular roundabout, that we are talking about a period of about ... I 630 think he said 18 to 24 months. I do appreciate that you would not spend money on carrying out this particular work if it is going to be a construction site in a short period of time.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the last thing I intended to do – and I assume that the pun was intended from the hon. Gentleman – was to give him a roundabout answer. I was just showing 635 him that things are not as linear in government as they might appear to be from opposition, and neither can questioning be of the cross-examination style when one asks for a yes or no answer and asks for a clear timeline.

What I am saying is that we think it will not be necessary to use government money to refurbish the Sundial roundabout. We believe it will be possible to include the refurbishment of the Sundial 640 roundabout as part of the public gain from the developments in the area, and that the developments in the area are likely to take 18 to 24 months. I hope that distils the answer that I gave the hon. Gentleman to its irreducible facets so that he considers his question answered.

Hon. D J Bossino: Yes, Mr Speaker, and I think he, himself, acknowledged in a television 645 interview that particular roundabout did require refurbishment, so in that sense I think we are both on the same page.

I think he said in his initial answer a couple of hundred thousand pounds. Is that a formal estimate he has in terms of what they intend to do by way of refurbishment?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, it is not a formal estimate. It is my decade-long 650 experience of what anything costs in government if the Government does it. I will give him the reason for that.

When I was first elected, I had been very vehement in my opposition to the then GSD Government's failure to deal with one particular pavement. I was elected and immediately said, 'I 655 want this dealt with immediately,' as you do when you are first elected. That was a week before we found out that actually the only difference between the 2010 arrival at the Treasury by Conservative Ministers and the 2011 arrival at the Treasury by Socialist Liberal Ministers in Gibraltar was that we did not have the courtesy of a note that said there is no money left, and we were told that actually there was a £100 million hole that we needed to deal with. So we had to 660 stop all the spending that we were doing until the new financial year, to be able to start rebuilding. I said, 'This this must be fixed' – this pavement, I kid him not it was a stretch no longer than 50 m, I forget where – 'and it must be fixed immediately.' They said, 'We will bring you a quote.'

The quote for the pavement – it will be in my autobiography, so he will read the detail of it when the time comes – was in excess of £150,000. I thought it just required some tiles and a little 665 bit of cement. It will be a right riveting read, I assure them, Mr Speaker, although I will not describe how a former Chief Minister described somebody else's biography, which I will share with hon. Members behind the Speaker's Chair because it is far too funny to share here. The cost was £150,000. I could not understand how laying 50 m of paving could cost £150,000. Well, because 670 when you are doing it, you have to go down the three layers of utilities. Every time we do works, we refurbish the utilities that are passing under the area where we work. That is how we ensure that we do works on utilities. So the AquaGib area, the Gibelec area, the other municipal ducts that we had in the area, all of that had to be done. The works were going to take three months, it required more than one contractor and it was £150,000. I said, 'Hold that thought, we will deal with it in the next financial year.'

675 It is difficult to find anything the Government does that does not cost at least £100,000. That is not inefficiency, because we have managed to keep costs down in many areas and do things below the cost we were being charged in 2011, even now, but it is a reality of what we have to deal with, and the hon. Gentlemen should hear it from me as soon as possible to understand what things entail and why we have to prioritise other things in many instances, especially when we are 680 in a deficit situation.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for –

Mr Speaker: This will be the last one.

685

Hon. D J Bossino: [Inaudible]

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I have not made a formal prediction of how long the works are going to take, but from what I know of the timings I expect that the projects in that area will take 18 to 24 months once they start. I cannot tell him when they are going to start. The Deputy Chief Minister is finalising negotiations in respect of one of them, the College, and there is another question on the Order Paper in respect of that. The Savings Bank and the GFA are continuing their work to start the work on the stadium, and the Blands project I know has already got DPC consent and I think some works have already begun. Hon. Members will have seen that 690 there is some work going on there at the moment which relates to cycle lanes. That is going to become effective because the runway is going to close, we are going to have bicycles and pedestrians only on the runway, so that can start happening now and the tunnel is going to open before the end of the month. In that context, it is 18 to 24 months from the start of the relevant works on site in each of those projects, all of which I think will happen probably within six months 695 of each other.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q237/2023

International driving permits – Waiting times

Clerk: Question 237/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

705 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What is the current waiting time for both types of international driving permit?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Transport.

710 Minister for Transport (Hon. P J Balban): Mr Speaker, once international driving permit applications are processed, licences are produced and posted within five working days.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for his answer. Does he, himself, have any queries from people complaining about the length of time? Perhaps it is not the delivery of the permits themselves, maybe the post is slow. My information is that they are taking 715 a while, so I am just trying to understand where that break actually happens.

720 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, I asked the question numerous times because I thought this question was being asked for a particular reason, and obviously this is the reason. I asked them and they said that there had not been any delays. I asked them have there been times when it has taken more than five days and they have confirmed that it has not and we have not received any complaints, so whether it is postage ... no idea, but it is not from our side.

725 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you. Can I just ask are both types of international permit dispatched in the same timeline?

730 Hon. P J Balban: Mr Speaker, I would assume so. The permit that is mostly applied for, which now is, in fact, going to be relevant because we have just issued a statement – I think it was yesterday – stating that we have come to an agreement whereby Gibraltar driving licence owners will not need to have an international driving permit to be able to drive in Spain ... But the one that is relevant to most of us is the 1949 Geneva Convention on Road Traffic, which includes Spain, and that is the one that has most of the countries we would expect to visit. The Vienna Convention is the other one, and I think very few people apply for that. I believe there is a third one as well, which only includes two countries. But for all intents and purposes, the one we need at the moment is the one that we have managed to remove successfully.

735 Mr Speaker: Next question.

BUSINESS, TOURISM AND THE PORT

Q238/2023

Fitur fair –

Whether attended

Clerk: Question 238/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

740 Hon. D J Bossino: Did the Government attend the Fitur fair in Madrid this year?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business and Tourism.

745 Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, Mr Bossino, the CEO, and I took the decision not to attend Fitur this year. Mr Bossino advised that rather than attending Fitur we should employ a more direct strategy. We feel that it will be more beneficial to engage on a personal basis with relevant CEOs in the industry at the top level. Therefore, Mr Bossino has embarked on meeting with tour operators in Spain and their agents personally. Mr Bossino is also looking at other marketing opportunities in Spain. The Government can review next year whether it considers it would be beneficial to attend Fitur.

750 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, the position of the hon. Member was not to attend the Madrid fair last year. The Madrid fair occurs in January every year. He says that this is now the CEO's decision. My first question is: is he in agreement? He is shaking his head. Is he in agreement with what Mr Bossino is saying?

755 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I did not say that this was Mr Bossino's decision. This was a decision taken jointly by us. This is how I work with him. We talk, we discuss, and then we decide what we want to do.

760 There are many trade fairs that we could attend, but we need to pick and choose because, as you know, we have financial constraints and we need to look for the best value for money. We think personal engagement with tour operators in Spain would be more beneficial, and that is what we are looking at doing.

765 Hon. D J Bossino: He says that that is what he is looking at doing, which is to have that personal contact, yet at the same time he is telling the House that he is considering attending next year. So what is it going to be? Is it his policy decision that he does not wish to attend this particular fair, which is a very important fair? This is the Fitur fair in Madrid, in the capital of Spain, our most important market by far.

770 He and I have had this debate before and I have criticised him for having taken this decision. Is he allowing the possibility – which I think he is, from his answer, but he needs to expand, given the answer he has just given – to attend the Madrid fair next year and following years thereafter?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I rise because there is a question that is beyond the Ministry.

775 First of all, the Government does not agree that our most important market is Spain. That is his view. We believe our most important market is beyond Spain and visitors to Spain who come from beyond Spain who might want to come to Gibraltar as well.

780 Second, there is a reason why that answer is worded in that way, and it is an answer that cuts across all the Ministries. It is that there is going to be a General Election this year and we may not be the Government next year. We go to the General Election with the humility of knowing that the next Government of Gibraltar will be decided by the people of Gibraltar, and so the Government can consider next year whether or not it goes to Fitur. If we are not in government, the decision may be made to go to Fitur. If we are in government, we will not go to Fitur, because that is the decision we have made consistently. We have assessed it, we have tried it, we have 785 spent money doing it, we have not seen the returns, so we have built a policy about attendance at Fitur based not on what we read in the newspapers but on the effect it has on the bottom line, on the arrivals in Gibraltar, on the cost involved. That is why we are going elsewhere, and that is why we do not agree with the basic principle that this is going to our most important market, to market in that market or not market in that market. That is why I have talked about the 790 Government making a decision next year. If the Government is of one particular complexion the decision will go one way, and if it is of a different complexion it may go another way.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, the Hon. the Chief Minister has clarified the position and it is clear ... With complete clarity he has said that it is his Government's policy decision not to attend 795 Fitur into the future. When he talks about 'elsewhere', can the Hon. the Minister to whom the questions are being made, and who has answered, tell the House with more particularity what it is that they intend to do in relation to the Spanish market, or shall we call it Spain?

Hon. V Daryanani: First of all, I hope that the Chief Minister and the Deputy Chief Minister do 800 a deal that will allow fluidity at the Frontier. (Interjection)

Mr Speaker, I have made it clear in the answer to the question that the CEO is engaging with the tour operators in Spain to see how we can attract more tourists through the Frontier. It is being done, but it is not being done in the way that he wants.

Q239/2023

Flight connection with Morocco – Prospects of securing

805 Clerk: Question 239/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: What prospects are there to secure a much needed flight connection with Morocco?

810 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business and Tourism.

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, as the hon. Member knows, it is difficult to convince airlines to open up new routes and keep them here. I spend a lot of time speaking to itinerary planners and airlines executives. Over the last few years, airlines have lost millions of pounds and have become even more cautious with new routes.

815 Having said that, last month I attended the Connect Route Development Forum in Tangier and held meetings with airlines that could fly to Gibraltar from Morocco. Discussions are taking place internally to see if there is a business case for these flights. We would then explore how to progress this.

820 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, back in November the hon. Member said that ... I asked a very similar question about trade links with Morocco, and there is another question on the Order Paper in relation to this, because I think it is a very important consideration for this Government and any future Governments, of whichever complexion, to secure new business with Morocco. I think we can all agree that it is very difficult to achieve that without a restoration – because we have had air links with Morocco in the past – of those air links, and I know that the hon. Member is keen to do that. But he said in November in this House that an announcement would be made in the coming months. Is he able to say what has happened in relation to that, why this has not come to fruition despite his, at the time, laudable aim that this was something that would materialise in the coming months? This was November 2022. We are now in March 2023 and he is still at a planning/contact stage.

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I am not at a planning/contact stage. Let me make that clear first of all. The negotiations are ongoing. We have been speaking to the airline for a while now. I think the hon. Member has to understand that we do not own this airline. We cannot force them to fly to Gibraltar. It has to make financial sense to them as a business. As he said, I am very keen. I am constantly knocking on their door and speaking to them. They have a procedure to follow, and in the case of this airline the procedure is very simple. The itinerary planners and the business development department need to prepare a business case and take it to the board, and the board will then decide whether they will start up a new route. That is the procedure they have to follow. I am constantly talking to them to see how we can help them in any way. We hope that we will have a decision soon, but at the end of the day the decision will be theirs because it has to make financial sense to them. They have lost money in the past and therefore they will be very careful in what they do.

845 Hon. D J Bossino: The hon. Member – I am assuming he was the drafter of the press release – talked about airlines in the plural. I sense that he is talking about airline company in the singular. Is that the case? Has he narrowed his approaches and contacts to one particular airline?

850 Hon. V Daryanani: No, Mr Speaker, one airline that we making progress on and the other one, we are not making as much progress as we are with this other airline.

Hon. D J Bossino: Just to narrow down on the detail ... I think this is important because this is suggestive that, at least as far as one of them is concerned, there are strong possibilities, if I could put it in those terms, of that coming to fruition. He is talking about two airline companies. I am assuming he will not be able to give us names – I am assuming that is the case; if he is able to, obviously I would welcome that information – but are they both airlines that operate exclusively from Morocco? The reason why I ask this is because it has been put to me that it is possible also to have, for example, Spanish airlines, which may have an interest in a Gibraltar-Morocco-Spain route. I appreciate that there are aspects in relation to the treaty, but if I could ...

I know I have suggested a few things and put a few questions to him, but if he could answer as much as he is able to, appreciative of the fact that some of this will be commercially sensitive.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, there is presently no right for an airline that is a Spanish airline to originate a flight in Gibraltar to a third country, because that would assume that Gibraltar Airport is a Spanish airport, and that is not acceptable to the Government.

Hon. D J Bossino: But is he able to confirm that there are two? I accept what the Hon. the Chief Minister has said and it was wrong of me to have premised the question the way I did. In relation to the airlines, are we talking about two? And if he can give me the information as to which airlines they are ... but he is already shaking his head.

Hon. V Daryanani: Yes, Mr Speaker, I can confirm that there are two airlines, but I would rather not give him the names.

There are many factors that come into why we are talking to both these airlines, because they have different aircraft. In the past, the aircraft that flew to Gibraltar was a 70-seater. The other airline has bigger aircraft. So all these decisions ... It is not easy. You cannot just knock on the door and say, 'Come to Gibraltar', and they will say, 'Yes, we will come to Gibraltar.' There are many factors that come into play before an airline will take a decision on whether they open up any routes, let alone a route where they have done so in the past and perhaps it has not worked as well.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, the Connect Route conference took place in Tangier. May I assume that the connections he is looking at are with that particular Moroccan city, or is he considering others such as, for example, Casablanca, which I am told is more of an international hub than is Tangier?

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, Casablanca and Tangier.

Hon. D J Bossino: So both?

Hon. V Daryanani: Both, yes.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q240/2023
UKGTA –
Date of last meeting

Clerk: Question 240/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Please state when was the last time the UKGTA met.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business and Tourism.

900 Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, the last time the UKGTA met was in 2017.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, that is six years ago. Is there an explanation for that? I am confident that he will be giving ... He is indicating with his mannerisms that he will be able to provide me with an answer, because it is a long time, so I would ask him to expand on his reply.

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. Member is aware of the background to the UKGTA. Is he? Yes, well, let me tell him.

This association was formed in the 1990s after the Gulf War, when it was a private sector led initiative, when the industry approached the then Government to see whether they could come together to attract overnight tourism from the United Kingdom. What happened after that was they got together and they would produce an annual brochure which would then be sent to different travel agents in the UK, where they could sell Gibraltar. This went on for quite a few years. But then, as the years have gone by, and the way things have changed ... First there were some issues with travel agents. Like I said, this was over 20 years ago, and the way they did things was valuable in the day, but as times have changed, selling tools have changed and the way people market has changed, companies themselves are doing their own marketing. One of the main participants of this UKGTA was the hotels, but the hotels are now doing their own marketing; they have their own marketing managers. So I think as time has elapsed, the importance of the UKGTA has fizzled out.
920

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, from what he is telling me, is the decision therefore to not proceed with the UKGTA, not to have any meetings? I do not think he has gone as far as to say that, although the suggestion is that everything is pointing in one particular direction, and that is that the matter is ... He talks about it fizzling out, so is the idea that this will be formally dissolved?
925

Hon. V Daryanani: No, Mr Speaker, no such decision has been taken because since I have been the Minister for Tourism in the last three and a half years there has not been a need to have this meeting. No one from the industry has come to me and said, 'Why aren't we having these meetings?' I think the industry is doing things in its own way. We work with the industry. I work very closely with the Hotel Association, for example, and with the Taxi Association. These are organisations that form part of the UKGTA, and no one has come to me and said that we should have these meetings or we should participate or meet together as the UKGTA. No concrete decision has been taken. If anybody thought it was important to resurrect these meetings, I would be happy to do so, but there is no issue as such.
930

Hon. D J Bossino: May I encourage him to consider it? It does not have to be the UKGTA or pursue what the UKGTA particularly was doing at the time, but it may be a replacement umbrella organisation, which would give him the opportunity, as the Minister for Tourism, to discuss in one place with the various relevant interested parties. Can I ask him to consider it? I think certainly my and our view would be that an organisation like this – maybe not necessarily the one he explained when he has going through the history that was in existence from the 1990s all the way through to 2017 ... It seemed to have been a good idea in the first couple of terms of the administration opposite ... that he does not abandon the idea, or at least the concept of having this opportunity to discuss this at a wider level. By this I mean tourism policy and the way to go forward, because I think certainly it is something that would assist him or any future Minister for Tourism of whichever complexion.
940
945

950 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I will take his advice on board and I will speak with the associations that form part of the UKGTA, to see whether they feel that it is something they would like to participate in and do. I will look into it for sure.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

ENVIRONMENT, SUSTAINABILITY, CLIMATE CHANGE AND EDUCATION

Q241/2023

UKGTA –

Date of last meeting

Clerk: Question 241/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

955 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state what further measure it will be deploying in the area of Harbour Views Road to prevent the unsightly and indiscriminate discarding of cigarette butts?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

960

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, there are several measures that will be implemented in this area. These include increased patrols for littering and the designation of a smoking area elsewhere for GHA staff.

965

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, it is a shame. I think we heard this before, insofar as the measures are concerned, back in 2022 – different language, but it is effectively the same answer that we have received before.

970

Just insofar as the history, before I get to my question, in 2020 we raised this important issue with the Minister and at the time he said, 'I will not legislate, I will deal with it on the basis of enforcement in terms of littering.' That was changed in 2021, when they did legislate, thankfully, and I congratulated the Minister for doing so. In 2022 we repeated the same message that we were receiving from constituents about the unsightly disposal of cigarette butts – and the Minister is too familiar, of course, with how those cigarette butts get into waterways and how damaging they can be for marine life – but now, in 2023, we are having the same messaging from the Minister insofar as those measures.

975

When are they going to get a handle on this particularly disgusting habit of people throwing cigarette butts in this particular area, which actually damages, ultimately, marine life?

980

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, it is a disgusting habit and clearly it is the people who do it who are to blame initially. The increase in patrols has already commenced, so we are starting off by pointing out that this should not be carried out and we will be following up by fining and other stricter measures.

985

There are currently discussions with the GHA for them to provide somewhere else, possibly within their premises. This problem got worse when the GHA banned smoking totally within the premises. Clearly this was not deliberate. They did not think that people would smoke and throw the cigarette butts on the ground, because there are possibilities of doing this in bins and in other ways. So we are hoping that nevertheless the GHA providing a ... perhaps the words should be 'more supervised smoking area' will improve the situation.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, obviously there are other institutions in Gibraltar that have banned smoking. I think at the end of the day the Health Authority is there to promote healthy living, and whilst people do smoke – I do appreciate that people do smoke – we must do more, mustn't we, to try to push that unhealthy habit outside the precincts of the Hospital and not encourage people who are going to our Health Service, to use it to get better, only to find that the GHA medical staff and doctors and nurses are smoking outside our Hospital? Come on, we need to do better, don't we, Mr Speaker?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I said somewhere else. I did not necessarily mean within the hospital premises. Clearly, the problem comes from there. We are getting co-operation from the GHA and discussions are ongoing that there should be some kind of supervision, so that this can be supervised, for want of a better word – I am not going to say 'policed' because clearly it would not be accurate, but supervised – by those who essentially have responsibility for the staff who do this. Clearly, it would be better if they did not smoke at all.

Q242-43/2023

Gorham's Cave and Parson's Lodge – Footfall

Clerk: Question 242/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: What is the footfall at the Gorham's Cave UNESCO World Heritage Site, divided into the cave itself, the viewing platform and specialised boat trip, since it was designated?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 243.

Clerk: Question 243/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: How many visitors have there been to Parson's Lodge over the past 10 years?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, visitors to Gorham's Cave site itself with a guide: 2016, 77; 2017, 132; 2018, 107; 2019, none – I will just add, before I am asked, that was a year when there were problems with rockfalls and the site was not accessed by visitors until the measures were taken to prevent that; 2020, 73; 2021, 123; and 2022, 94. It must be noted that the site is subject to an annual visitor quota of 120. It was slightly exceeded in 2017 due to interest after inscription, and in 2021 with post-COVID backlog. The balance was restored in the subsequent years. Site visits are subject to weather and are at the discretion of the site's director. In relation to visitors to Gorham's Cave viewing platform: 2017, which is the year it commenced operating – that is why there are not any figures for 2016, the platform opened in 2017 – 48; 2018, 724; 2019, 679; 2020, 546; 2021, 548; and 2022, 733. Visits by boat are run by a private operator and we do not keep records of their commercial operation. There is provision of assistance of information to the operator to enhance the visit.

In answer to Question 243 regarding Parson's Lodge: 2015, 52; 2016, 72; 2017, 94; 2018, 128; 2019, 144; 2020, 17; 2021, 244; and 2022, 105. Note that also visits to Parson's Lodge are by prior 1035 appointment and with a Museum guide. These commenced in 2015. The site's principal function is as a support establishment to the research work at Gorham's Cave.

Hon. D J Bossino: The answer in relation to the first limb of Question 242/2023 did strike me as being low in numbers, but the Hon. the Minister did talk about a visitor quota. Is that a visitor 1040 quota imposed by UNESCO as a result of the UNESCO listing?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: It is a combination, Mr Speaker. Remember that the access to Gorham's Cave is through the MoD and there are certain arrangements that have to be made with the MoD.
But mainly it is because it is a sensitive site and the World Heritage Organisation does not 1045 encourage overexploitation by visitors of sensitive sites.

Hon. D J Bossino: He talks about the sensitivity of the site and putting overexploitation at bay in relation to that, and it is understood on this side of the House, but is he able to state whether that is subject to a particular figure, or is it simply the subjective decision-making by him or any 1050 other relevant authority? I am not sure exactly how that works.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I would have to clarify exactly where that comes from. What I can say is that Gorham's Cave access by land is gruelling, particularly the way back, and the demand is not huge. I do believe that most requests to the Museum they are able to fit in within 1055 that quota, but as to exactly how much flexibility there is, I will need to seek advice on that. We are currently filling in our first six-yearly reports, when such issues are reviewed in consultation with the World Heritage Organisation, and therefore it may be that there are some tweaks to that arrangement, but I will find the information and I will certainly let him know.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, the concern here is that from speaking tour operators and those who wish to make Gibraltar a better, more interesting place to visit, this site and the other site that is the subject of the other question, i.e. Parson's Lodge, have been mentioned to me as potential visitor sites that are not sufficiently exploited, certainly not exploited enough. These 1060 figures would tend to agree with that analysis.

1065 He talks about the demand not being huge, and he also says in the answer he has just given me to my supplementary, but also in answer to Parson's Lodge, that appointments need to be made via the Gibraltar Museum. Is he satisfied that that process is sufficiently advertised so that tourists and other visitors know that this is the way to access these sites and that these sites are indeed available – in other words, that a visitor is not subjected to the perhaps unimaginative 1070 tourist excursions that they are currently subject to, which is, in a limited period of time, the caves, Europa Point and the galleries, if that?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I think all the tour operators who access Gibraltar are well aware of the fact that we have a World Heritage Site. I think that in connection with the World 1075 Heritage Site it is absolutely necessary that this should be booked and it should be with a specialist guide.

I must say that these sites are now going to be added to the new website, which relates mainly but not exclusively to the Nature Reserve, which we launched just a few weeks ago.

1080 Parson's Lodge, before my time as Minister for Heritage – maybe even before my time as Minister – used to be open to the public, but it was not economically viable. The footfall was not there, and certainly the interest by operators did not reflect what the hon. Member is representing now. I think it is a pity, but that is the case.

1085 Certainly the viewing platform is clearly visible. It is signposted. You can see it when you get there. People are aware of it. It has numbers that are obviously higher than the others. It could be higher, we would want it to be higher, but once again the tour operators may or may not wish to stop and take their clients there.

1090 Hon. D J Bossino: I was going to ask him, by way of supplementary, in relation to the viewing platform in particular is he able to confirm that that particular area of the Gorham's Cave site is not subjected to any of the restrictions that are applicable to the cave itself? In other words, he talks about the visitor quota, which is impacted by the exigencies of UNESCO, but also by the MoD property issues. I imagine that in relation to the latter, that may have an impact in relation to access to the viewing platform, but I would ask him to confirm the position. I was going to ask him this, but he has already stated that he himself is also not particularly satisfied by the low numbers to that particular area of the site.

1095 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, there was higher interest, as I think I said in my answer, shortly after the declaration of the site, when everybody started to find out about it. But in relation to the viewing platform, that is not subject to any restrictions and the Museum does encourage visitors. It has quite an interesting web presence and I know that they do field lot of interest, but clearly, 1100 yes, I agree that it would be wonderful to have more visitors. There are things happening in the near future which I think will advertise the site more, but that I will have to leave for another time, Mr Speaker.

1105 Hon. D J Bossino: Would he agree with me that there is mileage in trying to get the ...? It seems, from what he is telling the House in replies, that the Museum seems to have a lot of control over these particular sites. This is not on the Order Paper and one would need to presumably ask questions in relation to the contractual arrangements the Government has entered into with the entity – I have a name, but the particular limited company that runs the Museum. But should the 1110 entity that runs the Museum and the Museum itself not be encouraged to speak more to the Minister for Tourism – and, indeed, himself – to try to get those visitor numbers up? Those are very interesting sites which I think ought to be seen and Gibraltar should be showcasing those particular sites.

1115 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, they do try and I meet with them regularly. In fact, I met with them yesterday and the day before, and this is why I say they are going to be included in this website, and we are working on that. So the answer is that there is that communication, but there seems not to be the response that we would all like there to be. The operators of the viewing platform are the entity that is responsible for the World Heritage Site, and that happens to be the Gibraltar National Museum, and there are contracts in place that cover that.

1120 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, there were two questions. In relation to Parson's Lodge, may I ask him whether there are ...? I appreciate that it is the Museum, presumably, that receives ... and those who operate the Museum because they are also in control and have custody over Parson's Lodge, from his answers, and receive a budget from the Government in order to refurbish the 1125 place etc. I have not been there myself, but I have been shown photographic evidence that suggests to me that Parson's Lodge, certainly the area round it, is in a particularly deplorable state. Would he agree with that assessment that I am making? And if he does, does the Government, his Department, have any plans to knock on the door of the particular operator to get their skates on and sort that place out?

1130 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I have not had any reports saying that the site is in a deplorable state. After hearing this, I will make sure that we have a look and that, if that is the case, it is rectified, but I have never, ever been told that.

1135 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Elliott Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I have been listening attentively to the questions that my hon. Friend has put forward. I just have one question, which relates to the value for money that this community is receiving from the contract that includes Parson's Lodge.

1140 The Minister will know, of course, that the Government, on 1st August 2014, entered into a contract with Knightsfield Holdings Ltd to provide services, supply agreement, and Parson's Lodge was included as part of that. That contract I think amounts to £1 million a year. I just wondered what the Minister's view was, on the fact that the hon. Gentleman has made reference to the deplorable state, and the visitor numbers are reasonably low in the context of this ... For an 1145 amount of money that is now coming up to £10 million, is it acceptable that Parson's Lodge remains in that state and also receives low visitors? Shouldn't we be doing much more, given the money that is being spent under this contract, to encourage people to see our sites?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, that is rather disingenuous and totally unfair. Firstly, I have 1150 not accepted this definition of deplorable state. That is the first point. I would have to look into that.

Secondly, this money, which is voted in Parliament, does not go exclusively to Parson's Lodge. It goes to the tremendous work that the Gibraltar National Museum is doing at the forefront of research, for example on Neanderthals, where we probably have the world's greatest experts 1155 here, who are responsible for promoting Gibraltar and the richness of our prehistory around the world, who regularly hold internationally acclaimed conferences every year and who hold a magnificent collection on behalf of the people of Gibraltar. So trying to relate the fact that even when Parson's Lodge was open nobody turned up to whether or not the money is well spent I think is not a fair statement at all, and clearly I do not accept it.

1160 Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful, Mr Speaker. It is just one question, because obviously this contract was put in place on 1st August 2014 and we only have a number of years when visitors were visiting Parson's Lodge. What were they doing for the other six or seven years when Parson's 1165 Lodge was not visited? Were repairs being made? Was it being used as a tourist asset to encourage people to use it, to visit it and buy tickets to see it, so that we could generate some revenue in our community from it? What have they been doing to improve some of our tourist assets?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I really do not know where Mr Phillips is trying to get this conversation. The first figures I have are 2015, so I have to assume that that was the first year 1170 when Parson's Lodge was open to the public. I would have to go into the past to see whether there are more details that would be helpful at all. If the Hon. Mr Phillips wants to ask specific questions on what he is stating now, he may do so, or he may want to share his thoughts with his colleague who has the portfolio for heritage to raise it in future. I really do not know where he is trying to take this conversation, but if he wants to ask for more specific details, I will, as always, be very 1175 willing to answer them.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q244/2023
Nature Reserve –
English-speaking tourist guides

Clerk: Question 244/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

1180 Hon. D J Bossino: Does the Government have plans to appoint English-speaking guides at appropriate locations in the Nature Reserve?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1185 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, no, sir, all our officers at the tourist sites within the Upper Rock are English speaking.

1190 Hon. D J Bossino: I asked the question because of information that I have been given which suggests the country, but maybe if he allows me to explain ... I was told of not an incident but of more than one incident where somebody witnessed the way that tourists were treated. I am not suggesting that they were ill-treated, but treated in terms of trying to relay information, because the individual was unable to speak English and those particular tourists – I think he may understand where I am getting to – only spoke English. They certainly did not speak Spanish, and this gentleman, as I understand it from the information that I was given, speaks Spanish. This is an 1195 OSG employee, so his answer may be totally and utterly accurate, but I am putting it to him and I give him the opportunity to respond to that particular point. In terms of the entry point, I think it was the Lathbury Barracks entry point but I think it also impacts the St Michael’s Cave area and is an embarrassment and something I think should be sorted out as soon as possible.

1200 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, first to point out that the question referred to guides and we do not have guides, these are members of staff. I can confirm that all our employees are English speaking. They are not the only ones who are told things. We are told things too, and we have been told about a particular occasion and we have acted on it. This was, in fact, a security guard and not one of our employees, and we have since required that the company that supplies security 1205 guards will only supply English-speaking security. So this should not happen again, and if it does, I am sure somebody will tell me.

1210 Hon. D J Bossino: Given that he acknowledges the importance of this issue, because this is frontline stuff that is happening and we need to resolve it, that instruction ... I am assuming it has already been given – does he know? Rather than awaiting somebody reporting to him, or to me, or to me across the floor of the House, can he ensure that this happens and that it happens immediately?

1215 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: No. The team at the Department of the Environment is keeping tabs on this. If on any occasion, despite the supervision, somebody turns up who does not speak English, then clearly that will be taken up very seriously with the company concerned. They have been told very clearly what our requirements are.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q245-46/2023
O’Hara’s Battery and World War II tunnels –
Closure and reopening

1220 Clerk: Question 245/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: When was O’Hara’s Battery closed and when has it reopened for visits by tourists, and what was the reason for its closure?

1225 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 246.

1230 Clerk: Question 246/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: When were the World War II tunnels closed, what was the reason for their closure, and have they been reopened for visits by tourists?

1235 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, O'Hara's Battery was closed in July 2022 for extensive refurbishment. Works are ongoing and it is intended to reopen in early summer.

1240 The World War II tunnels were closed in January 2023 for rock stabilisation and electrical repair works. Works at this site are also ongoing and the intention is to open in the next two months.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, in relation to O'Hara's Battery, has that been the subject of delay – because talks about extensive refurbishments – or is it within the timeline that was expected?

1245

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: It is within the timeline. There was quite a lot of work to be done. It opened in the middle of the season, but we felt it was not up to the standard and there were one or two issues that were health and safety concerns. The intention is early summer, so that for the height of the new season it will be ready.

1250

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, that is welcome news. I think it is, again, an important site that many tour operators want to get their clients to visit.

1255 Is he able to give me further information as to which company is carrying out the refurbishment and – I appreciate this is a second question, but I think it is related – what is the nature of that, as he put it, extensive refurbishment?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: In O'Hara's?

Hon. E J Phillips: Yes.

1260

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I believe that a lot of the work is being done in house by our own team. There is probably some work that is contracted out, but I would need notice of that question. As to the details, the site had deteriorated, but again I do not have a work schedule here, something that I can share with the hon. Member. If he cares to remind me, as he often does he can contact me by WhatsApp.

1270 I have more information, though, in order to assist, on the World War II tunnels, where there were, again, health and safety issues with some of the rocks falling, and therefore that was examined. Even though it was not a danger to life because they were small pieces of stone rather than heavy rocks, it was something that we did not want to risk, in case that indicated anything worse. There were also electrical repair works. Again, that is a health and safety issue. Remember, these are very damp locations and there is deterioration of cabling and switches and so on. That is important work and that is what is being carried out.

1275 Hon. D J Bossino: In relation to the World War II tunnels, I think it was managed at one point by a private company, but that contract was terminated by the hon. Members, or at least not renewed. Is he able to confirm that that is now done – if I can borrow his expression in relation to the reply to the other question – in house?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, that is the case.

1280 Hon. D J Bossino: And a similar question to the O'Hara's Battery question: the repairs to the electrical faults and the falling rocks – is he able to say whether that is also being done in house? And if it is not, which company and entity is doing it, and does he have the costs in relation to that should it be the latter?

1285 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I have been reminded that the entity that was terminated ... No, in fact it went into liquidation, it was not terminated, and had to be taken over.

The works on rock stabilisation and the electrical works are not being done in house. These are specialised works. I do not know which companies. There was the usual process of obtaining different quotes and one was selected. Again, I can answer that question but I do not have that information here. Remember that those are the kinds of details that do not immediately jump at you when you see the original question.

Hon. D J Bossino: Yes, either we can have a WhatsApp exchange in relation to that, or I can file questions in the House.

1295 Finally, Mr Speaker, is the Government considering whether to enter into the arrangements again with another private contractor, as was the case before that other private contractor, as he has clarified in his answer, entered into liquidation? Is it something that the Government would consider as a matter of policy into the future?

1300 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: I do not think that is a relevant supplementary, but at the moment, no. At the moment we are looking at improving the displays and updating them; they were quite dated. At the moment, we are not looking at anything else.

1305 Mr Speaker: If I could remind the hon. Gentleman about the whys and wherefores of supplementary questions ... I am just going to read a number of explanations about what is the purpose of a supplementary and how it arises:

A supplementary is a follow-up device flowing from the response. The object of a supplementary question is to elucidate any ambiguity in the reply or to seek further information. It must only refer to the answer

– this is important –

out of which it immediately arises and be clearly linked to it. They must be related to it, not indirectly, but directly.

I think we have been moving away from those. (Interjections)

I will allow this last one.

1310 Hon. D J Bossino: In fact, Mr Speaker, this last question I think I am pretty confident will follow the rule.

We know from the answer that it is closed and we know the reasons for it: rockfalls and electrical repairs. He now says in the answer that he has given me that they are considering further refurbishment because the site is dated in some respects. Is he able to provide further information in relation to that, as to what the intentions are in respect of that?

1320 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, no. There are display panels there which need to be updated and so on, and this is what we are looking at. Again, this is largely being done in house because the information is kept by our Heritage department and so on. So nothing more general than that.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q247-48/2023
Cemetery –
Preferred contractors list

Clerk: Question 247/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1325 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, when will the Government issue a call for expressions of interest to establish a preferred contractors list for works at the cemetery, and what will the desired scope of works that would fall within the scope of the expression of interest be?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1330 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 248.

Clerk: Question 248/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1335 Hon. K Azopardi: What will be the criteria for eligibility and appointment on to the preferred contractors list for the cemetery?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1340 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, an expression of interest was published in October 2022. An onsite meeting with the interested parties was held on 1st November. After due consideration, the selection process was completed in February. Letters of appointment will be issued this month to those entities that have been successful for inclusion on the list of approved contractors.

1345 The criteria for eligibility are as stated in the expressions of interest published on 24th October 2022.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for that. They have not received the letter of appointment, but presumably the successful companies have been notified. They have not been notified? I give way to him – and can I just ask him how many companies we are talking about?

1350 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, they have not yet been notified. They will be notified this month. I believe there were five, six, seven entities that applied, but I am not sure how many have been successful. I would need to seek that information.

1355 Hon. K Azopardi: Sorry, five, six or seven that applied, but how many would be successful on the list?

1360 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I do not have that information here. It would probably not be more than a couple, but I do not have ... It also will depend on how many of those companies met the criteria. I have not been personally involved in the selection, so I would need to refer that to my officials.

Hon. K Azopardi: Does Government intend to make the list of successful entities public?

1365 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: I would not have a problem in making it public. I think it would probably be in the companies' interests, anyway, to publicise it because they would be wanting to attract trade. We have not decided whether we will or we will not, but I do not think there is any reason why we should not. Certainly those who are successful; those who are unsuccessful, clearly we would not.

1370 Hon. K Azopardi: I have not got the expressions of interest that the hon. Member referred to in front of me, but presumably the purpose of the preferred contractors list was so that preferred contractors can do works at the cemetery – in other words, on things like family vaults etc. People 1375 who would be commissioning works – because I understand that that work would be to the cost of individuals – would need to know who is an official contractor, because as I understand it, nobody who is not on the preferred list can do those works from the point when the official preferred contractors list is there. So it would be not just desirable but I would say important for the Government to make the list public. Does he agree?

1380 Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Yes, Mr Speaker, but I repeat that the companies will probably advertise it themselves. It is indeed true because we have had instances of ad hoc individuals or contractors doing works in the cemetery to standards that were not acceptable, which led to this now being regularised. The contractors will have to meet with the conditions, otherwise they stand the likelihood of not being allowed to carry out works in the cemetery in future, so this is something that I think people will welcome.

1385 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q249-50/2023
Supply list for SNLSAs –
Fixed-term/zero hours contracts; hourly pay rate

Clerk: Question 249/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1390 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, how many people are there on the supply list for supply special needs learning support assistants on (1) a fixed-term contract and (2) a zero hours contract?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

1395 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Question 250.

Clerk: Question 250/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1400 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, what are the differences in hourly pay rate for persons on the supply list for supply special needs learning support assistants who are on a fixed-term contract as compared to those who are on an ad hoc supply arrangement on a zero hours contract, why are there different rates and does the Government intend to remove those differences?

1405 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, (1) 64; (2) 27.
The hourly rate is the same.

1410 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, the hon. Member says the hourly rate is the same and I am glad for that confirmation. The reason for the question is that we were receiving information – and I am reading directly from the question that was put to us, from constituents – that there is a different daily rate for supply SNLSAs who are on ad hoc as opposed to on fixed-term contracts.
At the very least there appears to be a misunderstanding, if I can put it no higher than that, that would affect 40 or 50 people who have apparently been told through the channels of 1415 communication with the Department itself that they are being paid at a different rate. Is he aware that that issue exists?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: The hourly rate is the same. There had been a discrepancy in how the number of hours worked was calculated, and that has been rectified. I think that explains it, but 1420 the hourly rate was the same.

Hon. K Azopardi: So can the hon. Member say, when he says it has been rectified ...? When the information reached us, it was in relation specifically to the November and December pay packets. People were receiving different sums of money. Can he now say, when they have been rectified, 1425 have people now been paid the right sum of money that they were due? Now that it is March, have they been paid that money?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Not yet, Mr Speaker, but steps are being taken to rectify this issue.

Hon. K Azopardi: When he says steps are being taken, he will understand and accept the point that I make that when we are talking about supply special needs learning assistants, they tend to be on a fairly low income. It is important, does he not agree, that not only steps should be taken, but that by the end of this month – does he agree? – people should be paid the sums of money that they are due because they will be small but important to them?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, the instruction has been issued and this has been rectified. I have not got control of the actual people who prepare wages. It will be done as soon as possible.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am grateful and certainly I would urge the Government to do it as soon as possible, and certainly by the end of the month, I would say, given that the discrepancy has been noted and it affects people in relation to November and December salaries.
1440

In respect of the fixed-term contracts and zero hours contract numbers he has given me, he has said to me that 27 people, I think, are on the supply list for zero hour contracts learning support assistants. Can he tell me what kind of judgement is made as to why people are placed 1445 on fixed-term contracts and others are put on zero hour contracts? Can he explain that to me, and what correlation of need there is in respect of that?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Learning supply assistants for special needs respond to the specific needs identified for specific children. It could be a transitory need, in which case it would be ad hoc, or 1450 it could be a need that a child, perhaps for some particular difficulty that they are having in a particular subject or perhaps some particular difficulty in the home environment, needs to have support for say a month, say a term, and that is when that kicks in. It is very much depending on the needs of the child being looked after.

Hon. K Azopardi: So it is a rolling kind of assessment. Given the answers he has given in this House on previous occasions as to the number of children categorised as special needs hovering around 1,800-1,900, and given the sort of movement that we are seeing in the Early Birds Nursery, St Martin's and so on, does he envisage that the requirement in this area will grow? And is the Government alive to assessing that in some kind of projected coherent way for the future?

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, there is no way of telling. Clearly not every child listed as special needs will need one to one. Sometimes the need is more general and it is just one a group. Time will tell. It is very difficult for me to know what is going to happen.
1460

Mr Speaker: Next question.
1465

Q251/2023

College of Further Education – Removal to Cross of Sacrifice site

Clerk: Question 249/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Does the Government still intend to move the College of Further Education to the site of the Cross of Sacrifice in the North District?

1470

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for the Environment and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, yes, sir. We are already in negotiations with a preferred bidder as a result of the expressions of interest advertised on 7th January 2022. The current plan is to keep the Cross of Sacrifice on the site.

1475

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the Hon. Minister for his answer because my supplementary was going to be asking about the actual Cross itself. Maybe he has also heard representations of some people who are rightfully concerned.

1480

Now that he has answered, I wanted to further ask him whether ... I assume but I wanted to confirm that keeping the Cross of Sacrifice there is being done from a heritage perspective; it is something that the Government or the Ministry for the Environment will be recognising into the future as a landmark of heritage value.

1485

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: I think it is clear that it is a landmark of heritage value. I think the possibility of moving it to another location ... Campion Park was one that was identified, as it is a legitimate course of action. It was, in fact, representatives of the Royal British Legion who suggested the move of the Cross of Sacrifice, but the Royal British Legion are not the leaseholders of the site. That is the War Graves Commission, who also agree with the hon. Lady and with a lot of people in Gibraltar – not all – that it should stay on site. I can say that I am in regular discussions with the War Graves Commission as to what it is going to look like, what the surrounding area is going to be, what arrangements we have to make. So the plans are currently that the Cross stays.

1490

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

1495

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker, just a very quick question for the Minister. Can he advise the House whether, once the College moves to a new site, the site they are vacating will be used for educational purposes? Does he have any idea as to what the site would be used for?

1500

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: I think that is not directly related to the question asked, but we have not determined that at the moment.

JUSTICE, EQUALITY AND PUBLIC STANDARDS AND REGULATIONS

Q252/2023

Electric scooters –
Number stopped by RGP since new law introduced

Clerk: Question 252/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1505 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state the number of people who have been stopped by the Royal Gibraltar Police for contravening new laws in respect to electric scooters?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards.

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, the number of people stopped is not recorded by the Royal Gibraltar Police. However, in the lead up to the coming into force of the legislation in January 2023, the Royal Gibraltar Police conducted an education campaign with regard to personal light electric transporters (PLETs), including placing posters at strategic locations around Gibraltar. Around a thousand leaflets were also handed out to riders of PLETs. Those who were stopped were educated on the legislation and the offences they could be reported for, if in contravention.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, just a statistics question. As the Hon. and learned Minister will know, police officers, when they stop individuals, make a note in their pocket notebooks. I am sure she will remember from her days in practice that that is a very common thing for them to do. Do the Police have difficulties in collating that information, or is it just that it lies dormant in police notebooks and that information cannot be ascertained and is a terribly difficult thing to do?

1515

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I cannot speak for the Royal Gibraltar Police to that extent, other than that the information I have been given is that they do not record it. So it may well be that there is no system that then centrally collates that. It may well be that things are recorded in a pocket book – that is what the pocket book is for – but it is then not input, so there will not be a record of every single thing that happens throughout the day and what a police officer does throughout the day. As the hon. Gentleman knows, the pocket book is there for future reference, but probably for the police officer as opposed to the Police Force.

1520

Q253/2023

Electric scooters –

Number prosecuted since new law introduced

Clerk: Question 253/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1525

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state how many electric scooter riders have been prosecuted for contravening traffic laws?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards.

1530

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, enforcement under the new rules began on 13th February 2023 and there have been no prosecutions under these rules since their commencement.

1535

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the answer. I know that clearly there is a period of time within which information and education, as the Minister has referred to, needs to weed its way through those who are using these particular scooters. The difficulty, of course, is that many of us possibly in this Chamber and many people listening to the debate, if there are, and those outside of this House will see regular infractions by electric scooters – the wrong way, going up the wrong street – and I think it would help if we might be able to get a bit more intelligence around what is happening in terms of the warnings that are given, so that we can reassure members of the public that the issue of electric scooters is being handled.

1540

I congratulate the Minister on bringing legislation around this area, but like anything, enforcement is an important tool in the kit, isn't it, Mr Speaker?

1545

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I am grateful that the hon. Gentleman recognises the work done by those on this side of the House introducing the legislation, and that is the important thing that we have done. That is the tool in the armoury, but we need to set it into context. This is a recent piece of legislation that has been passed this year. It has been commenced literally a couple of weeks ago and, at the moment, the strategy that the Police seem to be undertaking is one of awareness as opposed to criminalisation. The enforcement of the law is a matter for the Royal Gibraltar Police. The law is there and that is the work that has been done by the Government and by the Parliament.

1550

The hon. Gentleman alludes to the fact that we all see infractions of this. I do not know, I have not seen it, but it is not for me; this a matter for the Royal Gibraltar Police, Mr Speaker.

1555

Q254/2023

Use of mobile phones whilst driving – Number of drivers reported

Clerk: Question 254/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state the number of people reported for using a mobile telephone whilst driving a vehicle?

1560

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards.

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, this is calculated, I think, in financial years. For the period 2021-22, 511; and for the period 2022-23 so far, 358.

1565

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I think the last time we raised this question in this House relating to those numbers ... Those numbers do remain high, but that is the active work being done, of course, by the law enforcement authorities.

1570

I think one of the comments that was made in this House by Members was in relation to young people in particular who were using devices whilst driving vehicles. What other measures is the Minister for Justice dealing with insofar as education is concerned for those individuals who might well be at school, for instance, informing them of the dangers of driving whilst being on the telephone at the same time – which is an amazing dexterity some people may have, I am sure she will agree.

1575

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, when the hon. Gentleman refers to what is being done in relation to this, the hon. Gentleman will no doubt be aware that there have been very recent changes to this legislation here that we have debated. Whereas the offence of driving using a mobile phone is an offence from a number of years ago, that as an offence has been expanded and enhanced very recently. So if the hon. Member is going to ask us what we are doing about it, it is precisely that: what we do in this House, we change laws. The laws adapt as circumstances change, and the hon. Member will know that the law in relation to this offence is now much wider and it is the work of the Minister for Traffic and Transport.

1580

Q255/2023

Speeding fines –

Number imposed by courts in last 12 months

1585 Clerk: Question 255/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state the number of speeding fines imposed by the courts over the last 12 months?

1590 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards.

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, 15 people were convicted for the offence of speeding in the last 12 months.

Q257/2023

New fire station –

Hot wear training

1595 Clerk: Question 257/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Does the new fire station being built at the Rooke envisage the provision of adequate areas for hot wear training?

1600 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards.

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, this will not be provided in the new fire station and this is not something that has ever been provided in our fire stations.

1605

Hon. D J Bossino: Could she be a bit more helpful in her reply, and could she advise this House whether it will be provided elsewhere – there was a manifesto commitment in 2019 to construct this facility, which I hasten to add I am told by the experts in the field is of fundamental importance given that it is heat training and firefighters do deal with fires – and whether it is being constructed at Europa Advance Road, which was the old refuse incinerator? That was the manifesto commitment of 2019 that I am referring to.

1610

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I would love to know which experts the hon. Gentleman is speaking to. Of course hot fire training is important. Anyone who hears what the hon. Gentleman has just said might be mistaken for thinking that the Fire Service do not undertake hot fire training. For goodness sake, Mr Speaker, he is just completely trying to mislead anyone who may be listening.

1615

Mr Speaker: I think you should not use the word ‘mislead’. You must be withdraw it.

1620

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: I apologise, Mr Speaker, but [Inaudible] ... is because of what the hon. Gentleman said, because his experts come and tell him how important this hot wear training is. Of course it is important, but neither the hon. Gentleman nor those experts who are advising him have discovered America. Of course hot wear training is important, but it does not mean it 1625 has to be provided in the Rooke, and if the hon. Gentleman thought it was so important ... well, it did not make its way to the GSD manifesto.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, the hon. Lady is being singularly unhelpful in her response. I stand by every single word I deployed in my supplementary question, every single word of it. Is she able to please answer the question that I posed? She has to acknowledge that she has completely and utterly failed to do so.

1630 I ask her once again: where is the hot wear training going to be provided? It is clear from her answer that it is not a training facility that is going to be provided, rather remarkably, at the new fire station at the Rooke site. Where can she tell us this heat training, so fundamentally important to firefighters, is going to be provided?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I regret that the hon. Gentleman is now taking this attitude. The problem is in the way the hon. Gentleman has phrased the question. Had the hon. Gentleman phrased the question in the way he has phrased his supplementary ... because if that is what he is getting to, then the hon. Gentleman needs to learn how to ask the right question. He has now asked me in the supplementary a completely different question. He has asked me to confirm where this training is going to be provided. That is not what he asked. He asked specifically if this was going to be provided in the Rooke, next to all these housing estates. Question: is the area for hot wear training to be provided in Rooke? Answer, no. (Hon. Chief Minister: Exactly.)

1640 Mr Speaker, I invite the hon. Gentleman to give more consideration to the questions he asks in this House. I invite the hon. Gentleman to be more specific, and then maybe we can deal with questions and answers in a more timely manner.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, what a ridiculous answer, quite frankly.

1650 Mr Speaker: Let's pipe down, both sides. Let's take things nice and easy. Moderate. Ask the supplementary and we will get an answer. Let's settle down.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, it is the hon. Lady in her replies who is raising the temperature unnecessarily. She is not answering the question.

1655 I need to ask her again. Let's put it in a different way. I have asked her where is the heat training going to be provided. It is not going to be provided at the Rooke. Where on earth is it going to be provided? Presumably in Gibraltar. I have referred to her very specifically the manifesto commitment they made in 2019 of a specific location. Can she please confirm that it is going to be provided there? This of fundamental importance to the service.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, finally a clear question from the hon. Gentleman.

Mr Speaker: Please resume your seat now.
Please continue.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I raise a point of –

Mr Speaker: No, you are not going to raise a point, you are going to resume your seat now. (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) You are going to resume your seat. (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) No, you are going to resume your seat. (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) Do you know what is going to happen if you continue like this?

Hon. D J Bossino: What?

Mr Speaker: I am going to ask you to leave if you do not respect my – (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) I am going to ask you to resume your seat and let us continue.

1680 Hon. Lady, please answer the question – (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) No, I am not going to ... I am asking you to resume your seat because I do not really want to take any further action against you, but I will if you do not obey what I am saying.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, at Lathbury.

1685 Hon. D J Bossino: I think she almost whispered that reply. Did she say at Lathbury?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): She whispered it into her microphone, (A Member: Oh, my God.) which is hardly whispering.

1690 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I will repeat for the benefit of the hon. Gentleman: at Lathbury.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, is she able to advise this House when that construction is going to be completed? When is that training going to be made available to fire fighters?

1695 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, as I said in my first answer to the question on the Order Paper – and we are now straying beyond the question on the Order Paper because the hon. Gentleman likes to ask one question when he intends to ask another, and we all have to guess where the hon. Gentleman wants to get to – hot wear training is already provided for the members of the Fire Service. If the hon. Gentleman wants to stray away from the original question and ask me a different question, then the hon. Gentleman has an opportunity at the next meeting of his House.

1700 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, is she telling us that the heat training is going to be provided at Lathbury, is currently being provided at Lathbury, or is this a statement of future intent? That is the way I have understood it. I have asked her when is heat training going to be provided at the site that she has referred to at Lathbury, and, assuming that something is going to happen in the future, where is it currently being provided?

1710 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, it is already being provided at Lathbury.

Mr Speaker: Next question. (Interjection)

Q258/2023

Devil's Tower Road holistic planning policy – Whether published

Clerk: Question 258/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

1715 Hon. D J Bossino: Has the holistic planning policy in respect of Devil's Tower Road been published?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards.

1720 Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, yes. It is, therefore, in the public domain.

Hon. D J Bossino: Can I ask her when it was published, and where is it published?

1725 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I would invite the hon. Gentleman to undertake a search on any search engine for this and it will immediately pop up on the Government's website under town planning. If the hon. Gentleman has not done this before asking this question in this House, I did so myself before coming, to check that it had actually been done upon our instruction, and I am happy to send the hon. Gentleman the link to the Google search that I did so that he can have it.

1730 Hon. D J Bossino: I am grateful to the hon. Lady. May I ask her why it has taken so long to devise this policy?

1735 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I do not agree with the hon. Gentleman that it has taken that long. The question was is it available, and the answer is yes, it is available. It is in the public domain. The hon. Gentleman may wish to go and undertake a search in a search engine, read the document and then maybe ask questions.

1740 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I am not asking about the publication, I am asking about the policy itself. Why has it taken the Government so long to publish this policy? It is a simple question. Devil's Tower Road is now a concrete jungle. The horse has, in many respects, bolted. Whilst we welcome it because at least it is something, I am asking her why has the Government taken so long to produce a specific policy in relation to Devil's Tower Road before the construction spree it has undergone over the last few years?

1745 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, in late November 2019 a germ appears to have escaped a laboratory in China or otherwise created a germ which came to be known as COVID-19 ...

1750 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, long before the germ made an appearance there was already a significant amount of construction going on. The hon. Gentlemen themselves say that a lot of their construction projects have had to be paused precisely because of the germ. Therefore, is he asking us to believe that all the tall buildings, all the construction, the veritable concrete jungle that Gibraltar has been subjected to, particularly at Devil's Tower Road – that is relevant to the question – happened after we had the release all of the restrictions? Is he really expecting us to believe that? There are moments in time in respect of certain matters that the Government is unable to pray in aid COVID and the germ. Does he not accept that?

1760 Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, of course I accept that, but when has this become relevant? When did Bassadone move out of their showroom? When did Saccone and Speed sell? That is when these issues have started to become relevant. When was this issue first raised? In September last year. That is when these issues first started to come about, when we proposed Hassan Centenary Terraces, which we believe is a massively important project for the people of Gibraltar to grow their families in affordable homes alongside those families at Beach View Terraces who are growing Gibraltarian families, and which we do not regard, therefore, as a concrete jungle, we regard as a massively important socio-economic policy for Gibraltar and Gibraltarians. When it is first raised in the DPC, it is raised in September last year, but why is everything else delayed? For that reason – for the pandemic reason.

1770 As the hon. Lady rightly says – maybe it is that he does not like to take it from a woman; he might take it from me – we are not delayed. We do not consider there is an excessive delay. We consider we are acting properly and we do not believe that Devil's Tower Road is a concrete jungle. We believe that Devil's Tower Road is an area that is going through a massively positive redevelopment, which was very rundown and is going to look a lot better in the future. We 1775 understand that people want offices, we understand that people want homes for their children and we understand that we have two and a half square miles by one mile to build on – and they pander to those who say too much development, too much concrete, and then say, Pero no te preocupas que yo te voy dar la casa para el niño. Where are you going to put it, Mr Speaker?

1780 This is the reality of what we are dealing with. We have questions being put to the Government that try to box us in both to build more to house more people and to build more to have more offices, to have a stronger economy, to get into surplus, to do all the things that we want to do for our community, to house all the people we want to house – and at the same time we are being told not to build tall. Well, Mr Speaker, somebody has to realise, the hon. Gentleman being the first of them, that there is just so much you can do on the surface area that we have and in an area that was remarkably run down, was industrial and is coming up now with an East Side that is going to be a magnificent gem of a development with the magnificent towers at Hassan Centenary Terraces, which are going to look iconic when they are finished. Already people can see what they look like.

1785 We are doing the right thing in the area of the north of Gibraltar, we are doing the right thing in the area of Devil's Tower Road and the policy that has been published is not delayed, it is bang on time.

1790 Hon. D J Bossino: To be honest, quite an unimpressive reply in terms of the question I have posed, but of all the things that he has said ... That can be the subject of debate, and we on the side of the House are more than happy to have it, and we certainly stand by the criticisms we have made in relation to that particular road, which is ... because of the height of the building and other issues, I think basically an opportunity has been lost, and as a result of the losing of that opportunity we are seeing, in many respects, the defacing of our iconic Rock because it has changed radically over the last very recent years.

1795 But of all the things the Hon. Chief Minister has said in reply to my question, the one I take most offence at is that suggestion that because it has come from a woman I may not accept it. That is wholly and utterly unacceptable as far as I am concerned, (Interjection) and, indeed, I would hasten to add, as my learned friend here says to my right, unparliamentary, because it suggests and attributes things to me which I am certainly not. I am totally in favour, in fact, of more representation of women in this House. (A Member: Yes.) I want to see more women in this House. (A Member: Yes.) (Banging on desks)

1800 I talked about delay, and the delay we can talk about, as I was suggesting in my first question, of a wider window, but let's go for a smaller window. He says in his reply, and he is right, that the Government alighted on this issue in September 2022. Why has it taken them three or four months, to this month, to issue this policy statement and submit it to the DPC? Is it not as a result of the deluge of applications which that particular Commission is receiving that the DPC themselves have had the courage, particularly the NGOs, to speak not only in session but outside of it in interviews for GBC, complaining about the fact that they have no road map? We have had it from the head of the Environmental Safety Group and we have also had it from the former head of the Gibraltar Heritage Trust in various letters to the Chronicle when they have been calling for this because it was out of control.

1805 I still stand by the criticism made, the premise of my criticism, which is that the horse has, in many respects ... I still think it is salvageable, and in that sense, subject to reading the document, I welcome the principle that there is a specific policy for that area. But back to my question, Mr Speaker: why has it taken the Government so long – and let's take it from September to now – to publish this document?

1820 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am very pleased that the hon. Gentleman stands by everything he said. I am very pleased he has said it is not because the hon. Lady is a woman who was telling him. He has clarified his position. I am very pleased that he accepts that we should have more women in this House. That is our position, too. I am very pleased with all of that. He

1825 should be surprised that I felt it needed clarifying from him. He should look himself in the mirror a bit more in that respect. But I will tell you what, Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: With respect to the Chief Minister, I think that is – 1830 Hon. Chief Minister: I withdraw that.

I will tell him something, Mr Speaker. If he says he stands by his position he needs to tell me which position it is, because the position that Devil's Tower Road is an area for the development of residential housing, no longer to be industrial, with tall buildings, comes from the development plan of the GSD in 2009, the one that he said was the golden legacy that we inherited. Everything they do is fantastic and is a golden legacy. Even litigation that takes you 15 years is a golden legacy. Everything we do is wrong, even when what we are doing is exactly the same thing that they were suggesting. Or is it that he does not realise that the development plan of 2009 is also a public document and he has not had regard to it before making the points that he has making?

1840 Mr Speaker, the final point that I would like to make in answer to the hon. Gentleman's question is that it does not require bravery for a member of the DPC to speak out, not in our time anyway. Or has he forgotten that the DPC sat in private, in secret, when they were in government, and that when we brought the reforms here, they told us, with him in opposition, that we should not make the DPC public? They told us that we should keep the DPC that they had. We appointed Janet Howitt and the ESG to the DPC so that they could speak their mind. Janet Howitt has been 1845 brave – not that it requires bravery, because we welcome dissent – since the first day we appointed her. She has never voted with the Government since we appointed her – I think maybe once – has always spoken her mind, which is why we appointed her, and has gone on the news, on NewsWatch, or GBC News as it may now be called, many times since we appointed her, and that is why we appointed her. So people speaking their mind and having a contrary view to the 1850 Government is not something that requires bravery in the face of this Government. It requires bravery in the face of a government that takes steps against those who speak out because they are not toeing the party line. That is not this Government, but it was their Government, (A Member: Yes.) and we have all lived that, including the now leader of their party.

1855 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Damon Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I really do not recognise anything of what the hon. Gentleman is saying. This is a question which quite properly was answered by the hon. Lady, but as usual he intervenes. This is a sign of the fact that this Government is already nearing the end of its days. 1860 The hon. Member has been there for too long. He has to intervene in respect of almost every answer his Ministers give. He is becoming a veritable emperor. That is the fact. (Interjection)

Mr Speaker: Please resume your seat. This this developing into a debate.

I think I would like to quote from a previous ruling. It says:

should the questioner make a statement, instead of asking a supplementary question, or make what I consider to be too long a preamble before asking the supplementary question, then, having allowed the Minister to reply, I will move on to the next question on the order paper.

1865 Ask the question in terms which are short and concise, and then perhaps we can make some progress.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, of course I try to comply with that direction, that ruling, but we have been subjected to a rather lengthy party political response from the hon. Gentleman (A Member: Historically inaccurate.) and it is breaching, on their side, the rule that the questions and 1870 answers sessions should not be used as a means for debate. Surely that same diktat should apply to the hon. Members opposite and not just us on this side of the House. (Interjection)

Mr Speaker: But going back to Standing Orders, it says:

not more than one subject shall be referred to in any one question and a question shall not be of excessive length;

1875 Hon. D J Bossino: By way of clarification, Mr Speaker, does that therefore mean that the answers can be as lengthy as the hon. Members wish and they are given free rein? (Interjections)
At the end of the day this is a matter that has been –

Mr Speaker: Please resume your seat.

1880 Quoting from a previous Speaker's ruling, it says:

Although I do not have any powers under the Standing Rules and Orders to curb the length of Ministers answers to supplementary questions, I would like to urge them not to make such answers longer than is absolutely necessary.

I am asking the Chief Minister and Members of the Government to take that on board also.

1885 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, there is also another point, which is that – (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister). Mr Speaker, I will ask the question, but it is about ... The point I was making – (Interjections)

Mr Speaker: I think the hon. Member has made the point. Let's – 1890 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, if I may, it is also about using the question and answer session ... I think we have seen a particularly specific, acute breach by the hon. Member opposite in his previous answer about the conduit of question and answer sessions to get to a political debate. I think that also has to be taken account of.

Mr Speaker: Resume your seat.

1895 I think this whole string of events led from one question; I think it was put by the hon. Member. I am referring again to Standing Orders and it says:

a question shall not contain any argument, inference, imputation, epithet, or ironical expression;

1900 I would ask the hon. Member to pick up his dictionary and find out what 'ironical expression' covers. I am sure he will understand that all this series of encounters between the Members started from comments that he made at the very beginning, (A Member: Yes.) and if I were to ask you to go back to Hansard when it is printed, you will see that I am right.

1905 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, in posing the question in answer to the point that the Hon. the Chief Minister made, I do not recognise any of that. We can go into a history lesson as to the way they did things in their previous administrations and all the rest of it, but I do not recognise any of that.

1910 He tries to throw at me the aims and recommendations that the GSD 2009 development plan had in relation to Devil's Tower Road, which I accept – and I have read it. Does he not accept that the reason why the hon. Members opposite have, albeit delayed, had to come up with a specific holistic plan, as they describe it – I will come to a conclusion in relation to that when I read it – in relation to Devil's Tower Road is because of their utter and complete failure in producing an updated plan by 2019, and that the COVID excuse, which in this case is a word I use advisedly because it is an excuse, would have had no impact given that 10 years from 2009 is 2019, and 2019 was a year before the bug hit the world?

1915 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am going to deal with everything that the hon. Gentleman has said. First of all, I do not accept that there is anything that has been done that enables the hon. Gentleman to characterise this Government as anything other than a success, but the judgement of success or failure will not be made by the hon. Gentleman, it will be made by the public, who will determine whether we have been successful in our time in this period in office, 1920 or not, during the course of a General Election that will be held later this year. He should not set himself up as the person who determines whether we are successful or whether we are a failure, because there is a third party that will determine that, and that is the public, and we subject ourselves to the judgement of the public.

I get up to sometimes address issues that relate to portfolios of my colleagues because there are some issues that are cross-portfolio, and as the party that has had now the same, apart from one, 10 Ministers for 10 years, a lot of Members have been in different portfolios and I have held the same portfolio, which gives me an insight into many of these areas for that period. So in that context, I think it is particularly unfair for the hon. Gentleman to characterise me in the way that he does. He knows that others have referred to my predecessor in office as Chief Minister for his imperial style and referred to him as an emperor, and he knows that in getting up and referring to me in that way he is trying to characterise me in that way and saying that I am atrophying in office in the same way as my predecessor atrophied in office. But of course that is impossible because I come from the GSLP tradition. There are no emperors in the GSLP, there are only those of us who accept the judgement of those who put us in our place: the people in the GSLP on the executive committee who vote for candidates, and the people in the general membership of the 1930 GSLP who vote for leaders. That is the reason why that is mischaracterised. Rome's decline began when it became an empire, it was as a republic that it flourished the most, so I do not recognise, in the same way as he does not recognise, any of what he alleges. 1935

He should remember that he is reflecting on the Government that has delivered the success that it has delivered economically until the pandemic happened. It was not possible to imagine perhaps Saccone and Speed would move from where it was and that a very large plot on Devil's Tower Road would become available. It was not possible to imagine that it would be possible to finally rehouse Bassadone, which they had promised to do, except that the amount that they charged them for a reclamation of the runway was less than one quarter of what it would cost to create that reclamation of the runway, but we were able to fix that, too. 1940

What we have endeavoured to deliver is a development plan that was there before we were elected, a development plan which, for reasons we have already set out, we have not amended before, but that in that area will likely not change because in that area we are still committed and think it makes sense to move away from industrial, because this will now be the entrance into Gibraltar, into high-end residential, because it will be near the East Side and near our affordable homes, and because in that area we are going from very unsightly to a very modern and good-looking Gibraltar that people will see on entrance to Gibraltar. They will still see the North Face. 1950

The final point I would make is that it is just not possible to say that our North Face is being defaced. Our North Face stands as beautiful and as proud as ever. That is really Gibraltar's imperial majesty. There was a dream that was Rome. There is a dream that is Gibraltar. 1955

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q259/2023

Gibraltar Development Plan –
Expected date of completion and publication

Clerk: Question 259/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

1960 Hon. D J Bossino: Please provide an update as to when the Gibraltar Development Plan will be completed and published.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards.

1965 Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, given the value of this, this work needs to go out to a wider tender process. This process is complex and is now in its final stages.

1970 Hon. D J Bossino: I did not quite catch the premise of her answer. I have heard that she has said it is now going to a wider tender process, but she said 'given the ...' I just missed that. Could she repeat it?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I said given the value of this.

1975 Mr Speaker: Could I ask the hon. Lady to repeat the whole of the answer, please?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, given the value of this, this work needs to go out to a wider tender process. This process is complex and is now in its final stages.

1980 Hon. D J Bossino: When she talks about the value, is this as a result of what used to be and now it will be acquired national legislation, the EU procurement directives and rules?

1985 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, those, as the hon. Gentleman I am sure knows, are retained and they therefore kick in and apply. It is an extremely complex process that we have to follow, but I am glad to say that we are in the final stages of that.

Hon. D J Bossino: We have had an exchange in relation to delays and I do not propose to go into that; I am trying to keep the temperature down.

1990 How has this come about? When I last asked her questions in the House – just to remind members, on 19th October – she was talking about the tender process completing in this financial year. The financial year is coming to an end at the end of this month. The expectation, based on those answers, was that she would then be able to start and issue the instructions to the successful tenderer to prepare the development plan.

1995 If I can put it in as neutral terms as possible, given the delays that this particular government project has been subjected to, has there not been a significant failure by someone on the opposite side in not identifying the fact that this needed to comply with the EU procurement rules – which I know is a complex system, it needs to go out to the wider EU and it is much more refined and complex than would otherwise be the case? Has there not been a failure by somebody somewhere in –?

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Will he give way?

Hon. D J Bossino: Yes, of course.

2005 Hon. Chief Minister: On the posing of the question, it opens up nationally, not to the wider EU. Now it is retained legislation, so there is ... Yes, okay.

Hon. D J Bossino: The hon. Gentleman has corrected me twice already in relation to the fact that we have had had Gibexit and we are still in the throes of a possible negotiated outcome, which is something that certainly I do wish will happen, so long as it is a safe and secure deal.

2010 The point was – I think I made it already, but just simply to conclude as a result of the Hon. Chief Minister's intervention – has there not been a failure to recognise that this was a legal requirement in the first place?

2015 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I have to confess to the hon. Gentleman that I do not understand that supplementary question. There has been no failure to understand the legal requirement. It is precisely because of the legal requirement that it has taken this long.

The hon. Gentleman refers back to October 2022 when he asked me this question. At that point I explained to him where we were in terms of the procurement process. It was the same process then, but because we were subject to these rules back then, the tender process had elapsed and we had to commence again. In the intervening period we have had COVID. We are not going to rehearse the whole reasons for COVID and why other things have been given priority since 2019, but the chronology was that there was a development plan, a 10-year plan from 2009, which would elapse in 2019. Before it elapsed we had embarked on the tender process for a new one. In the throes of the tender process we had COVID, so during that intervening period that process was paused. Because of the time that had elapsed, it expired and we had to start again. When we started again, as we had already commenced when the hon. Gentleman asked me ... We have, since that point, undertaken a lot of progress and we are now in the final stages to meet all the legal requirements that are required for us to undertake this tender process.

2030 Hon. D J Bossino: I see. So is the hon. Lady saying that when she gave her response to my question in October it already accounted for what used to be known as the EU procurement directives?

2035 She talks about elapsing times. Is that because ...? (Interjection) No, is that because ...? I have dealt with that issue professionally in the past, but I do not recall the specifics. As she rightly pointed out, it is a hugely complex piece of legislation, piece of law, but is the elapsing as a result of those EU requirements that there is a certain window within which these things need to be done ...? Is that what she is saying?

2040 And if I may, she was, I think, more specific in her answer. Given that she has clarified that when she gave the answer in October she was cognisant of the fact that there had to be this compliance with these EU regulations, she said, in terms of timings, and I quote:

work will be able to commence on the Plan before the end of the current financial year.

And in answer to further supplementaries she said:

we would like to finalise that part of the process before the end of the financial year and then, of course, embark on the actual Plan.

Can she confirm that she is sticking to those timelines, or is there a disruption to that since she answered this question in October?

2045 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I am going to read from the Hansard of our exchange, just the first answer to his question in October, where I informed the hon. Gentleman, because it was him asking the question, that we were at that point considering options for the re-tendering for the preparation of the new development plan and, following the award of the tender, work

2050 would be able to commence on the plan before the end of the current financial year. That was the answer that I was given when we prepared for October. It may be that in October we were very ambitious and expected the process to have been completed before the end of the financial year.
As of today, the update that I have is that that process has not been completed because of the 2055 the stages to enable us to be at the final phase. As far as I am concerned, Mr Speaker, the sooner the better.

Hon. D J Bossino: The hon. Lady says, as a final remark to her answer, 'the sooner the better'.
Is she able to be a bit more specific in relation to that? She was quite specific in her October reply, 2060 talking about the end of the financial year. I suppose at that stage it seemed further along the line than it clearly is now, but is she able to give an indication as to when she thinks this process will be complete so that she can embark on the plan as soon as possible?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, at this stage I do not have any further detail, but I will 2065 tell the hon. Gentleman that those involved in the preparation of this ... I have been in touch over the last, say, two or three weeks, and the very clear direction that they have been given is that we need to go full speed ahead because we are in the final stages of what we are doing, so I really need them to complete whatever phase they are at so that we can complete the stage and move on to the next one. I am assured that we are almost there.

2070 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, so I can understand a bit more clearly where we are at, I understand the Hon. Minister's answers that it is a complex process and we are going through the tendering issues. Are they looking to appoint one particular body or consultancy to drive the whole thing, or is the complexity driven by the fact that they are looking to engage someone to drive the 2075 process but that perhaps subplans of the development plan will be contracted out to different entities? Is that the complexity? And can I ask whether they have an indication of how many bodies, consultancies or entities are interested in being appointed as the successful tenders?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: No, Mr Speaker. Once we put out the tender we will see what comes 2080 back and we will see what we think will provide us with the best value for money, but there has not been an analysis to the depth that the hon. Gentleman suggests at this stage because the tender has not gone out yet.

Hon. K Azopardi: Yes, that is the clarity I wanted. So it has not gone out. When it does go out, 2085 given the complexity of it, does the Hon. Minister have a view? Has the Government formed a view as to the length of time that people will need to be able to respond reasonably to a tender of that nature?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, as I understand it, this process is quite formulaic, so I 2090 will leave that aspect in the hands of the professionals and those who are advising on the process, which, of course, is led by the Town Planner and the Town Planning department in conjunction with the Government's Procurement Office.

Q260/2023
COVID restrictions –
Whether any still in place

Clerk: Question 260/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

2095 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What COVID restrictions, if any, are still in place?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards.

2100 Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, there are very few COVID restrictions remaining in Gibraltar. These regulations are reviewed regularly by the Director of Public Health, through the Strategic Co-ordinating Group. The regulations have a life of 28 days. The hon. Lady will be fully aware that all legislation is available in the public domain and is obtainable online. If she is not aware how to access this, I am happy to show her.

2105 Insofar as arrangements in the GHA, ERS continues to have some COVID measures in place, such as restrictions on visitor numbers, use of PPE and an enhanced deep cleaning schedule. St Bernard's Hospital has implemented additional measures, including the use of face masks in clinical areas and testing of some visitors.

2110 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: I thank the hon. Member for her answer.

Mr Speaker, if I could ask what guidance is Public Health Gibraltar taking, if any, from any external bodies, or are we just implementing our own guidance, our own directives, as this is being reviewed, as the Minister said?

2115 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I no longer chair the Civil Contingency Group in relation to COVID. I cannot remember the date exactly, but when the COVID situation was better and restrictions started to fall away ... This meeting where the Director of Public Health and all the other stakeholder professionals meet is now chaired by the Civil Contingencies Co-ordinator, but it operates very much in the same way as we have throughout COVID. We are very much led by 2120 Public Health advice, and the Director of Public Health will take her advice from her own professional fora.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

2125 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, might this be a convenient moment to recess for 15 minutes, until half past six?

Mr Speaker: The House will now recess until 6.30.

The House recessed at 6.14 p.m. and resumed at 6.30p.m.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise if the proposed Rooke site commercial and residential development is to benefit from any support from the National Economic Plan?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Social Security, Economic Development and Enterprise.

2225

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the gross public debt and the aggregate debt after the application of the General Sinking Fund to gross debt, cash reserves and net debt figures for the two dates requested by the hon. Member are as follows: gross debt, £872.7 million on both dates; aggregate debt, £845.3 million on both dates; cash reserves, January £81.5 million, and February £70.2 million; net debt, January £763.8 million, and February £775.1 million.

2230

The balance in the General Sinking Fund on both the requested dates stood at £27.4 million.

The list of companies that the Government, the GDC, any Government Agency or any Government company acquired a shareholding in between 1st January 2018 and 31st January 2023 is as follows: Gibraltar Properties Eastside North Ltd, Gibraltar Properties Waterport West, Gibraltar Properties Europort Avenue Ltd, GUT Ltd, GSF Ltd, Gibraltar Estate Management and Administration Ltd and GIC Ltd.

The Accountant General is, and as far as I am aware, has been since at least 1972, the public officer undertaking the function of Director under the Gibraltar Savings Bank Act.

The Government will not provide any further breakdowns additional to the extensive information on the Savings Bank investments already provided monthly.

The gross value of Gibraltar Savings Bank debentures for which notice of early redemption was given in the period 1st November 2022 to 31st January 2023 was £3.67 million.

2245 The Government-owned companies for which filing of accounts are out of date with Companies House and the penalties accruing for each are as follows – the majority of those companies are companies which were overdue in the filing of accounts as a result of the non-filing and, indeed, non-compilation of accounts in the GSD’s period in office: Construction Training Company Ltd, £650,000 – that is the penalty; Economic Development and Employment
Company Ltd, £650; Employment Training Company Ltd, £650; ES Ltd, £50; Europa Incinerator
2250 Co Ltd, £1,550; GAR Ltd, £650; GBIC Ltd, £50; GCP Investments Ltd, £50; GEP Ltd, £275; GEWP Ltd, £275; Gibraltar Air Terminal Ltd, £875; Gibraltar Car Parks Ltd, £425; Gibraltar Cleansing Services Ltd, £50; Gibraltar Commercial Property Company Ltd, £500; Gibraltar Community Projects Ltd, £725; Gibraltar Defence Estates and General Services Ltd, £800; Gibraltar Facilities Management Ltd, £200; Gibraltar Freeview Ltd, £575; Gibraltar General Construction

2265 The following are the Government-owned companies which have not been audited since incorporation: Europa Incinerator Company Ltd, GAR Ltd, GEP Ltd, GEWP Ltd, Gibraltar Air Terminal Ltd, Gibraltar Freeview Ltd, Gibraltar Mechanical and Electrical Services Ltd, Gibraltar
National Mint Ltd and GSF Ltd.

2270 The listed €4 million bond owned by Credit Finance Company Ltd as at December 2021 was not repaid on 5th September 2022.

Just like every other lender, the Government does not provide the identity of who CFC, as a moneylender, provides loans to.

2275 The profitability of the investment in storage facilities at Eastern Beach by the private not-for-profit company Community Supplies and Services is a matter for that company, as is what they have spent to date.

Wonderwork Media Company Ltd does not have a role within the National Economic Plan.

2280 As regards the question on the hotel hospitality, if what the hon Member is asking is whether I have gone on holiday paid by Etioca, the answer is I never go on holiday. I was asked by the owner of the company to join him in the launch of the subsidiary company in Italy, speak at the press conference held on that occasion and also address a meeting of investors on the project. I agreed to do so provided it was at no cost to the Government. My travel with the owner, the stay in the hotel in Italy, my meals there and the return with the owner and his family in his private jet were met by the company. The events related to the promotion lasted two days and took place in September last year.

2285 I cannot confirm what CSS does or does not do since it is a private entity, but to my knowledge
Etioca and its group of companies have not sought or obtained any funding or financial support from CSS.

2290 The proposed Rooke site commercial and residential development is not a sponsored project under the National Economic Plan.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his answers, and I beg your indulgence because there are 15 questions grouped together.

First of all, obviously Questions 261 and 262 require no follow-up, since there is no major change there.

2295 In Question 263 there are number of entities that the Minister has mentioned. I know we have had this exchange across the floor in the past as to what the abbreviations of the companies stand for, where it is just letters – GUT, GSF and, I think, GIC. I assume that Gibraltar Property Companies are essentially what they say they are in relation to developments of property as suggested.

2300 There are one or two that struck me, if I may ask the Minister. What is the Europort entity involved in? Is it holding property? What is it doing? Also, GIC Ltd – what does that entity do? Could the Minister provide some clarity on those?

2305 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the original question is which companies are behind with their accounts. There are a lot of companies. I do not run these companies and I do not know what they do in the majority. I only know the one or two that I am involved with, mainly in the trading area. I do not know how their names have been chosen, so I have not got any information on the companies beyond the original answer to the question.

2310 Hon. R M Clinton: I understand, Mr Speaker. Can I then move on perhaps to the next question, Question 264? I think his answer was ‘the public official who is appointed as Director under the Savings Bank Act’. That is exactly the question I am asking, as to who is undertaking that function of Director under the Savings Bank Act. He is more or less reading the Act back to me. I know that a person is appointed under the Savings Bank Act. I am asking who that person is.

2315 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Is the hon. Member asking me the name of the Accountant General?

2320 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am happy with either the function ... He just said Accountant General, and if that is the answer, can I then follow it up with a supplementary? I understand the position of Accountant General is currently vacant, in which case, who would be performing the function of Director of the Savings Bank?

2325 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The Accountant General position may be vacant in the sense that there is not a permanent appointment, but it cannot be vacant, otherwise we are going to have a problem doing the Budget this year because it is a job that requires somebody permanently to be there, even if it is in an acting capacity. So the answer is the person who is acting as Accountant General is also acting as the Director of the Savings Bank. It goes with the job.

2330 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, moving on to Question 265, I asked for an analysis of the interest income of the Savings Bank between that generated by government-owned and controlled entities and those that are totally third-party sources. I know his answer was no, but can the Minister explain why he is not willing to provide that information? It should not be too difficult a task for the Accountant General to supply that information.

2335 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, because as I have told the hon. Member before, the more information I supply, the more he takes it away, dissects it and comes up asking for more. This a never-ending exercise, and in any event, it is an exercise that ... He does not need me to tell him that the amount of money that is invested in cash and near-cash, which was their policy, provides very low returns and therefore the bulk of the returns comes, and would not be there otherwise, from the investments that are made in infrastructure or in the creation of capital assets in Gibraltar. That is where the main investment of the Savings Bank is, and that is why he came to the conclusion – and I agreed that that was correct – that, in effect, the role is that of the Gibraltar Development Bank. So the Development Bank role, which is the creation of assets in Gibraltar, provides the bulk of the income, and the amount of money that we have in the UK depends on the twists and turns of the Stock Exchange and cannot be guaranteed to be positive. Until very recently, the ones in the local banks were minimal because the bank rate is very low. They have improved recently, but the improvement has not been there long enough really to make any kind of impact on this. He knows that from the information I give him.

2350 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister. I was really just after the exact numbers, but I understand what he is saying in terms that the bulk of the income comes from, effectively, government sources.

2355 Moving on to Question 266, in terms of notice of early redemption he, I think, gave a number of £3.67 million. Can the Minister give an indication whether that is, in his view or from previous experience, a higher number than usual?

2360 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: We have not got previous experience of me being able to persuade somebody to bring their headquarters to Gibraltar. This is the first one. I think my job for Gibraltar is to bring people here, and if I am satisfied from what they intend to do that this something that could be of benefit to the economy and also, particularly important, of benefit eventually when the company reaches maturity in terms of government revenues, then I will do everything that is in my power to make it a success.

2365 I have made public that this company was being sponsored from the day they arrived. I persuaded the owner to incorporate it here rather than doing it somewhere else. It has huge potential, but it is not something that is going to happen overnight. This was the first subsidiary being created in Italy, and since the commitment is to support the company but not to give it money, then in fact the only cost to the taxpayer has been that they were paying my wages for the two days I was there, but since I normally work seven days a week and I do not take holidays, I think I have enough credit in time in lieu to compensate for the two days.

2370 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for his answer, but I think he was answering a question that, in fact, I had not just asked a supplementary on, in relation to Question 273. I was asking about Question 266 in terms of the early redemption amounts of £3.67 million and whether in his experience that was an unusual number or is higher than normal.

2375 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: This is a company that would have been, I think, very successful if it had happened earlier. I think the world in which we are at the moment and the direction in which we are travelling ... It seems to me that we are moving fast in a retrograde direction from what we were before.

2380 Part of the strategy is, in fact, to create subsidiaries of the company to feed local markets rather than have a mega factory and sell on a global stage. I think that is a decision the company has taken because more and more we are seeing people moving into repatriating production nearer to the consumer. I would not expect this to be yielding results between now and the next election, let's put it that way, and I think if it carries on at the rate it is doing at the moment it will probably be more or less halfway through the next term that we should be seeing some returns.

2385 Hon. R M Clinton: I am grateful to the Minister.

2390 Mr Speaker, I do not know how to put this in a way that will not cause offence, but I can see that although the Hon. Minister is answering questions, albeit not the supplementaries that I am asking ... the information he is giving is useful to the House, but not in relation to my supplementaries as I am asking them.

Mr Speaker: What are you suggesting? With respect, I am not – 2395 Hon. R M Clinton: I do not want to put the Minister under any pressure because he is recovering. I will continue.

Mr Speaker: Yes, of course.

2400 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if I can turn to Question 267, which is about the out of date companies, just a simple question: would the Minister happen to have a total of the penalties accruing? Would he have that on a schedule with him?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I have not been given a total, but I think there are around 30 companies. I have not got a total.

2405 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if I move on to Question 268, the entities that have never been audited, can the Minister advise what steps are being undertaken to ensure that they are audited?

2410 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: [Inaudible] do not exist anymore. That is to say they do not exist in the sense that nothing is happening. The incinerator company was started in 1996 or just before, and it never really worked, and the incinerator disappeared long ago. Action has to be taken, obviously, to rectify this, which is wrong because they are supposed to submit audits and we should be giving a good example to the private sector, as the Government, that we are complying with it, but I think the reality is that some of the things probably fall by the highway. The hon. Member has more than once discovered something that none of us knew existed, and it is only 2415 because he puts the question that it comes to the notice of people, and I suspect that some of these fall into that category. It is not by intent, it is just by ...

Hon. R M Clinton: I am thankful to the Minister for his answer.

2420 If I can move on to Question 269 – and this is in relation to Credit Finance – I asked the question whether the €4 million bond owned by Credit Finance was repaid in full on maturity, and if I heard the Minister correctly, he said it had not been repaid. Can the Minister advise then, has Credit Finance been forced to make a provision against this bond, which as at 31st December 2021 was showing a value of £3.4 million, or has this bond been extended in maturity? Or has some other arrangement been entered into with the borrower?

2425 Mr Speaker, I should add that from the characteristics of the bond description in the accounts, this bond I believe was issued by the owners of the Sunborn Hotel in Gibraltar.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: We provided with this that the maturity date was extended to 24th March 2024. It is a further 18 months.

2430

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, just one further question on this. Has the Minister been given any information as to the reason why they were unable to repay the bond on maturity?

2435 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I am not directly involved in these things, so the question that I put is the one he puts to me and I give him the answer that I get. I have not asked them why it is, but I imagine that at the point in time when they had to provide the money they did not have it. That is what happens when people do not pay.

2440 Hon. R M Clinton: And just finally on this particular question, Mr Speaker, can the Minister confirm that it is, as I have suggested, in relation to the owners of the Sunborn Hotel?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I have no knowledge from the Department who the owner is, but I will ask if it is, since the hon. Member believes that that is who it is, but I cannot confirm it.

2445 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, in relation to Question 270, where I asked for the identity of the party that borrowed £276 million from Credit Finance by way of issue of fixed-rate notes repayable on demand, the Minister's answer was no, but the Minister will know from the disclosures in the accounts that this is not a third-party entity but is, in fact, a related party to Credit Finance by virtue of common control, so the related party ... It is under the heading of 2450 'Government and other entities under government control', so this is not a third-party private entity, and I do not see why the Minister cannot tell us which government entity is borrowing £276.8 million from Credit Finance at call.

2455 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, it is not that I cannot do it; it is that I am not prepared to do it. Of course I can do it. I could tell him every person who borrows money from the bank, and I suppose we could get Mr Isola to produce a list of all the people who borrow from the Gibraltar International Bank. But I am not prepared to accept setting the precedent that because a lending institution is state owned we can be required in Parliament to disclose who the client is, whether it is a public sector or a private sector borrower.

2460 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, very well. If he will not identify the government entity, is he satisfied that this government entity effectively has £276.8 million in a current account, which would be available to repay the loan at call?

2465 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: When the hon. Member asks these kinds of questions I need to remind him of the fact that we were fortunate to inherit from his administration a mechanism that pools all the money of all the companies. In that pool there are companies that are in the red and companies that are in the black. Therefore, there is the situation that is reflected eventually in the net level of cash that I give him every month.

2470 So the answer is that if Credit Finance, which itself is one of its companies, did not have a loan to a government company, by virtue of the fact that it is a participant in the pool the same thing would be happening. The nature of the pool that was invented, which was a very clever thing to do and which we would be constantly attacked for doing if I been the author of it, but I was not the author of it ... I can see the value of having it because in fact it maximises ... If every entity that 2475 the ... Remember, Mr Speaker, that I have already demonstrated that the companies that were criticised when I was the Chief Minister of Gibraltar by the then Opposition actually were increased when they took over. So they took over from us a number of companies and then, having criticised it in opposition, found the value of having those companies, kept the ones that were there and created more. Well, we never criticised the pool. We accepted that was the 2480 government policy. We did not quite understand what the mechanism entailed, but when we came into government we could see the value of it, because it would be much more difficult, I think, to run the part of the public sector that is ... Originally it did not exist because originally there was only one thing; that the Government asked the Civil Service was the only thing. But when you start creating different companies and different agencies and some of them have got 2485 revenue and others have not got revenue, it would be much more cumbersome and much more expensive because there would be more paperwork involved and more difficulties in how you make access to money, and therefore the pooling effect ...

This is there as a specific loan on call, but at the end of the day, if tomorrow we cancelled the call and repaid the loan, it would not go anywhere. It would stay in the same pool, whether it was 2490 in one company or the other. So the answer is that the company that has been provided with these funds, if they paid back, could simply have access without it being a loan. I think the loan is a historical thing that happened when the mechanism was not being used to the extent that we are using it now, and we had specific FRNs. At the beginning of 2012 when we were originally elected, we actually were lending money when we created Credit Finance and I think it comes 2495 from then, and this might have been a change that has happened in changing it from one form to the other.

So that is what is happening there. This is independent of not naming it, for the reason that I am giving him. I am trying to give him enough information for him to visualise how this thing is happening.

2500 Hon. R M Clinton: I am grateful to the Minister for his answer.

2505 If I move on to Question 271 now, Mr Speaker, this is in relation to the Eastern Beach promenade. He says it is a matter for that company, being Community Supplies and Services Ltd, but in this House the Hon. Minister has quite clearly identified this entity as being part of his National Economic Plan and as being sponsored under his National Economic Plan these particular projects. I would just like to know how he expects to generate a return. I saw in the press reports at the time that there were maybe 600 beach stores being created. What is it that he envisages has economic value in 600 beach stores?

2510 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I am not building the stores. All the charitable companies in the group that is running these things are doing things for which the people involved have done an exercise and consider there is a market and a need. In some, they are expecting to make a big profit, in others they are expected to make very little profit. There are different companies dedicated to different things. At the end of the day, the profit they make or do not make does not come to the 2515 Government, and they are now all following his advice: each one of them is now a charity. That is the structure that is there.

I think the decision that was taken recently, which is the subject of another question at a later stage, means that the 600 are not likely to be done this year. It depends on the demand whether they are done after the summer, and if the demand is less, well then we will look to other locations 2520 on other beaches. People identified that there were people who were prepared to avoid the hassle of having to take all the stuff they take to the beach every day if something could be provided that was safe and they could leave everything there. They were prepared to spend some money on doing it and that is the basis of the plan that was done.

I think the number was essentially the maximum number that the space permitted. How much 2525 of that number is done depends on the extent that ... Like many other things where Members asked me questions, at the end of the day it is only when the product is finished and available that you can really see what ... Many people put their name down for something and then when the day comes they do not carry out the purchase they said they were interested in, so at the end of the day ... The numbers that are going to be ready for this year are going to be considerably less 2530 than this and I think if the market for those is not a strong market, then it is unlikely the remainder will be done, but the material is available to do it somewhere else.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister. That provides a lot of clarity as to the thinking. I just have one question in respect of it. Is it the intention, as far as he is aware, that 2535 these beach stores should be available for purchase, or is it that they will be available for rental?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: They are giving the potential interested party the option to either buy or rent.

2540 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, he may not have the information but I guess he does not have any idea – if he has, I would be grateful – as to what the sale price might be per store.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I have some idea, but I do not think it is right for me to ... The people who are doing the selling, it ought to be left to them when they want to make public how much the 2545 price is. I do not think it is right for me to say publicly what I think the price is going to be.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I would assume they will be advertised for sale at a fixed price, and all I am asking is does he know what that fixed price will be? I fully understand if he does not 2550 know.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: My advice to them has been that they should wait until the product is nearly finished. We have the same thing with the elderly home at Rooke. To suggest that people can decide whether they want to go to a place that is still a building site, to me, is nonsense. I

2555 think if we want to say to somebody, on the building site that is there, 'Do you want one of these sheds?' ... If you go there, you do not see a shed, you see a building site. I have told them it is up to them to do what they think they should do but they should not start putting prices on things that are not finished, they should wait till it is finished and then say, 'This is the thing, this is the size, this is how it looks, and you can either buy it for so much or rent it for so much.'

2560 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for that answer.

Moving to Question 272, the Minister has advised that Wonderworks Media Ltd has no role in the National Economic Plan, but he obviously must be aware that it is a wholly owned subsidiary of Community Supplies and Services, and if it has no role in the National Economic Plan, then why is it owned by Community Supplies and Services?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: This is a company that initially was involved with some of the things that were being done by the charitable companies, but we have never dealt directly with them, and they are not a charity, it was a company that existed. So they had no direct involvement with anything that I do directly. The charity may engage any number of private companies in the things they do. For a while they were using this company, I think, in some of the employment areas.

2570

Hon. R M Clinton: Is the Minister aware that there are two civil servants acting as directors of that entity?

2575

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: If they were directors, that is probably how the connection came, because the company was there, it was dormant, it existed, and therefore, when they were starting and the charities did not have their own facilities, they made use of them. I do not think they are having to access it anymore, because now they have replaced it with their own machinery.

2580

Hon. R M Clinton: If I understand the Minister correctly, effectively Wonderworks Media Ltd is, to all intents and purposes, as far as he is aware, dormant and has ceased to perform any function.

2585

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Yes, in effect, it was dormant before and I think it has gone back to being dormant again.

2590

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, in respect of Question 273 and the hospitality of Etioca that the Minister was provided with in attending this two-day conference in Italy – I believe that was in Turin, is that correct? Yes, Turin. Obviously I am pleased there was no expense to the taxpayer and I cannot fault the Minister for that, but if I could gently remind the Minister that his Register of Interests under section 6 has not been updated. If he could do that because, obviously, receiving hotel accommodation and travel on a private jet I think would qualify as being disclosable under section 6 of the Register of Members' Interests in that it has not been paid for by the public but by a private sector entity. If the Minister could confirm he will, in due course, update his Register of Members' Interests?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I would have to take advice on that because I do not think ... I received no benefit and I saved the taxpayer money, so I do not see how that can be a registrable element. My understanding is that if a private entity pays for you to go on holiday in Italy, you have to declare it in case that private entity tomorrow puts in a tender and you are in a position to influence the tender. That is why it has to be there and it has to be known, to prevent that risk. But to go to work for the Government, on government work, and insist that the person who is being helped should foot the bill instead of the taxpayer, I would not have thought that that ... But I will take advice, and if the legal advice is that I am guilty I will correct it.

2605

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful. I think the intention of that particular section is precisely to see if there are any potential conflicts in terms of the private sector versus the Minister's duties.

If I can read out what it says on the registrable interests, it says:

overseas visits relating to or arising out of membership of the House where the cost of any such visit has not been wholly borne by the Member or by public funds.

2610 This is just to capture those cases whereby the private sector may fund the expenses of the Minister for whatever reason, and he may have a perfectly legitimate reason – obviously it does not have to be a holiday – but nevertheless it should be disclosed as such. Of course the Minister will take advice and I think it is entirely up to whatever advice the Minister gets, but certainly I would have expected to see something in that section.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Code that we are dealing with is designed, as the Hon. Minister has said, to ensure that there is no attempt to give a Minister a personal benefit for the purposes of influencing him in respect of something the person may be seeking from the Government and the benefit given to the Minister arises from the fact that he is a Member of the House or a Member of the Opposition. That is exactly what the Code says, yes? So the person who enjoys this benefit enjoys it because the party giving it to him gives it to him simply because he is a Member of this House, but for his benefit, and in this case what the Hon. Mr Bossano is saying – rightly, in my view – is he got nothing for his benefit. The benefit was directly for the taxpayer. It was not that because he is a Member of this House he was given something for his benefit, it was that because he is a Member of this House he insisted that the people he represents in this House should not be put to the cost of the travel, which was because he was doing the job in this House.

2620
2635 Mr Speaker, I think we are all new to the operation of the Code. Being flown in a private jet is something that happens in man bites dog instances – in other words, it is something that happens very seldom – and I think the Minister has taken exactly the right position in saying, 'I will take advice on it, and if the rules would require that ...' We were under the impression that if somebody offered to fly you to a football match for you to enjoy, or if they promise to fly you to a beach, that is fine. You have to register it, and it is easy and it is straightforward, and they are only flying you because you are a Member of this House or because you are a Minister and they want to curry favour with you. But if you are working as a Minister and the transport is the train, the plane or whatever it is, and it is paid for by someone else, that is not registrable in the Register of Members' Interests because it is not the Member's interest that is in play.

2640 We will take advice, and if the advice is that in the United Kingdom – where we are inspired to take the code from – it requires registration, then we will look at it and make the necessary amendment.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, if I may, for the benefit of the House and also to respond to what the Chief Minister has said, this actually predates the Code. This is the Register of Members' Interests, which was agreed in 1979, and the actual formula and what goes into it is set out quite clearly. I think the Hon. Minister for Economic Development, the Father of the House, knows perfectly well what the clause is meant for, because in his declaration from 2019 under Registrable Interests section 6 he says 'None, other than CPA and Public Accounts travel', which are the same conferences we have both been to. So he understands that it is not where you are benefiting from a cruise or going to the beach, or enjoying yourself – I do not think these conferences are particularly enjoyable! – but it is just the principle of registering any kind of travel. It could be, for example, that there is a Russian company that pays for travel, and it may be in the public interest to know that a certain country is paying for the travel, or whatever, of Government Ministers on whatever business. I think that is what the intention of that particular section was. And again, it 2655 has nothing to do with whatever the UK has been doing; this is the Register of Members' Interests that was set down in this House in 1979.

Again, if the Hon. the Father of the House will take advice, I am entirely happy with that view, but I think if he is consistent with the way he has filled in these returns in the past, he will find that it would probably be disclosable.

2660 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do appreciate I mentioned the new Code, but in fact, this is the old Code.

2665 I think the way in which the Hon. the Father of the House fills in his declaration is not to accept that the CPA travel issue is a registrable interest for Members, because indeed most of it is paid for by the Gibraltar taxpayer. Some of them are not, some of them are. They are paid for by the CPA ... For example, the United Nations pays for Sir Joe to go to the seminar every year. We have taken the view that that is not a registrable interest because they take him, in effect, to represent the case of the people of Gibraltar. That is why we are saying we would have to take advice, because it may be that inadvertently some things are registrable which we have taken the view – legitimately, I think, and the hon. Gentleman would agree that it is not a Russian company, it is the United Nations – is not something that is registrable because it needs to be done, and indeed we have said so in public statements before. It is not that we have hidden that it is paid for by the United Nations; we have said there is no cost to the taxpayer because it is paid for by the United Nations for Sir Joe.

2670 I am happy to look at that and to deal with it. Even then, I would have thought that there are no other instances that we can think of where we have had our travel expenses paid for – unfortunately, because it would be helpful, of course, for the taxpayer to be relieved of our travel costs – just these two instances in question. We will make an amendment, if necessary.

2675 The hon. Gentleman will recall that on the one occasion I had to travel in a private jet, we were in contact with them to say, 'This an extraordinary expense. We want you to know. This the reason why we are doing it, and we hope that we will account with your support,' because those are extraordinary things and we would not do them otherwise.

Mr Speaker: Has the hon. Member covered all the supplementaries to the questions? Fine.

Q283-86/2023

Elderly residential accommodation – Waiting list; number of units at Rooke facility and expert report; plans for Mount Alvernia site

2685 Clerk: Question 283/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Please state how many people are on the waiting list for accommodation for the elderly, broken down into age groups, whether they are in government rented or private accommodation; and, if in Government accommodation, details of the size.

2690 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Social Security, Economic Development and Enterprise.

2695 Minister for Social Security, Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question with Questions 284, 285 and 286.

Clerk: Question 284/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: How many units will be made available at the Rooke residential site for the elderly, broken down into number of rooms or beds in each?

2700

Clerk: Question 285/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Has the advice being sought from UK experts on whether the Rooke elderly residential block can adequately house individuals with dementia or other special needs been received; and, if so, what is it and which entity has provided it?

2705

Clerk: Question 286/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: What plans does the Government have in respect of the Mount Alvernia site once it is replaced?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Social Security, Economic Development and Enterprise.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the information I have been provided with by ERS is that there are 325 persons on the waiting list for accommodation for the elderly. The list by age is as follows: three over 100; 87 over 90; 164 over 80 – I am there, but I am not in that place (Laughter); 61 over 70; two over 60; and eight unknown – that is there are eight people who we assume are over 60, but they have not put an age. A hundred and eighty four of these are in government rented accommodation but the information on the size of the government dwelling in each case is not provided by the applicants, so they do not have the information.

Once the Rooke Residential Home construction is completed and ready for occupation, the exact number of units available will be determined by the owners.

Once the UK expert arrives, I will ensure that the suggestion by the hon. Member is taken on board in respect of possible use by elderly individuals with dementia or other special needs.

The Government will consider what to do with the Mount Alvernia site if and when the site is no longer used for its current purpose, which could be many years into the future.

Hon. D J Bossino: I will go straight to Question 285, only because I have not taken a very good note and I do not want to forget the answer.

2730

Just to put this in context, I think he has answered in this House before that he is seeking advice from a UK expert who I think he said he knows or the entity is a friend of his, or something like that. In relation to that, when he says ‘once he arrives’, is this an individual we are talking about, who he knows and is a friend of his? And if so, can he give some information in relation to that, as to what his expertise is, or if it is not an individual, if it is an entity, which entity it is? I do not think he has answered that. And what does he mean by ‘when he arrives’? When does he expect that to materialise and happen?

2735

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: He will not arrive while it is still a building site, that is for certain, because there would not be any point in having him here. This is somebody the company employs in a home in the UK. They have a lot of homes. They recently made a £500 million investment in the UK in elderly homes. Therefore, there is some interest in them becoming involved in Gibraltar. It may materialise, or it may not, but in any event they have been quite helpful. I am saying, ‘We are doing this for the first time and I want to make sure that whoever runs it would meet the criteria that you would apply in your homes in the UK.’ Rather than relying on what we have been doing here, I want to rely on what is considered best practice in the UK. What I am saying to the hon. Member is although I had not thought it might be possible to have a floor maybe dedicated to 2750 people with dementia or something like that, when the person comes over ... I know in some cases in the UK, instead of having different homes, like we do here – we have a dementia centre and everybody who has dementia is in the same place – they have a certain number, a percentage with dementia, and the staff for that percentage are more intensive than the ones for people who are more able to look after themselves.

2755 I do not know whether the configuration of the building we have here lends itself to that situation. At the moment, the only plan is that there is one floor for double beds – that is for married couples, because in quite a lot of instances the applications on the list may be married couples; also, there will be different age groups, but you would expect them to be needing a bigger room rather than two separate rooms. I think we have provided for one floor of that being possible, based on how often it happens. They would look at the layout and advise us on whether it is suitable for people with dementia or other disabilities, and if that is so, we will bear that in mind because at the end of the day, given the size of the waiting list, there are enough people to fill two homes, not just one.

2760 Some of the younger people are at the very early stage, I think. You find that just like people tend to put their name down for a government flat at the age of 18, even though they may expect to wait 10 years and get it at the age of 28, everybody at the age of 18 puts his name down because then they start counting and getting points. I think in Mount Alvernia it has been quite regular that once people start getting into their late 60s they put their name down, but probably if you went to the people who are 70 years old, the 61-70-year-olds, the bulk of them would say, 'No, I am not ready to move yet. So there is that element on the list, and I think the list may not be up to date. It is that list that they have, but it may not be up to date.

2770 All those factors mean that we may finish up with spare capacity or we may finish up with people who we feel have a greater need than somebody who does not have dementia or disability, although my own personal view ... It is not something I have discussed with the Government and we have taken a policy decision, but I think, from everything we are seeing happening in the rest of the western world, dementia is only going to go in one direction. We have a longer lifespan. They still do not know how to prevent it. The statistics in the UK are that at 90 the chances are 50-50. That means, according to the UK statistics, if you have 87 90-year-olds, 43 are likely to get dementia. I think we need to be conscious that until somebody makes a breakthrough, dementia is an area that we need to be expanding and providing capacity ahead of time, in my view. But it is my own instinct after having become involved in this area, which I have not been involved in before, and talking to the people who are there, looking at the statistics and talking to people from the UK. It might be that we are able to accommodate people with dementia there, but I think in the future it will take more investment in purpose-built places for dementia.

2785 Hon. D J Bossino: In that reply – and there are questions that come to mind arising from that – he has not identified who the individual is. Is he able to do that? And if I may – because it was a long reply – as I understood it, the expert opinion he was seeking from this individual was specifically in relation to dementia and Alzheimer's care. Is that understanding incorrect? I think he is shaking his head, which is what I thought he was going to say, but I wanted him to confirm the position. Can he give me information as to who this individual/entity is?

2790 I have questions arising from the other questions that I have posed. Can I just say, if he gives away, just to make the point by way of ...? If I can assist him, he has also been quite clear in previous answers in relation to this development that the Rooke residential project will not be a nursing home, it will be a residential home. So how does that marry with the possibility and the things he has just said in his reply that that particular development will have to cater for people with dementia, which we all know will require certain nursing facilities?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the people who have dementia really are in residential accommodation. They are not receiving any medical treatment for a medical condition that is curable. They are being looked after, but the looking after is more intensive than it would be with 2800 somebody who is not ... You can have dementia and otherwise be perfectly healthy, so you do not have other things wrong with you that need nursing. I understand that there are homes in the UK ... say a home that has 60 people and may have 10 who have dementia, and there is a particular wing for those 10, as opposed to what we have here, which is a place for dementia only, so I think in that context ...

2805 I do not know the person who is coming because the person who is coming is somebody the owner of the business is going to pick and ask to come here, to help me make sure that, on his advice, we are doing things in the way that would be to the standards that the UK require. That is what he is coming to do. He is not going to come until the building is ready for him to say, 'Yes, I think this is right and you should do it this way or do it that way.' He will also, hopefully, advise us on staffing and the things that we want to make sure that the contractor that will operate this will have as requirements, things that would be required if this place was in the UK instead of being here. That is basically the objective.

2815 I have only given some thought to the dementia because he suggested it. I thought perhaps it is a good idea to find out if we can do it, because I am concerned that we are in a situation where ... Until very recently, for example, we were having people with dementia in the mental facility, which is not the best thing to be doing, but if the only place we have for dementia has no space and the people who have dementia need to be taken into government care because the family has a problem in providing the care themselves, then we have to provide a solution. Therefore, his question prompted the thought that maybe ... I thought you were promoting the idea in the question, and on that basis I thought I would take it on board and find out if it is a workable solution as what I considered to be a short-term solution if we have, in the near future, more people coming in with dementia and have a shortage of space. I think we should be planning in the longer term for more space here until hopefully somebody comes through – before I get to 90 – with an answer to this problem.

2825 I am sharing with the hon. Member my thinking on this. This not something where he can say 'Why haven't you done it yet' in the next House, 'because you promised in the last one?' because I am not going to give him dates for him to ask me in every House.

2830 Hon. D J Bossino: In all of that I think I missed whether he has identified the individual.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I do not know who the person would be, and even if I had a name it would mean nothing to me, or to him. The owner of the homes in the UK will select somebody from his employees who will have the ability to provide me with the assistance he has promised to give me. Who that person will be I will find out when the time comes, but his name would not be relevant because what does it matter what his name is?

Hon. D J Bossino: And which entity is the owner of the homes in the UK, if that assists to getting to some sort of reply?

2840 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, a group of homes. These people have an investment of over £500 million in elderly care, so they have a lot of homes and those homes have a good rating.

2845 If I have somebody doing us a favour and it is not going to cost anything to the taxpayer, I do not think I should be mentioning his name. What is the purpose? That the Opposition should know who he is or what the name of the company is? What the Opposition should be interested in is ... If we are getting something for the benefit of Gibraltar that is not costing money, they should be happy that it is happening. Or maybe they want us to spend money so that they can criticise us for having a bigger deficit.

2850 Hon. D J Bossino: Finally in relation to this question, is there not any mileage to also seek advice and expertise locally from those who currently provide the clinical management of places like Mount Alvernia and Hillside in relation to this issue? He is shaking his head.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: We stopped having a residential home many years ago. When Mount Alvernia, the Jewish Home and the Church of England Home were run by the Macintosh Trust, they were run as residential care homes, and when people needed medical care they moved out of the residential home and were looked after by the Health Service. What has happened in Mount Alvernia is that increasingly the Health Service has moved into Mount Alvernia, and therefore the model of Mount Alvernia is that they have doctors, physiotherapists and matrons. If you take that model, you are creating a hospital or a nursing home. This is not a nursing home. This not displacing the obligation of the Health Authority to provide healthcare. What the Macintosh Trust did was provide elderly residential care. Elderly residential care is provided in the UK and nursing homes exist in the UK, but they are not the same thing; the manning levels are not the same thing, the skills sets are not the same things. We are not going to be a privately run health service in this home. What we are doing is residential care.

The reality is that in the journey through life there are people who get to the stage where they cannot cope with a big house and need to move into rented accommodation that is manageable. Now, with the new initiative we are taking with the charity in creating the equivalent of Bishop Canilla for home ownership, it means that homeowners who previously did not have that opportunity will have it. Then, whether you are buying the home or renting the home, the time will come when you need carers coming in to help you. And then the next stage is you go into a care home, because at the end of the day you would need so many carers ... When you start to have care almost round the clock, it becomes so expensive that it is better to have somebody in a home, where all the care is there. From the home, if you finish up with an illness that requires permanent nursing, you go into a nursing home or into a hospital.

The slot that disappeared from Gibraltar many years ago is the slot that is going to be restored, which is a privately owned, privately run residential home. We think there is a need for that and it is going to be provided. It is no longer there. So if I ask the people we have in Mount Alvernia how do I do it, what they will tell me is how they are doing it now and how they have been doing it for many years. We are not doing that, we are not going to be doing that and we do not want to be doing that.

Mr Speaker: Can we move to supplementaries on the other answers? Thank you.

Hon. D J Bossino: Yes, Mr Speaker, but this supplementary, I think, links in also with the response we have had. This is in relation to the plans in respect of Mount Alvernia. He says that, as I understood it, there are no immediate plans to close it. As I have understood the responses in the past, Mount Alvernia residents and those on the housing waiting list – and I will go on to that specific question in relation to that, where he has provided, I think, a useful breakdown – are going to be, basically, the feeders of the Rooke site, as he has said on many occasions ad nauseam, and I think there were letters that went out to the residents of Mount Alvernia. They are going to be having complete free will to decide whether they move down to the Rooke, or not. If they say no, that will be respected and he is on record as saying that – and he is nodding his head. If there is a percentage – I do not know how many, but a percentage of people – as he has set out in his reply, who require nursing care, surely there will be that number, that group of people, who will never move down to Rooke because that is not the facility that Rooke is providing. He is saying yes. Can I ask him to confirm that position?

And does he have an idea – he can do it one of two ways, and he may not have the answer – of how many people fit into that category of the, I think, 144 who currently reside at Mount Alvernia? I take this from previous answers he has given to this House. I can check my notes as to what precise answer he has given – 140 I think he has said. Alternatively – it is really the same question put in a different way – how many people he thinks are eligible to make the move, and is the choice being given to that group of people exclusively? So in other words, letters will not be received by those individuals who require nursing care because nursing care will not be provided at the Rooke.

2905 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the decisions and the numbers will be looked at when the home is ready, not when the home is a building site. The people in ERS have put a questionnaire to everybody, irrespective of their state of health. The question is whether they would like to move, so they are doing something that is not consonant with what I am saying here because I did not do it, they did it. So the answer is when we are ready with the home, when we have the advice that we need and when we have the operator ready to start, then we will say to people who are 2910 in a position to move with the facilities that we are providing, 'Are you interested in moving? If you are not interested in moving, even if you can run around the block because you are very fit, you will stay where you are because nobody is going to be moved from their home or from the list or from anywhere against their will. This is not the way we work.' From the beginning, that has been the position.

2915 I am not going to give the hon. Member details, because at the end of the day those decisions will be taken when we are ready to move, and from the way he has dealt with other people's detailed questions, I am not going to fall into the trap of having him saying to me, 'Yes, but you said this number; this is what you are doing and it is different.' We live in a world where every day is different and new. He may not be in that world but that's the one am in. Therefore, what is 2920 possible today may become impossible tomorrow and what is possible today will be something that is no longer viable. The situation at the moment is we are doing something we think Gibraltar needs, we are doing it in a way which is, from the point of view of our finances, sustainable, and therefore the results will show whether we are right in the judgement we have made. We are paid to make decisions and take judgements. This one of them and it is important. It will be very 2925 important for a lot of people who may find a better quality of life than they can get in their houses, if they are isolated, or in Mount Alvernia, where they are further away from their children who are living in the estates here. So the location is an important attraction, but of course we would not be putting people there if we were not able to look after them properly. That would not would not be an intelligent thing to do.

Hon. D J Bossino: Let's agree that I will not press him for an answer. I appreciate that he has given reasons as to why he is not going to provide that information, and fine, but I do not understand why he cannot say that, given the answers he has given to this House, not just now but before, that Rooke is not a nursing home. Why can't he say that as a matter of principle those 2935 individuals at Mount Alvernia who do require that assistance will not even be asked whether they will be moving? I do not understand why an answer to that specific question requires the construction to be finished.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Well, it is simpler than that, and he should understand it. I am not going to say what he wants me to say because he says I should say it. If I wanted to say it, I would not need any prompting. He wants me to say something and I do not want to say it, and I am not going to say it. Okay?

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, in terms of the replacement of Mount Alvernia on closure, going 2945 back to the formal answer he gave, the way I understood it is that whilst there are people residing there, the place will not close. That must make sense if one joins all the dots in terms of the replies he has given, because there will be a complete, cast-iron respect from this Government in relation to those individuals who do not want to move. That is understood. But in terms of those individuals who are on the waiting list – in other words, new individuals who come on stream – 2950 will those individuals be given the choice to move to Mount Alvernia? Those 300-odd on the waiting list, will they have the choice? Not the residents currently in Mount Alvernia, but those individuals who are not yet resident anywhere, will they be given the choice to go to Mount Alvernia so that it is possible that the resident numbers in Mount Alvernia will increase?

2955 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: That is a decision that we will take when the time comes.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, in relation to Question 283, where he kindly provided the breakdown, that information, with all due respect to him, does not quite coincide with the information that he has provided to this House in the past. I would not say necessarily information, but certainly his analysis of the information, because I think I have asked him before that if you 2960 add ... In terms of supply, as I understand it, there are 200-odd flats being provided at the Rooke, 140 individuals at Mount Alvernia ... I say that with the caveat that he says all these decisions are still to be made, but potentially 140 individuals could move over to the Rooke. Then I said if you add the 140 plus the 325, there will not be sufficient supply at the Rooke if they all said yes, and he said in relation to the 325 ... He made the comment historically that he made now, that there 2965 are people on the housing waiting list who simply jot their name down at a young age – I do not know why, but I have the number of people of my age, in their 50s – as a placeholder, just in case, for the future, so they go up the list. This does not quite tally because there are, I am sure, very healthy over-70-year-olds, but you are talking about over-70s, so that is a big decade. Between 70 and 80 there are 61 individuals – I do not know whether the majority are 79, let's say, or 78 – who 2970 may already require assistance, residential care, a residential home. But if we add those numbers to the 164, to the 87 and to the three who are, happily, over 100, again it is quite a big number. So does he have a more detailed comment to make in relation to the overall figure of 325 and whether it tallies with what he has told his House in the past, that many of them are just there to be on the housing waiting list to bide their time to eventually go, but they are not really going to be a demanding presence there?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the list I have is something that I have not compiled and that I have requested to answer his question. That is the list I have been given. I have told the hon. Member I do not know how accurate it is. I can tell him that it does not mean, for example, that 2980 there are only 184 80-plus in Gibraltar. That is not what it means. It is that of the many hundreds there are, 184 have indicated an interest in going to Mount Alvernia at some point in their lives. That is what this means. That is the information I have because I requested it for his benefit, so I could answer his question.

Mr Speaker: I think we need to – (Interjection) That is right. It is getting quite complicated, so why don't you focus on a couple of questions and then –?
2985

Hon. D J Bossino: [Inaudible]

Mr Speaker: Okay.
2990 The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, in his answer the Hon. Minister said he did not know exactly the configuration in terms of the spread of the individuals and their maladies, for lack of a 2995 better word. My question is, if we do not have the information ... I would like to ask him if they didn't, why didn't they? Why haven't they conducted a deep study into the acute versus the residential individuals in order for us to understand trends in the community so that then we can adequately provide the support or the structure in these buildings in order to prepare the building for the needs of the people? Shouldn't we have this information and these workings-out before 3000 the building is ready, because what if we have many more acute individuals than residential?

Also, as he quite correctly says, people are living longer. Once they start needing care, as opposed to residential, they will keep needing the care. So to say that we will look at the spread of these needs when the home is ready could turn out to be very costly and very impractical and have an effect on the quality of care. Doesn't the Minister agree? Has he any information that he 3005 has sought with a team of medical professionals or people in the field in Gibraltar to understand what the spread currently is, in terms of the needs of individuals and how to cater for them before the building is completed?

3010 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The building will not be a nursing home, the building will be a residential care home, and therefore the facilities that are there will not be changed in any way for people who need medical attention and who should be in a nursing home or in a hospital. This is not what is going to be provided.

3015 What is going to be provided is what used, historically, to be the Jewish Home, the Anglican Home and Mount Alvernia Home, owned and operated by the Mackintosh Trust, who did not employ doctors and did not employ ... They had elderly care homes, and elderly care homes exist in the UK. In some cases you have elderly care homes that are just for people at a certain level of mobility and health, and nursing homes that are only nursing homes. And in some cases you have a wing that is a nursing home, another part that is for dementia and another part that is for people who are healthier and more active and can do a lot for themselves. That is what exists in the United Kingdom. Whether we can ... other than nursing, which I think is not something we are going to get involved in because nursing is a responsibility of the Health Authority. People pay Social Insurance for that care and that is where they should get it from; it is already paid for. There are many people who have no medical conditions other than dementia and no physical impediments other than dementia, and therefore it may be possible to incorporate the dementia home, as I have told the Hon. Mr Bossino, who I thought was promoting the idea, but I am not sure now whether he is promoting it or opposing it, but anyway, I thought it was a good idea when he said it, so I am going to see if it can be done. But that is the only thing that we will have. We will have people who, as they get older and have more physical problems in cooking and looking after housework, need to have carers and get to a stage where the carers cost more than putting them in a care home, and then it makes sense to have a care home. That is there, that population. 3020 The census, when it comes out, will show, as every other census before has shown, that the over-70s are growing faster than any other segment of the population here, as they are in the rest of Europe.

3025 We are trying to not wait for the problem to hit us and then try to find a solution. The dementia home was started because the problem was already there, and then when we came in we found that, in fact, some of the rooms were so small that they could not be used and we had to bring somebody from the UK and spend a lot of money undoing what the GSD had done because they tried to put in more people than the building could cope with when you had people who needed help, carers and wheelchairs.

3030 In this home we do not expect to be providing medical care, but we will have a place where doctors can come and see patients – very near to the Hospital, obviously. The location is, I think, very good because the nearness to the Hospital means that people can go to the Primary Care Centre if they are mobile, or a doctor can come quite quickly and see a number of patients in the place, where there will be a room for doctors to attend to the people in the home. But that is the only provision we are making, and that is the only one that is going to be made. Therefore, the model with the manning levels and the skills level we need is not something that I can look elsewhere in Gibraltar to find, because that disappeared a very long time ago. So what I am looking to see is what advice we get to make sure that when the owner of the home starts discussing with us the contractual arrangement, the condition that we put is that they have to ensure that the person they hire to run this place will be able to tick all those boxes that I hope I will be able to put here, as if the home was in the UK. The best way to do that is to look at best practice in the UK. I am fortunate that I have a contact who has promised to bring me a person from his outfit because he has a lot of homes that will be able to provide that and it hopefully will not cost us any money, which is part of the thing I always try to do: get others to pay. 3040 3045 3050

3055 Mr Speaker: One final question from the Hon. Damon Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: I am grateful. Maybe this will be a short reply. Can I give him an opportunity to perhaps even correct the record or explain himself further? In a Gibraltar Chronicle report some time ago he was quoted ... but he may have been misquoted; that is a possibility. The article said:

Sir Joe said that the new Rooke site will 'eventually replace Mount Alvernia'.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: [Inaudible] replace Mount Alvernia, but not in doing what Mount Alvernia has become, which is not what it was intended to be in the beginning. There are people in Mount Alvernia who are getting the level of medical treatment they would get in the GHA, in St Bernard's. Those people, in future, will be in St Bernard's, which is where they need to be. But as I have said in my last answer, that is many years in the future, and if you want me to tell you what I will be doing many years in the future, then I welcome your faith, in that I will be in my 90s and possibly in my hundreds, still here and still in government.

The reality is I think decisions have to be taken nearer to when you implement them, and taking decisions too far away, in the kind of world in which we live today, where we never know what is going to hit us tomorrow, does not make sense. So as a matter of policy, I do not commit myself to telling you things that are hard black and white, because the reality of it is that there are too many variables affecting a lot of our lives, although here in Gibraltar we all behave as if we are immune – Ukraine is on another planet and climate change is on another planet, and we are in a place where we are not affected by anything. Unfortunately, it is not true. I wish it were.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, just on this point, because I was waiting for my own, but given the matter that has been raised by the Hon. Minister now, when he says they are looking to transform Mount Alvernia to the original form of it and he has indicated during a number of supplementaries that he is taking advice and he is going to take on board the possibility of taking advice on the dementia aspect, can I urge him also to take advice on this issue? The comment he has just made, that those people should be in St Bernard's is an error, if I can put it that way, because part of the reason Mount Alvernia transformed itself into this other function is that there is a need for a facility that provides a hybrid that is not just a residential home and is not just an acute facility, because previous Governments ... I am not just talking about the Members opposite, but when I was Health Minister and I was liaising with Mount Alvernia, and indeed when they were in government in their first incarnation they would have found that the rates of hospital occupancy ... that there were percentages that were being told by clinicians and experts in the field were people who needed care; they could not be in a residential home, but really were not suitable for an acute facility like a hospital. I would just urge him to consider also taking advice on this question in the whole context of the assessment of people who will go to Rooke, may also need to go to hospital, but that there will be a place in Gibraltar that can provide that degree of care, a bigger degree of care than perhaps in the Rooke facility, so that it does not end up in St Bernard's being occupied by persons who do not need acute care but need some care. Can I urge him to do that when he considers, as he has said, that he will take advice on that question? Does he agree that this an issue that needs to be looked at?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, I have already said I believe in taking the decisions when the time comes to take them, because nothing is written on tablets of stone.

I am telling the Members opposite, in reply to the questions they are putting to me, how I see the scenario. At the end of the day we have had, for many years, a lot of people in St Bernard's who were supposed to be in Mount Alvernia. Therefore, I think the new home will meet what is now an unsatisfied demand, which is creating a situation of putting pressure on beds in the GHA and Mount Alvernia. Once it is open and it starts working, we will review the situation as it develops, and whoever happens to be employed to run Gibraltar then will take the decisions that are needed when the time comes.

3105 At the moment, the way I see it, the dividing line between St Bernard's and Mount Alvernia is not as clear-cut as it used to be. There are wards in St Bernard's that are manned by Mount Alvernia and there are lots of health ... The people in Mount Alvernia are working in the building called Mount Alvernia but they are GHA employees, GHA grades, paid GHA wages and providing a GHA service already.

3110 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Registration of personal details

Q291/2023

Statutory pension –
Rates for married and unmarried people

Q292/2023

Statutory redundancy – Rates of entitlement

Clerk: Question 287/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, when are the works currently ongoing at Eastern Beach and Eastern Beach promenade expected to be completed?

3115

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Social Security, Economic Development and Enterprise.

3120 Minister for Social Security, Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, I will answer this question together with Questions 288 to 292.

Clerk: Question 288/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

3125 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, and there I was thinking that this treatment was only handed out to Mr Clinton.

How many letters or forms asking residents to express an interest in respect of a possible transfer from ERS to the Rooke residential home were sent or delivered to residents at ERS?

3130 Clerk: Question 289/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: How many residents of ERS have expressed an interest to be transferred to the Rooke residential home?

3135 Clerk: Question 290/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, will Government consider introducing regulations or legislation to provide for the registration of personal details of purchasers of reload or so-called burner phone numbers?

3140 Clerk: Question 291/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Is Government considering any changes to the pension rates of married couples or unmarried couples given the difference in pensions in either case?

3145 Clerk: Question 292/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Does the Government agree that the level of statutory redundancy entitlement for workers should not depend on the age and gender of the person?

3150 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Social Security, Economic Development and Enterprise.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the works ongoing at Eastern Beach are expected to be completed by the end of April and resumed after the close of the bathing season.

3155 I am informed by the ERS management that the questionnaire they drafted was given to 204 residents.

The information I have been provided with by ERS is that there are five persons who have expressed an interest in moving to the Rooke residential home.

3160 I will take advice on the hon. Member's suggestion on reload cards, and the Government will then take a policy decision on the matter.

The Government is not considering any changes to the statutory pensions until the position with regard to what the eligibility of non-residents will be if there is an agreement on Schengen access and in the context of introducing pension entitlement from the age of 60. Any changes that increase the cost of the benefits will need to be reflected in higher contributions, as the policy of every Government to date has been that the Statutory Benefits Fund should be self-financing from contributions.

3165 The level of statutory redundancy entitlement for workers depends on a calculation based on the person's age and length of service, irrespective of gender, as introduced by the GSD administration in 2006.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, let me just take these in turn, if I may. In respect of Eastern Beach, he says it is going to be finished by April and then resumed after the end of the bathing season – I think that is what he said. Last time I went to Eastern Beach, just a few days ago, the whole stretch of the beach was fenced. We are about a month or six weeks away from the end of April. When he says the works are going to finish by the end of April and resume – so there will be a gap for people to enjoy the summer season – what exactly will be finished by the end of April? They have started the works but they are quite well away from any kind of major works, so all I would envisage could be done in the next few weeks presumably is some kind of beautification and refurbishment. Can the hon. Member assist us with what phase he understands the works to be in by the end of April?

3185 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: My understanding is that they will have finished the sheds that can be either rented or sold after April, but that would not be the numbers that were originally intended, which would have taken much longer and gone into the bathing season. As I said in an answer to one of the supplementaries to a previous question, whether they then do more will depend on the take-up of the ones they finish now. That is the information I am given by the people doing it, and that is what I expect to happen.

3190 Hon. K Azopardi: When he says there will be a lower number, does he have a number in mind? Has he been advised of the kind of number we are going to have, of sheds, by the end of April? Presumably the plans are being designed in a way that it does not encroach too much on to the beach because obviously it is a busy beach and people will want to enjoy their summer.

3195 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I would have to see it myself, but the area that they are occupying and the part of the beach is what they put when they put it in for planning. I think probably less than half of the number they intended will be finished. They have a team of people working on finishing the ones that were already started and a team of people clearing up what would have been phase 2, which they are not going to try to do until after the summer season – and they may not do, if in fact the take-up is not what they expect.

3200 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can I just ask finally on the Eastern Beach: the allocation of these sheds will be also done? Whatever is constructed will also be done before the summer season starts in big furore?

3205 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I do not think anybody is going to buy or rent something until it is practically finished, so the allocation, I imagine, would be when ... They have a list of people who have expressed an interest, they tell me, and then when the things are reasonably near to being usable is when people will either decide to rent or buy, or not do either.

3210 Hon. K Azopardi: And the allocation itself will be done by some kind of government process? Or is it also going to be done through CSSL? Is it an official process?

3215 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: [Inaudible] allocating or anything else. I think they just put a list with people, first come, first served, and that is what they are going to do.

3220 Hon. K Azopardi: When the Minister says 'we are not involved', I have seen on Twitter that there has been a sort of invitation that people should enquire to a specific email address, and the email address does not suggest it is a government address but it seems to have been tweeted by a quasi-government entity. So I am just asking who is going to determine these things?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I do not use Twitter, so I do not know who ... If there is something there, I would not know.

3225 They have been promoting this and they are doing it, and they tell me that they already have people who have put their names down, but of course everybody who puts their name down is not ... This is not like a house that you put a deposit on, and then, if you do not complete, you lose your money. People have put their names down, but without putting in any money and they will make a final decision depending on what the product is when they see it finished, or practically finished. I do not know whether there is an excess of names compared to what is going to be available, because what is going to be available I suspect is going to be less than half of what was intended. We just do not know.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, on ERS and Rooke, and the letters that were sent out, he has given me a figure of 204 letters sent to residents. Is that all the residents? Did all the residents 3235 receive a letter or a form? I think it is a form, really. I have seen a form. Did all the residents receive a form?

3240 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I think I need to make clear that this was a decision taken by the management, and I discovered it when the hon. Member mentioned it on television, so I did not really know it was going on. I do not know exactly to whom they have given it. I think they may have given it to people who should not be getting it all, because they have given it to some people who are in places operated by Medoc, who are not involved in this. I am just providing the information that I have been given, and the information I have been given is that it appears that 199 do not want to move.

3245 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, obviously it may be because Mount Alvernia has been very successful. At the end of the day, given the statistics that the hon. Member has given to my learned colleague Mr Bossino, your heart must go out to those people who are over 100 and are still on the list. They have been waiting a long time, I guess.

3250 Mr Speaker, does the hon. Member indeed agree that that initial reaction by people suggests that either they simply do not want to move and are quite firm in their view, or that there is quite a long way for the Government to go in seeking to try to persuade people to move to this new home, despite the pictures that we have seen on GBC about the internals?

3255 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: Mr Speaker, the Government is not trying to persuade anybody to do anything. There may be people trying to persuade them to stay, but there is nobody trying to persuade them to move. The people will be given the option when the place is ready and they can see what is the alternative. That is why this spontaneous survey carried out by the management and staff of the place is probably accurate, because I am surprised that there are five who want to move without knowing what there is.

3260 In any case, if nobody wants to move, then that is fine. That is their choice. It has always been like that, and I have always made it very clear that we are not going to put pressure on people who are now at a stage in life where they are comfortable where they are and want to stay there. We are not going to move them against their will. This is not on. It would be wrong to do it and it is not going to happen.

3265 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, obviously this not an exercise that he was involved in; he has explained that it was done by the management. Given the result and so on, is it intended for there to be another exercise to ask them again? Presumably residents and families have not been able to go on a visit to the new home, so they have formed that view based on, I suppose, what is in the public media. Is it intended for an opportunity to be given to them to go and see the site and be asked again? Or is it that the Government considers the exercise as being conducted and it is a fairly conclusive result, and therefore it is not necessary to do that?

3275 Hon. Sir J J Bossano: This has not been conducted by the Government, and therefore ... Okay, so five people, without knowing what is available, have said yes. To me, that does not send a message that there are five people who want to be in Rooke, it sends a message that there are five people who want to get out of that place without knowing where they are going. (Hon. Chief Minister: Into containers.) Yes.

3280 When the time comes and the place is ready, then the people will be asked officially if they are interested in finding out what is available as an alternative, seeing it and discussing it with their relatives, being told that they are under no pressure, they do not have to say, 'I am going.' Nobody is going to push them in the direction of going. I can understand that there may be people who would prefer not to go because there is this fear that it is going to affect their jobs or not going to affect their jobs. When the time comes, we will do things properly and then we will see how many 3285 want to come.

Hon. K Azopardi: The hon. Member says it has not been carried out by the Government, but obviously it has been carried out by the management, and the management are a public entity. Without making the distinctions, I accept the hon. Member's explanation that this not an exercise inspired or instructed by the political Government in that sense, carried out officially in that way, but he is making the distinction, as I understand it, that at a given point in future, the political Government will then say, 'We will carry out a new exercise.' That is how I understand what he is saying. Is that right?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The questionnaire, which he has seen, placed the deadline of 7th March. Why 7th March? I do not know, but if you put a deadline you are more likely to get a no than a yes.

Hon. K Azopardi: Yes, Mr Speaker, I certainly could not figure out the deadline. I had hoped that the hon. Member might help me with that, but he has explained that he was unaware of it until I spoke about it on television. There you go.

Mr Speaker, can I move on to the question on burner phones? The hon. Member says he is going to take advice. Can I just explain in a bit more detail the purpose of the question, so that when he takes advice it is in the context of this? The issue has been pointed out to me that insofar as you have a contract number, obviously there are details of who owns that phone, but when burner phones or reload numbers are used for the purposes of, for example, offensive texts or social media bullying, it is impossible to trace that number to a person, and that in certain cases there have been situations where there have been very offensive texts and so on, they have been reported to the Police, but the Police have not been able to trace them because of the nature of burner and reload numbers. And so I would urge the Government, if the hon. Member now understands the point a bit more in detail, that when he takes advice and consults also ... I would ask him not just to take advice but to perhaps consult the enforcement authorities as to whether they consider this an issue.

Does he agree that if the Government can consider introducing regulations that would have the effect that phones are not used for social media bullying, we should all do something about it?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I will make as thorough an investigation of what are the repercussions of doing it or not doing it as I can. I will take on board all the things the hon. Member has said.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, on the pension rates of married couples – and I take on board what he says, that it is a delicate moment in the negotiations for an EU treaty, so I will not overextend myself in the question, but it was merely to note to the hon. Member, when he says there will not be any changes until ... and he has explained when, but they will perhaps, presumably in future, consider changes which would be necessary were there to be alterations in the eligibility age and/or any consequential effect of the treaty.

But more specifically, the question was focused on the kind of disparity that you would find if you have married couples living together and unmarried couples living together. Unmarried couples living together obviously would be getting a higher household pension than married couples living together. Would that be part of the consideration in future?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: I do not want to commit myself on this because at the end of the day we have to look at many aspects, but remember that the statistics I provided in terms of the growth of beneficiaries show more rapid growth of non-residents than of residents. It is very difficult to know what is happening with people who have worked here and are no longer here, what they claim and how we can check. The connection with where we are with the negotiations is that we do not know whether the liability we inherited from the membership of the EU is going to continue growing or is static and closed. Given that, the decision making on whether we should or should not change will be determined by an analysis of potentially who could be affected by a change and in what numbers and in the context that at the same time we will be moving to introduce equal pensions from the age of 60, whereas everybody else is going in the opposite direction.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can I move on to the last question I have on the paper, given that issue? On the redundancy entitlement I am not clear precisely on the answer the hon. Member gave because I was taking a note in respect of others, but I had understood him to say that the calculation of statutory redundancy is in respect of age but not gender. Is that what he answered? I cannot recall.

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The question, Mr Speaker, is not on the entitlement but on the level of the statutory redundancy, and the level of the statutory redundancy is based on age and service, so that you get so many weeks according to your length of service and so many weeks if you are over the age of 40. The regulation does not say whether you are a man or a woman, so the level of redundancy is not determined by the gender.

Hon. K Azopardi: Yes, Mr Speaker, I accept that. In the phraseology of the question it really should have said eligibility, but is the hon. Member going to deal with the eligibility question so as to disconnect that in terms of the differences in gender?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: The eligibility question, which was introduced in 2006 and has not been changed, has a distinction because a distinction comes from the Social Insurance pension. That is to say the woman cannot, at 60, claim redundancy because she has a pension, and the man at 65 cannot claim it because he has a pension. So there is discrimination against a woman in one and discrimination against the man in the other. When we cure the discrimination against the man, then the discrimination in the entitlement will disappear. If you have pensions at 60 for men and women, then they will both be at 60.

Hon. K Azopardi: That is precisely what I was coming to. To the extent that we then land on a situation where the differences are equalised in some way – without saying in which way, but equalised – the Government is also committed to equalise it in respect of redundancy pay. Is that correct?

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: That would be illogical because if we equalised it in the other area, then there would be discrimination only in one way, and it would have to be put right, yes.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q293/2023
Mount Alvernia –
Owner of building

Clerk: Question 293/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Who, or which entity, owns the building where Mount Alvernia is situated?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Social Security, Economic Development and Enterprise.

Minister for Social Security, Economic Development, Enterprise, Telecommunications and the GSB (Hon. Sir J J Bossano): Mr Speaker, I am informed that the Care Agency holds a lease on the building.

3385

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, does that mean that a committee within the Care Agency decides if the building ever gets closed down, sold or repurposed ...? Who is the authority with, in terms of those decisions?

3390

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: During the term of the lease, like any other lease, unless there are specific clauses that prohibit the use of the building for something else ... I have not seen the lease, but the lease is from the original trustees of the John Mackintosh Trust, so it may be that it says the building can only be used for an elderly residential home and there could be something that prevents any other use. In practice what has happened since they have had the lease is that the Care Agency has been treated as the owner of the building, but of course the lease is only at a nominal – I think £5 – rent. To all intents and purposes, it has always been treated by the Care Agency as a building that belongs to the Care Agency.

3400

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, if the residents of Mount Alvernia all decant to the Rooke, the Care Agency will no longer have an interest in the building for that purpose, so would that mean they might simply relook at scenarios where the purpose of the building could be repurposed? Is that a possibility?

3405

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: At the moment there is no question of the building being used other than for what it is at the moment. In the context of how many people want to stay there and how many people move, nothing is going to happen with the building whilst there are people who want to stay there. It is just that the building will require more maintenance the longer it is being used, because it is an old building and it takes quite a lot of maintenance.

3410

I have said it could be a few years in the future, but if and when you get to the stage that the building is no longer being used for the purpose that it was used for ... and it is quite clear that the lease was the result of the Government taking over Mount Alvernia from the trustees of the Mackintosh Trust, so it is quite possible that the building was leased to the Care Agency for the Care Agency to continue doing what the Mackintosh Trust was doing before. But it is not something that is going to change imminently. Nothing is going to change in the ownership of the building or in the use of the building any time soon. We are talking well into the future. I have just asked what was the title of the ownership, but I do not have access to the wording of the lease, which may say, for example, if you stop using it as a residential home you have to give it back. For all I know, there may be something like that. So the options for the Care Agency with Mount Alvernia would depend on the conditions that are attached to the lease, but in any event, nothing is going to happen anytime soon. We are talking about maybe two or three years down the road if we are seeing less use of Mount Alvernia and a building that is costing more and more to keep fit. It is not something that is imminent, not something about which we need to take decisions now.

3415

3425

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you. Can the Minister just tell us whether he believes that the two entities will be needed to hold individuals who need care into the future, or is he thinking we only need one building to hold all our elderly who are in care?

3430

Hon. Sir J J Bossano: We are going to be needing, in the future, more care because there will be more elderly people, and I think we need to be guided by what is happening in other places.

I see the situation from what we have today in the steps that I have explained, where people initially have bigger homes, the children tend to leave home earlier and younger and set up their own home, so the place becomes very big. They need to move into something smaller. They 3435 cannot cope in the small place, so they need to be in a place where we have wardens and carers coming in to help. And then, depending on their state of health, they can go into a dementia home, a nursing home, a hospital or a residential place. We may need facilities independent of each of those, or we may need a facility that has segments for each of those people.

3440 It is a question of monitoring the situation, and I think seeing the trends and planning for the future is likely to deliver, but it is not something that you can say, 'I know enough about the pattern to be able to take decisions now.' We have identified now that because we no longer have a residential home, there is a vacuum in that area, where people who do not need the more intensive care are actually being put in the place that is providing them with more care than they need, because what used to be provided is no longer there. That is the stage we are meeting now.

3445 Hopefully, by July or August this year the building will be ready for occupation and people can then express an interest in moving or not moving or taking a space on the waiting list. Then we will see what pattern develops and then we will have to be adapting our planning for what we do next, what we build next, whether it should be another place for dementia or a floor.

3450 We cannot plan for the future as if we had a crystal ball. What we have to do is recognise the nature of that future and then make sure that we are pre-empting what we are going to need and provide it so that we are ready with the supply when the demand surfaces. That is the way I think we should do it.

Procedural

Mr Speaker: May I, just before the Chief Minister moves the adjournment, remind the Hon. Minister that he needs to be here tomorrow because he has to answer questions from the Hon. Daniel Feetham? Also, that applies to the Hon. Samantha Sacramento. Thank you.

Adjournment

3455 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I move that the House should now adjourn until tomorrow at 3 p.m. for the beginning of Chief Minister's questions.

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question, which is that this House do now adjourn to Thursday, 16th March at 3 p.m.

3460 I now put the question, which is that this House do now adjourn to Thursday, 16th March at 3 p.m. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Passed.

The House will now adjourn to Thursday, 16th March at 3 p.m.

The House adjourned at 8.58 p.m.

The Gibraltar Parliament

The Parliament met at 3.01 p.m.

[MR SPEAKER: Hon. M L Farrell BEM GMD RD JP in the Chair]

[CLERK TO THE PARLIAMENT: S Galliano Esq in attendance]

Tribute to Louis Triay KC

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Thursday, 16th March 2023.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

5

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, with your leave, I ask to make a Statement today in the memory of Louis Triay KC, who was a Member of the Legislative Council. I did not do so yesterday because I had a Statement to make yesterday.

10 The sad news reached all of Gibraltar two weeks ago that Louis had passed away. We were reminded, in the various eulogies, of a man born in Gibraltar, educated by the Christian Brothers, who read law at University College in London and who was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple – good choice – in 1950. He passed away having been at the Bar for 73 years. He took silk in 1982 and by the time he passed away he had already long been recorded as the world’s longest-serving lawyer on record.

15 All of that is quite remarkable, but apart from all that, he was also a Member of this House. He formed part of the Legislative Council from 1964, to which he had been elected under one of his slogans, which was ‘New broom sweeps clean’. Then he became Minister for the Port and Trade from 1965 until 1969, where he was able to give effect to that other slogan that he had run in the 1964 election, which was ‘The independent who stands for action’. That could very easily have 20 been the motto of Louis Triay’s life, let alone his politics. In every discipline that he was involved in, they benefited from his commitment, whether it was the politics, the law or sailing. In the law, of course, one of his most significant contributions was the work that he did from the Bar in the development of a world-class finance centre in Gibraltar, which stemmed from the work he had done in this House, taking the exempt companies legislation through its stages as a Bill when he 25 was here in 1967.

Apart from the family and the law, Louis’s well-known third love was the sea. He was an accomplished sailor who enjoyed the respect of his fellow sailors in Gibraltar and, indeed, beyond Gibraltar, on a number of occasions – as he enjoyed telling most of us, no doubt – sailing together 30 with the now King Emeritus of Spain. I am sure that on all of those occasions when he had the opportunity to share a boat with the now King Emeritus of Spain, Louis would not have missed an opportunity for talking about his beloved Gibraltar. Indeed, one of the areas that brought together all of Louis’s skills – his sailing, his legal training and his political background – was the work that he did in trying to get Gibraltar recognised by the International Olympic Committee.

35 Mr Speaker, perhaps the best epitaph I can give Louis Triay is that in making this Statement and in thinking of him, whether it was when he was alive and I had reason to contact him or call him, or now that he is gone and I have reason to speak of him, speaking of Louis Triay always brings a smile to my face and gives me a tiny bit of that joie de vivre that he personified.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, it is a pleasure to associate myself with the remarks of the Chief Minister on this occasion.

Louis was, I have said before, an absolute legend in so many ways – sailor, politician, lawyer, Member of this House. As the Chief Minister has said, he left his mark over seven decades in the law, left his mark in all areas of society. He could connect with people. When he spoke to people with his natural charisma, at any level of society he could reach people and did so in the most charming way. He was not just a friend and colleague. He had so many anecdotes and so many human touches that you saw on a daily basis. The man lived life to the full. One of the things he used to say often was that if it hurts, work it, and it showed in every facet of his life.

Louis was not just a Member of this House, he was also a colleague of mine and of my learned friend Mr Bossino to my left, too. In our chambers, one of our boardrooms, which I informally call the political room, has lots of photographs and posters of those days of the 1960s, of the late Mr Stagnetto and Louis, and that poster ‘New broom sweeps clean’ hangs there proudly. I like to use that room because it at least keeps me in touch with that political reality and our hybrid life.

He reached dizzy heights in the law, but also in humanity, and he leaves a deep mark in this society of ours. Our condolences go to his family, as the Chief Minister says in that summary of his life.

It is so difficult to do justice to someone who has lived life to the full in the way that Louis did, but he left his mark across a variety of fields, not just in politics but also in sport with his campaign for Gibraltar to be admitted to the Olympic Association, the financial services issues and everything else he did. Up until the end, he had an incredible interest in everything that went on in Gibraltar. I said publicly when I was asked by GBC about this, that he would often come up to my room – he had his office on the second floor – and we would talk about politics, and up until the last days he kept asking me, ‘Are we going to get that treaty with the EU?’ with an interest in Gibraltar, its sustainability and its life as a community.

Our hearts and minds are with his family, and our condolences to them.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, thank you.

I was very sorry to hear about the death of Louis Triay. He was not somebody with whom I had regular contact, like hon. Members on the other side would have had in their own chambers, but he was somebody I met occasionally, and whenever we met it was always a pleasure to speak to him. He had, as Members have said, a remarkable career in the law, he was a man who broke records, and it was always very positive, very encouraging to speak to him. You ended up feeling very upbeat after having had that conversation because that was the personality he radiated.

He was also, in my view, a Gibraltarian patriot, somebody who was a firm believer in the rights of the people of Gibraltar to determine their own future, a believer in our continued connection with the United Kingdom and in resistance to the Spanish claim.

I was very sad and very sorry to hear about his death. My most sincere condolences to his family. May he rest in peace.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, the passing of Louis Triay leaves a big gap, a void that runs through this community and beyond. Here, in this House, he is a member of our political family, but he was also so much more. I will not repeat all his achievements, which have already been duly echoed today by the Chief Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, a record to be proud of and which makes us, as a people, proud to call him one of our own.

90 It is also well known, as has been said, that this man knew very well how to live life to the fullest, and I am sure that this fact will be of so much comfort at this time to his family and friends – a life very well lived until his last days, when in his 90s he would be seen whizzing round town on his motorbike. This is something we can all aspire to for ourselves.

I take this opportunity to pass my and my party's condolences to the family of Mr Louis Triay, and his close friends. May he rest in peace.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Damon Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I think it is appropriate that, with your permission, I read from a prepared speech, for reasons that will be made clear as I go through it.

Pure grit, determination and force of character. These are the words that come to mind when I think of Louis. I had the honour to work with Louis for almost 30 years, and those character traits came very much to the fore every day until his last day in the office, which incidentally was the Friday before the Monday when he died. That fact in itself speaks volumes of the person Louis William Triay KC was.

Members will understand how, in the long period of time I shared an office with him, there will be very many anecdotes that I can think of, all of which reflected a very interesting and colourful life, which he lived to the full until, almost literally, his dying day. I will share only a few of the many experiences and pearls of wisdom he would impart, drawn from the very rich life that he lived.

My participation and interest in politics provided the basis for many conversations in this area. In relation to that, I must say that he certainly had the common touch and a way with people. He used to proudly recount how, with no previous political experience, he decided to contest the 1964 elections to our predecessor organisation, the LegCo. With a small budget and little more than an old Jeep and a loudspeaker system, he managed to get elected as an independent Member, later holding ministerial office as a result of the emergence of the Coalition National Government as a result of the pressures that we were suffering from the Francoist regime in Spain.

During the 1967 riots, he used to tell me, and in typical Louis fashion, he rolled up his sleeves and took to the streets with the tiny Mini he owned at the time, went straight to what was Shepherd's Marina to personally inspect – at the time, as the Hon. the Chief Minister rightly points out, he was the Minister for the Port – the damage done to privately owned yachts, then taking matters further into his own hands and reporting the incident, barging through Convent Place and demanding to speak to His Excellency the Governor and report what was happening at the Port. As a result of that, troops were deployed, thereby successfully calming the political temperature somewhat.

Louis had that forte. He could speak to the high and mighty at their level, as well as his compatriots in all walks of life, as the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition has just said. He used his persuasive skills and contacts in the highest – and we know that they were the highest – echelons in Spain to, for example, restore telephone links during the time of the restrictions by speaking directly to Adolfo Suarez, then Spanish Prime Minister, a meeting which had been arranged by the king himself, King Juan Carlos. In 2014, more recently, he had a direct conversation over a lunch with the former King of Spain, Juan Carlos, at his palace at La Zarzuela, to discuss some other flashpoint that was impacting Gibraltar at the time.

That he did have a close relationship with the King Emeritus Juan Carlos was not an exercise in name dropping, it was real. Testament to that is the fact that they would exchange cards and emails on birthdays and Christmas. One year, Members will be interested to know, our receptionist at the firm received a call from a gentleman with a refined Madrid accent asking to speak to Louis. The receptionist, who happened to be my aunt, enquired as to who the individual was, as she was meant to do as a courtesy. You can well imagine the surprise and shock when the reply given was 'Su majestad el Rey de España', His Majesty the King of Spain.

As is well known, he was an established lawyer as well. It seems almost bizarre to say it, but this gentleman was called to the Bar in 1950 and continued to practise until a few weeks ago. He was, as the Hon. the Chief Minister said, a Guinness world record holder as the longest-serving lawyer. He was an accomplished criminal defence barrister during his initial years, again putting 145 his razor-sharp mind to effective use in what I am sure must have been absolutely brutal cross-examination; Louis would not take any prisoners. He then developed a very strong and lucrative private practice base, which he fostered by working up the coast in the 1960s, when Marbella and Sotogrande were non-existent and Estepona was mere fishing villages, but were attracting high net-worth individuals from outside Spain. He even opened an office there. In his inimitable style, 150 charm and charisma would act as an irresistible magnet, which allowed him to clinch the client and the deal.

All of this, sadly, came to an abrupt end when he entered the political scene and then with the closure of the Frontier. At around that time, he took the opportunity to meet and then marry the beautiful Valerie and start a family. He was, nevertheless, able to continue to develop his practice 155 in the following decades, growing his sole practice with the addition of one lawyer in 1979, James Neish QC, followed by his son Louis and Charles Lavarello in 1989, me a few years later, and with the merger of Stagnetto & Co. in 2001 we joined up with the late Guy Stagnetto QC and his son Guy, eventually becoming the much larger firm that we are today.

Always finding the opportunity in adversity, one achievement which many attribute to Louis is 160 the creation, through favourable tax regimes, of Gibraltar's finance centre, which became essential when Gibraltar had to adapt once again and create wealth in a closed-Frontier economy.

One cannot, when talking about Louis, fail to mention the absolute love and passion he had for sailing. Anyone who has sailed with him, and that does not include me, can tell you that he was – how can I put it in the most diplomatic terms possible? – a demanding captain and would exact 165 the beyond-best performance of his crew in order to secure the win. In the wider sports field, he continued to persist in his campaign, as the Hon. the Chief Minister mentioned, to achieve international recognition for Gibraltar.

He worked hard and partied even harder, an eager participant at office parties, attending our Christmas party, which happened to be his last, only last year. He faced ill health with the same 170 attitude. He would endure physical pain with the determination to get through it. 'Mind over matter', he used to say. When he went through open heart surgery in his late 60s, he would tell me that he was ready to meet his maker; his maker clearly was not ready for Louis. He embraced and loved life. When the time came, it was quick and efficient, as he would have liked it.

In sum, Louis was a remarkable man, Gibraltarian to the core and with a significant 175 international hinterland, a legend who will be sorely missed.

I take this opportunity, Mr Speaker, to extend, once again, my condolences to his wife Valerie, his son Louis, his daughter Sophie, and each and every one of his grandchildren.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for all other Members' contributions, although 180 I must say it is not often that I associate with the words of the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition when he said 'Mr Bossino to my left'. The way I see it, he is always to his right.

Indeed, Mr Speaker, if I can say to the hon. Lady that when we are 90, two-stroke motorbikes will not be allowed anymore because the Minister for the Environment will have done for them, but I get the spirit of us whizzing around on electric bikes, like Louis, would be a lot of fun.

I do not want to break Mr Azopardi and Mr Bossino's hearts by telling them how often Louis 185 would be in touch and how supportive he was of our politics, but I will tell Mr Bossino that I was sworn to secrecy about the meeting at La Zarzuela. It was at a particularly difficult time and I am very pleased that he has felt able to refer to it. It is on the record, and I was very much consulted by Louis at the time before going and when he came back with all the information that he brought 190 back, told as he told it, with all of the additional anecdotes that he brought to it.

Mr Speaker, in that happy refrain, can I invite the House to now keep a minute's silence in Louis Triay's memory?

The House observed a minute's silence.

Questions for Oral Answer

CHIEF MINISTER

Q306/2023

Bob Peliza Mews and Chatham Views – Construction cost

Clerk: We continue with answers to questions.
Question 306/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

195

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, what is the current estimated projected construction cost of Bob Peliza Mews and Chatham Views, and how does the current projected construction cost compare with the contracted construction cost and the tendered construction cost, if different?

200

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

205

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the tender processes for Bob Peliza Mews and Chatham Views are still active and it is not, therefore, possible to provide figures for the construction costs for these at this moment. I can, however, advise that with regard to Chatham Views, a preferred bidder was declared on 8th March 2023 and an award is expected to be made during this month. In relation to Bob Peliza Mews, the tender assessment process is at an advanced stage and a Tender Board meeting has been set for 24th March. The final figures will, therefore, be available for the next meeting of the House and I would have no issues with the question being put again then, if Mr Speaker agrees.

210

Mr Speaker, the House will also want to know that I have, today, written to purchasers in both these estates, further updating them on progress.

215

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, with your leave and in light of the answer, I would be grateful to be able to file a question short of the six-month rule.

Mr Speaker: You have my approval.

220

Hon. K Azopardi: I am grateful, Mr Speaker. Can I just ask, in relation to the answer given, is the Chief Minister willing to say who the preferred bidder is, or does he want to wait until the award is made on Chatham Views?

225

Hon. Chief Minister: I would prefer to wait for the award to be finalised. I expect that we will be issuing a public statement once it is finalised, but if we have not issued it by the time the hon. Member puts his question, we will confirm it to him in the House. I am quite happy to tell him later who it is that we are negotiating with, but we always have to be conscious of the fact that the negotiation might not go as we expect.

230

Hon. K Azopardi: And did I understand the tail end of his answer, that he has written to prospective purchasers on progress in respect of both Bob Peliza Mews and Chatham Views? Is that right?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker.

235 Hon. K Azopardi: Without, obviously, wanting to see a copy, that letter to purchasers informs them in respect of the prospective awards, but also in relation to the possible timescales of the development – is that right?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, they have also been included in the press release that the Government has issued. I am quite happy to let them have the copies I have.

240 Hon. K Azopardi: I am grateful to the Chief Minister for giving me copies of that, which I see as dated today, so I assume it has been made public. If Mr Speaker bears with me for 30 seconds while I skim read it ... I see that in relation to Chatham Views – and obviously this has been issued today, so people will not necessarily have seen it – it ends with the comment ‘Your home will take two and a half years to complete from the award of the contract.’ So in relation to Chatham Views, 245 obviously the contract has not been awarded yet, but it will be, hopefully, this month, so I guess the timescales will run from that award, as he says. And in relation to Bob Peliza, it says between two and three years, depending on the phase of the project.

I am sure the prospective purchasers will be happy to get an update. They will be concerned, because the information reaches me regularly, and the Chief Minister ... I ask: is the Chief Minister 250 aware – I assume he is, but is he aware – that obviously there are people who, as a result of the delays in these projects, are suffering financially? They have obviously bought a house off plan but thought that they would have it already, and in some cases clearly may not get it for another two to three years, so we are talking about 2026 – maybe 2027, because sometimes there are further delays despite all the goodwill in the world. Those people, some of them, are having to rent in the 255 private market at very high prices and yet their families are growing and so on and so forth, so they may have bought something which they then have outgrown by the time they get it. Is the Chief Minister aware of those concerns? And is he talking to purchasers about all those issues?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am painfully aware of those concerns, but when you sit on 260 the government benches you deal in reality, and the reality is that people are going through those very difficult moments and we have not been able to build sooner. If we had been able to build sooner and had not, it would be unforgivable, but we have not been able to build sooner. That is why I update the purchasers regularly. That is why I am in touch with many of them. That is why many people who were purchasers will no longer be purchasers because they have had to go into 265 government rental accommodation and forgo their purchases. And that is why the Government is going to honour the original purchase prices from 2019 and not include the increases in the cost of construction, so that the equity that individuals will have when they complete on their homes will be even greater than that which they would enjoy because they were buying affordable homes if they had bought off plan.

270 So everything is a balance. In life, everything is a balance. As I have said today on Direct Democracy, people need to be wary of those who promise them things which are unrealistic. The idea that anybody could have built these homes sooner, the idea that by changing the Government these homes are going to be built sooner, or the idea that the Government has done anything to delay the building of these homes is just not to deal in reality. What we must do in the 275 context of people who are going through the difficulties that the hon. Gentleman has referred to – many of whom, of course, come to me as well as going to him – is at least give them the decency of honesty in the responses we provide.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, people will form a view on all those remarks, including the 280 remark that the Government could not have built sooner, especially when it is framed in terms that the idea that you could not have built sooner is some kind of remote and somewhat preposterous idea, because there is a backdrop and a history to this, and the backdrop and the 285 history is that it is the Government itself that promised to have these projects some time ago. In respect of Bob Peliza Mews, it was in the 2015 manifesto on the basis that it would be completed in 2019, so it is that the Government itself suggested publicly that it would be completed in 2019.

It then moved the programme forward, which I understand, and while the Government talks about COVID and it does so in these letters also, and there is obviously some impact on delay in COVID, the Government needs to understand ... Does the Chief Minister not agree that when he 290 suggests in some way that no one could have built earlier, the problem is that the Government itself suggested that they were going to build in a faster way, so that also has to be thrown into the mix?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I do not accept that, and I do not accept it for a reason. I do not accept it because there has been what we call a new intervening act. The new intervening 295 act was COVID. Yes, we were expecting to start sooner, but there had been also new difficulties with Brexit. Hon. Members appear to want to forget the Withdrawal Agreement, whether or not we would continue to enjoy the benefits of the transition period, how that would affect contracts for delivery of product into Gibraltar, whether you could legitimately sign a contract to have a fixed price or whether you would be overcharged for that price. All of these things, all of these 300 realities which hon. Members wish to now gloss over and forget, are relevant. The world, I am more alive to than most, is divided between those who say, as Mr Bossino said yesterday, COVID is just an excuse and Brexit is just an excuse, and those who understand that COVID and Brexit, in its two phases, is a reality.

The hon. Gentleman will not find it convenient to accept, but I put it to him that if he had been 305 sitting in my chair and he had been faced with the decisions that I have had to make about when to sign contracts, or indeed if any of the purchasers had taken my chair, they would have made the same decisions that I have made about when to sign contracts, why not to previously sign contracts, if they were thinking with their Gibraltar hat on, on behalf of all of the taxpayers of Gibraltar and not writing an open-ended blank cheque to developers who could then have ridden 310 roughshod over the Government and our exchequer, and where we would have been giving a subsidy even in excess of the one that we will give now, which these purchasers, in my view, are now entitled to, but not because we have failed to build one day earlier than we could have when all of those factors are brought into the equation.

All of this is detail, and the hon. Gentleman can just make an easy, spinnable remark about 315 delay but he has been a Minister and he knows that when decisions have to be made, they have to be made in the round and they have to be made in the context of all of the issues I have put out there. He might like to go back and think about where we were in 2019 and in 2018 when he was calling me Theresa May's cheerleader because I wanted the Withdrawal Agreement to be finalised sooner and the transition period to start sooner. He might care to reflect that it was only 320 once we had the transition period agreed and we knew we were in that we could sign the Hassan Centenary Terraces agreement phase 1, which then enabled us to have a fixed price for the delivery of goods. And then COVID happened. So lots of factors, Mr Speaker, and that is the reality of government decision making.

Hon. K Azopardi: That is all very well, Mr Speaker, but of course again the Chief Minister tries 325 to repackage the narrative, because Brexit had already happened when they moved the timescale in 2017 and had that press conference and issued that press release in August 2017 that said hundreds of homes would be delivered by 2019 and 2020-21. So when they issued that press release and called that press conference, they already knew that Brexit had happened, they were 330 negotiating, but they still made that announcement and they made that announcement in the context of the 2019 election. If the Chief Minister is now suggesting that somehow this was impossible to have achieved, they should have said that before the 2019 election and not suggested to people otherwise because they were trying to get votes. That is a repackaging of the narrative, with all due respect, and COVID – (Interjection) I am getting to it – did not seem to stop 335 luxury housing being built, but it did seem to have an effect on this, and now there is going to be an added cost. He said so in his original answer.

Let me ask about that. In relation to the additional cost that he says he is not going to pass on to purchasers ... I understand that they have not awarded the tenders yet, but does he have a figure for what the additional costs are? He has mentioned them a couple of times now.

340

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I gave the figure to the Hon. Mr Bossino in the last House. It is nonsense that the hon. Gentleman has – (Interjection) Yes, I gave the Hon. Mr Bossino the figures in the last House in respect of additional costs in relation to Hassan Centenary Terraces. Yes? (Interjection) No, I do not have these yet, because I have not got a final price yet.

345

Mr Speaker, how can the hon. Gentleman say that I should have said before the 2019 election that we would not have started building Chatham and Bob Peliza even in 2023? How can he say that? When a person who I have, as I have for the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition, deep intellectual respect for, gets up and asks you something which is demonstrably foolish, because I have deep intellectual respect for him I can only suggest that he is being mischievous. How could I have known before the 2019 election that in 2020, instead of sitting down to sign the contracts for Bob Peliza and for Chatham, I would, exactly three years ago today, be standing in front of an autocue in 6 Convent place saying that I was confining everybody over the age of 70 to their homes, instead of continuing the work we had been doing to grant the tenders to have them built and be handing over the keys now, months before a general election? What does he think I would have preferred to be doing: defending, not building, months before a general election, or handing out keys months before a general election? But I had to do the responsible thing. I went to the General Election in 2019 with the Withdrawal Agreement done, ready to have a transitional period and ready to start the work on building these homes, ready to start negotiating the new relationship with the European Union. And what did I end up doing? The last thing I ever expected I would do: telling Gibraltarians that they had to stay at home to save their lives. That is why, before the 2019 election and in the 2019 election, I did not tell people that their homes would be so delayed: because I did not know. I did not know they would be this delayed. I believed we would have started building in 2020. We would have been ready to start building in 2020.

350

360

And why were luxury properties being built through COVID? For a simple reason: because they had signed contracts. They had signed contracts and they were building and putting pressure on us to permit the building to continue. And what happened in many of those instances? In some instances – in one instance in particular – there is an attempt to change contracts in respect of private properties that have been bought off plan through the COVID period because of additional costs. We are not going to do that.

370

But to the straight question of why didn't you say before the 2019 election that this was going to be so delayed, I say to the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition I have too much deep intellectual respect for him to think that that is a question worth asking in this House.

375

Hon. K Azopardi: The last question, Mr Speaker. I accept that I put a long preamble to my question, but my question specifically in relation to 2019 was actually it started because they moved the timescale in 2017 and they had said to people ... They had asserted in 2015 first that they were going to build these houses, Bob Peliza and Hassan Centenary, and they were going to finish them by 2019. They then said, in 2017, hundreds of homes would be ready, and before the 2019 election, it is clear. So none of what the hon. Member has said explains that situation. He has talked about Brexit and so on, but the point is that Brexit had already happened when they made the announcement in 2017, and none of what I am talking about is explained by the answer he has given. Can he not see that?

380

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the intellectual respect I have for him is associated with what I believe must be a memory. These estates were announced in our 2015 manifesto, but in June 2016 the Brexit referendum happened, so that put the cat amongst the pigeons in respect of any timetable we had committed to in 2015. After the referendum, having secured the Withdrawal Agreement that he was no fan of in 2019 and having got two thirds more votes than him in the General Election, we believed that we were ready to sit down in 2020 to do the tenders to build the homes. (Interjection)

The 2017 announcement in 2019 is recognised by the Government as not having been able to be met and we explained to people that we were going to start immediately – ‘As soon as the election is over, we are going to start immediately.’ And look at what happened after the election. And what did people think about the 2017 announcement and our explanation in 2019? What did they think? Thirty two per cent, fifty-odd per cent – so we explained to people what happened and they gave us the benefit of the doubt. And then COVID happened.

I cannot say more openly, more honestly and more genuinely that I wish these homes were ready, but it is not for want of trying or failing every day since the last General Election of wanting to do the work to have these homes finished as soon as possible. I want young Gibraltarians in Gibraltar living in affordable homes provided by the Government. That is what I want. That is what I work for every day. I have not been able to keep the timetable that I intended for reasons which are, I think, objectively fair, but the statements from the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition are not objectively fair. Neither should they be; they are partisan and designed to deliver him a partisan advantage because this is a partisan Chamber of political debate. Fair enough, but let no one think that he is making an objective analysis that should stand up to any scrutiny.

Mr Speaker: Does the Hon. Marlene Hassan wish to ask a question?

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: No.

Mr Speaker: I thought she had signalled. Fine.
The Hon. Damon Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I rise – (Interjection) No. Mr Speaker, I have responsibility for housing. Doesn't the hon. Member accept ...? . I cannot put it in any other way, but in terms of the reasons – so as not to call it an excuse, which I know bothers him – he flip flops between citing COVID and citing Brexit. From the quick read that I think the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition has had of the letters, I do not think Brexit is even mentioned. And does he not accept that the point that my hon. Friend to my right, Mr Azopardi, has made drives a coach and horses through the points that he has made?

Let's accept that the promises he made in the 2015 General Election manifesto were unable to be delivered because of Brexit. Let's accept that the promises that he made once again – a hat trick, I think it was probably the third time – in 2019 were unable to be delivered because of COVID. But the reality is that we had the press conference in 2017. So can I ask this: does he not accept that people can exercise their judgement when putting those up to 10 crosses on the ballot paper, to which we are all subjected in a general election? Can he not accept that they be expressing dissatisfaction at the broken promises by Members opposite? (A Member: Hear, hear.) Can he not accept that? And can he comment – finally, Mr Speaker – because that anger, it has come to our knowledge, is poised to be expressed in a demonstration that Bob Peliza Mews purchasers want to effect at No. 6 Convent place? Does he not accept that people are angry because of broken promises?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, it is really quite remarkable to see a man who failed to win the leadership of his party stand up to defend the man who won the leadership of his party, because I cannot imagine that this is anything other than an attempt to reinforce the former question by the Leader of the Opposition by the man who is the putative Leader of the Opposition.

But to see him accuse me of flip flopping because I am using two excuses ... The hon. Gentleman and I have known each other for many years. I regard him as a friend, not just as a political 440 opponent. He must know how much it hurts my soul that somebody might think that what we have been through in dealing with COVID would ever be deployed as an excuse. It is, frankly, beneath the hon. Gentleman to get up and suggest that we are flip flopping on excuses. I put it to him that if he had been in my chair, he would not have done what the Leader of the Opposition might have done and what I did. I put it to him that if he had been in my chair, he would have 445 been struck by his legendary indecision and we would have seen none of the serious governing that Gibraltar has required in this period. And, Mr Speaker – (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) No,

Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: Let's hear your point of order.

450 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman is casting aspersions. He has done it once before and I let it pass. He is casting aspersions on my character by talking about legendary indecision. Where does he get that from? That is a negative slur on me personally.

Hon. Chief Minister: How dare he?

455

Hon. D J Bossino: It is a negative slur on me personally –

Hon. Chief Minister: Excuse me, how dare he?

460

Hon. D J Bossino: – and he should have been called to order, Mr Speaker, by you.

Hon. Chief Minister: How dare he?

Hon. D J Bossino: He should have been called to order without requiring me to put a point of 465 order.

Hon. Chief Minister: How dare he?

Hon. D J Bossino: It is shocking.

470

Hon. Chief Minister: The hon. Gentleman has said that I have used the death of Gibraltarians as an excuse, and is that not casting an aspersion on me? To say that I consider him to be indecisive is what one cannot say in this House, but you can get up and allege that the senior elected political representative of the people of Gibraltar would use the death of Gibraltarians as an excuse is 475 perfectly fine?

Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman can obviously give it but not take it, (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) and he needs to learn that if this is a political Chamber –

Mr Speaker: I would like the Chief Minister to resume his seat, and now we are going to move 480 on to the next question.

Q307-08/2023

Graduates –

Numbers employed in Civil Service and Gibraltar Development Corporation

Clerk: Question 307/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, this will not be so controversial.

485 What is the total number of graduates employed in the Civil Service at 7th March 2023, and will the Government provide a breakdown of the deployment of these by department, agency, wholly owned government company or other entity?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

490 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): How dare he, Mr Speaker?
I will answer this question together with Question 308.

Clerk: Question 308/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

495 Hon. K Azopardi: How many graduates are employed by or within the Gibraltar Development Corporation at 7th March 2023?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

500 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, there are a total of 805 graduates employed in the Civil Service as at 7th March 2023, for which I now hand over a schedule with the information requested.

There are a total of 42 graduates employed within the Gibraltar Development Corporation as at 7th March 2023.

505 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, obviously people at home are not seeing the schedule, so I will just ask ... I think the answer is yes, but I can see immediately from the schedule that the 805 graduates include 540 in the Education Department, presumably teachers, so if you net away the teachers we are probably looking at about 250 graduates. Does the Government think that is a sufficient number of graduates to be working in the core Civil Service?

510 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the numbers in the Civil Service on the same day, 7th March, were 2,280. If you take away the 540, you are closer to 1,700, so you would be left with about 30%, I believe. It is not a number that I think should cause us concern. In the past, there were no graduates in the Civil Service at all, and then the question was should we recruit graduates to the Civil Service to have some graduates in the Civil Service. We have graduates in the Civil Service, and indeed we have a lot of them in the Department of Education, not all of them teachers; there are other graduates in the Department of Education. There are 45 graduates in Customs, for example. There are 11 graduates in the Department of the Environment. There are 21 graduates in ITLD. The numbers are not just bloated with the teachers. There are 14 in Technical Services, 515 18 in the Treasury, 10 in the Youth Service and nine in Town Planning, so I think there is a very interesting spread of graduates throughout the departments, and I think it is an attractive mix.

520 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q309/2023
Eastside development –
Payment of premium

525 Clerk: Question 309/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, has the premium for the Eastside development been paid in whole or in part; and, if so, when and in what amount, and by whom?

530 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, no premium has yet been received. An announcement will be made as soon as negotiations have been finalised.

535 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, when does the Government expect that negotiations will be finalised and it will be ready to make an announcement, given that the initial announcement that was made in relation to the Eastside development I believe was October 2021?

540 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, because there are negotiations ongoing, if I venture a date I make it a hostage to fortune and then make it harder for the Government of Gibraltar to continue the negotiations, if we feel we have to, because the other side will know we have given a date that we will want to meet. I do not think it is in the interests of the taxpayer to shoot the negotiators in the foot in that way.

545 Hon. K Azopardi: Well, obviously we would not want that to happen, but it is also right that when the Government made its original announcement back in October 2021, almost 18 months ago, it was quite specific about the value that it ascribed to the development, and the issue of the payment of the £90 million premium was specific. It was put in the public domain and it is not subject, presumably, therefore, to any kind of negotiating impact. Certainly that has not been suggested before. Indeed, it was provided for in the Budget book for last year.

550 Really what I am asking is why is anything that the Chief Minister has just said in the previous answer going to impact on the payment of the £90 million premium, which we had understood on this side of the House, and indeed publicly, had been sealed in terms of the negotiation and it was just subject to planning?

555 Hon. Chief Minister: Because I have not said any of that, Mr Speaker, and I am not suggesting that the £90 million is at all in play. What I am suggesting is that there are negotiations ongoing and if they want a termination clause that is worse for the taxpayer and they know that the taxpayer's representative wants the whole thing completed next week, they will press on that termination clause, where we might think that we want to go for another termination clause. For 560 example, we are not talking about negotiating the premium, we are talking about negotiating the contract. We made the announcement because the premium and the land in respect of which it was going to be paid had been agreed, and we set out the heads of terms so that people knew what was happening. We are now negotiating the actual transfer of the land, which includes contractual clauses on termination and it includes leases and draft leases and building leases, all 565 of those things, and we want to get, obviously, the best deal for the taxpayer in the suite of documents that is being agreed. That is why I do not think it makes sense to set up a date.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, for me to be clear, was the £90 million that was already agreed payable on the grant of planning permission, or is it payable once they sign the development licence and hence the relationship with the negotiation he is involved in?
570

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have not got the document with me, but I believe it was on execution of the contracts and the planning permission – in other words, the agreement. Both had to be done, so I think the outline planning permission has been granted some time ago with 575 some appeals that were outstanding, and the final parts of the contract negotiation are ongoing now.

Hon. K Azopardi: Just to be clear, Mr Speaker, no part payment has been made in relation to the £90 million – is that correct?
580

Hon. Chief Minister: No, we have not offered the site out for hire purchase.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q310 and Q331/2023
Treaty talks re future relationship with EU –
Update; Airport

Clerk: Question 310/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.
585

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, will the Chief Minister update the House on the state of talks aimed at finalising a treaty with the EU for a future relationship with Gibraltar?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.
590

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Question 331.

Clerk: Question 310/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

595 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: In the context of negotiations between the UK, Gibraltar, Spain and the European Union on Gibraltar's future relationship with the EU, can Government explain in detail what it considers to be the difference in definition between 'joint use' of the Airport and 'enhanced use' of the Airport?

600 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the negotiations to arrive at a treaty between the United Kingdom and the European Union on the future relationship are ongoing.

605 The term 'enhanced use' of the Airport refers to its greater usage through flights between Gibraltar and the European Union. This was first used in the Cordoba Agreement. The term 'joint use' has traditionally been taken to mean shared or joint control over the Airport and is associated with the 1987 Agreement, which was rejected unanimously by our predecessor House of Assembly.

610 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I will ask the question. I understand that the hon. Member is involved in ongoing negotiations and it is up to him how he wants to answer it. I appreciate the delicate moment and on our side of the House he knows that we have often said, despite our disagreement on issues, that we all want to achieve a safe and beneficial agreement for Gibraltar. Is there a forthcoming round of negotiations planned? There have been statements in the recent 615 past about parties coming close, and it has been suggested, by the hon. Member before – indeed, in the press – that parties were very close. Are we at that moment, or are we anywhere closer to a deal? And can he perhaps clarify a bit more?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, there is ongoing and continuing daily contact between 620 negotiators. We are, I think, all, in good faith, trying to ensure that we achieve the best deal that each of the parties considers is essential. We are all setting out to secure something that is safe, secure and beneficial for each of the sides. This is not easy. If it were, it would be done already.

I have made many statements in this House about the state of negotiations. I am not making one now for a reason, and I think the hon. Gentleman will understand that if I am not saying more, 625 it is not because I do not want to say more, it is because I consider it prudent not to say more.

Hon. K Azopardi: I accept that, of course, and hence the basis on which I am asking the questions, but can I just ask you one more thing? It did jump out at me from the page when I read a recent report of the discussions, that ... There are a number of items that are being discussed
630 from time to time, but the one item that I was slightly surprised at was that there was a throwaway remark in a Gibraltar paper that one of the issues that was now also being discussed was so-called nuclear security. Is that a new item? Is that even being discussed? And if so, does the Chief Minister want to say anything about that? And if he does not, then in the context of the negotiations I will understand, but it seems to me to be a new thing.

635 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, no, I do not want to say anything about the negotiations. I do not want to suggest that that is not being considered or to suggest that it is being considered, because the amount of nonsense that I have read in the press about the issues that are alive in the negotiation ... and unfortunately, some of it apparently inspired by people who are in the negotiation, although they know that, being in the negotiation, those things would not be 640 accepted even if uttered from a corner of the room in the negotiation.

I think we all want to see an outcome here rather than a running commentary. It is the outcome that has value, not the commentary, and I think that is how we have to approach answers in this House at this moment in respect of the matter.

Q311-12/2023

Airport tunnel –

Noise and air pollution mitigation measures; measures to accommodate heavy traffic

645 Clerk: Question 311/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, what noise and air pollution mitigation measures are being considered by the Government in respect of the proposed opening of the airport tunnel and residents of the immediate area?

650

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Question 312.

655 Clerk: Question 312/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, in preparation for the opening of the airport tunnel, what modifications or enhancements does the Government propose will be made to our roads to accommodate heavy traffic and different modes of transport?

660

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the tunnel project includes the installation of environmental noise barriers alongside residential areas immediately bounding the tunnel approach ramps.

665

The tunnel and its approach roads from the Frontier to Winston Churchill Avenue have been designed to cater for the volumes of traffic entering and exiting Gibraltar. The conversion of Devil's Tower Road into a dual carriageway was part of that planning at the time the decision was taken to build the tunnel. There is also a separate cycle and pedestrian subway following the tunnel route, although, as has already been publicly stated, pedestrians, cyclists and e-scooters will be able to continue using the runway, as is currently the case. This will assist in promoting active travel and sustainable forms of transport in the area and beyond, linked into the Active Travel Strategy for which works along Bayside Road are already under way.

670

Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful to the Chief Minister for the answer, and particularly in relation to the measures which appear, on their face, to focus on noise volume and creating subways for particular modes of transport, which he says in his answer would encourage active transport, which he knows, as well as the Minister for Transport knows, we support insofar as the cycling initiative is concerned.

675

Just one thing that jumps out of the answer to the question is that it was specifically focused also in combination with the answer he gave in relation to air pollution reducing measures. The Minister will know, of course, of the sad death of a nine-year-old child, which the Inner South Coroner's Court ruled was due to air pollution, and in the UK they are really focusing on that insofar as young lungs are concerned. Given the fact that we are moving a lot of traffic down that way to the Airport, does he have any other specific measures to reduce not only the volume but also air pollution more generally? I know it is a big concern for his Government and it is a big concern on our side, but also for members of the public who are now residing in this more populous area of Gibraltar and the concerns that they have shared with me about air pollution more generally.

680

685

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, we have to understand what we are dealing with. The traffic that is now going to go down Devil's Tower Road is the traffic that goes down Winston Churchill Avenue. In other words, it is the traffic that goes through, bisecting Glacis Estate and Laguna

690

695 Estate. All of that traffic is there today and will still be there tomorrow because the access to the tunnel will continue to be along Winston Churchill Avenue. You just turn right as you go north, left as you come south, instead of going across the runway. So the traffic that is going to be in the area of Beach View Terraces, E1 and Hassan Centenary Terraces etc. is the traffic that is now at Laguna and Glacis. What we want to do is not say, 'What are we going to do now that this traffic is going to go past Beach View Terraces?' What we want is to have less traffic, and that is what the 700 Sustainable Traffic Plan is about. I am very pleased that they are now supporting it and I am very pleased that we are working together on these issues, because I think this is an area where we should not have party political division. We should not allow one interest group to use one of us against the other to think that, by doing that, we can garner votes one way or the other. This should be a House approach, which is why I supported the Hon. Minister for Transport when he suggested that he should get in touch with hon. Members opposite when he was announcing the 705 beginning of the implementation measures.

The ability to continue to see the runway crossed by pedestrians, scooters and bicycles is a highly important part of how we reduce traffic. The advice we had was that the deal we had inherited from the GSD, which did not permit pedestrians and bicycles to cross the runway, was going to cause much more vehicular traffic because faced with the need to walk all the way down 710 to Eastern Beach and walk back, those people would bring their cars, would come on their mopeds or would come in taxis; at that time there was not such a thing as an e-scooter – an e-scooter is a more modern iteration of transport. So we persuaded the MoD that it was in their interest because of Devil's Tower Camp and Four Corners, which you no longer have to go around, and in the interest more widely in terms of concern for the planet, that we should continue to be able to 715 cross the runway, because that means people will take the route they take today. Many thousands of people should be lauded for the fact that they do not get in a vehicle and they cross the runway on foot, some of them in the most inclement of weather. I try to walk, but in inclement weather I am a bit of a wuss. I laud the fact that people walk in inclement weather and cycle in inclement weather as well.

720 So by keeping the runway open, which is a measure that we have now been able to announce –
I am going to sign an MoU with the MoD in coming days – we think it that will have a huge effect in keeping the traffic as it is and not making it worse, and other measures will assist in reducing the traffic as we reduce it more widely.

725 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, in relation to the final point he made, in terms of using the runway and that that has been permitted by the MoD – because ultimately, at the end of the day, it is an MoD runway – does it result in a cost to the Government to have obtained that easement?

730 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, was he the gentleman who was accusing me yesterday of becoming involved in other people's questions? No, that hypocrisy cannot have been manifest from him, given how he involves himself in asking questions in other people's questions.

Yes, Mr Speaker, it does involve a cost. I do not have the exact numbers with me. It involves the Government of Gibraltar funding the cost of maintaining the guard, because the MoD no longer needs to maintain the guard; they would close it. We are not going to provide the guard, 735 they are going to provide the guard, but we are going to fund the costs of providing the guard.

Hon. D J Bossino: Is that information which presumably he does not have now, but he would have with some notice?

740 Hon. Chief Minister: I told the Hon. Mr Phillips a moment ago, Mr Speaker, that we are about to sign an MoU with the MoD. The final calculations are being done for that MoU, and when that MoU is signed there will be a press statement, I imagine before the next meeting of the House given that the next month is the Easter month and I would not want to bring him here in his Easter vigil. Therefore, he can expect that the amounts will be in the press release, and if they are not, 745 because the press release drafters decide that it should not be there, then he can ask the question and I will provide it, but certainly in the Budget it will feature.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker –

750 Mr Speaker: No, we need to move on. Next question. (Interjection by Hon. E J Phillips) No, please resume your seat.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, what about five, six, seven and eight?

755 Mr Speaker: Oh, I see what you mean. I see what you are getting at. Right. You may ask a question, Mr Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: I am grateful, Mr Speaker. Just one question. Just curiosity, because the response the Chief Minister gave in relation to my hon. Friend's question about the Frontier itself and the small cost that might be incurred by the Government ... Are there any issues about powers and rights and obligations and who will be performing that function at the runway crossing by Winston Churchill Avenue, because there is a technical ...? I think the Minister for Justice actually had an issue with this last time we debated it very briefly.

765 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do not understand the point that the hon. Gentleman is making. The point I made was that we are going to pay for the guard but the MoD is going to continue to provide the guard. That is why I phrased it that way. I do not know whether he meant what is going to happen on the runway. The runway jurisdiction remains with the Royal Gibraltar Police. They have jurisdiction, too, but it is ...

770 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q313/2023

Law firms making introductions to Government Ministers – Legality of charging fees

Clerk: Question 313/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

775 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government confirm that it is unacceptable for law firms to charge their clients a fee for making introductions to Government Ministers?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

780 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the Government agrees that it would be unacceptable for any law firm or professional or person to purport to charge a fee or seek any advantage for making introductions to Government Ministers or officials. Government Ministers respond to all queries from all members of the public without the need for any introductions, paid or otherwise.

785 If any person has been asked to pay such a fee, they should seek restitution of their capital and should alert the relevant Minister and my office of any such goings on.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q314/2023

UK guaranteed £500 million facility –
Update re extension

Clerk: Question 314/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

790 Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide an update on negotiations for the extension of the UK guaranteed £500 million facility whose termination date is 3rd December 2023?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

795

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, no update can be provided at this time. Discussions are ongoing and the House will be updated once these are finalised.

I can tell the House that discussions have progressed very well. I will, of course, update the House during my address at the Budget on the state of play then, if I have not been able to make an announcement before then.

800

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the Chief Minister's comment as to negotiations that are ongoing. As I understand it, I believe the facility of £500 million – I am happy to be corrected by the Chief Minister – would be at about £425 million as at 1st February if the numbers that I had yesterday were correct. Does he agree that having only £75 million left to 3rd December is perhaps cutting it a bit fine in terms of the overall public finance position?

805

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, of course the numbers that he got yesterday are correct, but I do not agree with his analysis.

Q315/2023

Spanish tax haven blacklist –
Expected date of removal

810 Clerk: Question 315/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government advise the exact date upon which Spain's commitment to remove Gibraltar from its tax haven blacklist within two years of the coming into effect of the Tax Treaty expires?

815

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the International Agreement on Taxation and the Protection of Financial Interests between the Kingdom of Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland regarding Gibraltar, more commonly referred to as the Tax Treaty, stated that the agreement 'shall enter into force on the date of the later of the parties' notifications that they have completed their internal procedures'. The date in this respect, therefore, relates to the end of March.

820

I am happy to be able to confirm that the relevant Spanish officials have confirmed through diplomatic channels that they are commencing the process of complying with their commitment to remove Gibraltar from the list in question. More details on the timings for the completion of this process will be announced as soon as they are available. Should the process not progress

825 within a reasonable timescale, we will, more in sorrow than in anger, withdraw from the application of the treaty.

830

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the Chief Minister's response. I am sure my hon. colleagues will have something to ask further, but if I can just ask for concrete clarity on a date. The unilateral declaration by the government of Spain on delisting referred to – I have a copy of the statements that the Chief Minister gave us at the time – 'within two years of its entry into force'; in Spanish, 'dos años desde su entrada en vigor'. Given that language, what is actually the date? Is it 31st March, or is there another date between now and 31st March? I am just trying to get some clarity as to when is the actual end date.

835

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I think I have given the hon. Gentleman that clarity. I have said the end of March and I have also told him – which I would have thought he would have wanted to start his supplementary with, but of course that is a matter for him – the very welcome news that we have had confirmation from the relevant officials in Spain that they are starting the process of our removal from the blacklist. That, I think, is the headline we should all want to go away with in respect of this matter.

840

Hon. Azopardi: Mr Speaker, let me just ask, because I think my hon. colleague, when he said he wanted a bit of clarity ... I had read before that the entry into force in Spain, which was the last party for it to be entered into force for, was 4th March 2021. The hon. Member is suggesting that it is not 4th March, so to the extent that it is out there ... When you google this, that date comes up as a confirmation date. It is not 4th March. The precise date is 31st March, or is it any other date at the end of March?

850

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I do not want to be held to a particular date on this subject. I want to be clear that the information we have had is that having hit March, we have been told by the Spaniards that they are starting the process of removing us from the blacklist. Starting a process can be something that then gets stretched out, and therefore I am saying, 'Thank you for confirming that you are starting this process. Thank you for confirming that we are all seeing each other in compliance. That process has to be dealt with in a reasonable period of time, otherwise we will consider that you are not acting in good faith and then we would withdraw.' But let's be clear. We have had confirmation from the relevant Spanish officials through diplomatic channels that the process has begun. I will only be happy when the process has ended if it ends within a reasonable period of time, that is to say short and not designed to avoid the obligation that Spain acquired in writing to act in this way.

855

Hon. K Azopardi: Of course it should be done in a reasonable period of time but I thought that that is what had already been agreed – in other words the reasonable period of time had been defined as ... Spain had said it would be done within two years of the entry into force by the last party, which I had understood to be early March 2021, and therefore that we are now on borrowed time already. The reasonable period of within two years having been set, if we are wrong and it is not the beginning of March and it is the end of March, it should really be done by the end of the month, and if there is going to be any added leeway, it is leeway beyond the commitment given. Does he not agree?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, because what he has done there is set himself up as the arbiter of reasonableness without knowing the legal system of the place he is talking about and how long their processes might take. But if we were to indulge them in that debate, we might be giving them more leeway than they deserve, so what is in the interest of Gibraltar is to say they have confirmed it is happening, let's see it happen within a reasonable time, let's see what they

875

880 say now is the reasonable process they have to go through that the pressing of the button takes them to.

Mr Speaker, we have to be very clear about one thing. Gibraltar entered into this commitment in good faith. We entered into this commitment on the basis of representations made to us, I can only believe in good faith, to remove us within a certain period. We are now being told that they are delivering against that commitment. I will believe it when it is done.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I am, with all due respect, not setting myself up as the arbiter of what is a reasonable period of time, nor am I setting myself up as an expert on Spanish law or administration. I am reading from the declaration of the government of Spain that is headed 'Declaración unilateral del gobierno de España sobre delisting', which says, 'dos años desde su entrada en vigor', within two years of its entry into force. We can have a disagreement about whether it is the beginning of March or the end of March, but the government of Spain, setting itself up as the arbiter of what is reasonable in accordance with Spanish procedure, has said within two years, and it is either at the beginning of March and we are on borrowed time, or at the end of March and we are not on borrowed time. Has the government of Spain indicated to the hon. Member what it considers is the time it needs for the delisting, given the declaración they issued at the time of the Tax Treaty?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the hon. Gentleman has referred to the unilateral declaration. The unilateral declaration talks about a timeframe. It does not talk about the period to give effect to the thing which is the thing that we are saying, maximum, is a reasonable period. This is when it has to happen. How it happens is what we are talking about must happen in a reasonable period of time. This has to happen. The effect of it has to now happen within a reasonable period of time.

I will not be happy until Gibraltar is removed from the blacklist. This is clear as to what the Kingdom of Spain has to do. We are not giving the Kingdom of Spain any way out in respect of what they have said they will do, because if we are going to enter into new arrangements with the Kingdom of Spain, we will judge the credibility of those new arrangements based on the credibility of the arrangements we have already done. What matters here is outcome, and it matters that that outcome should come and it should come within the timeframe that was agreed, because otherwise nothing else will be credible.

Mr Speaker: If the Leader of the Opposition wishes a further supplementary, then we will ... No. We will move on then.

915 Clerk: Question 316 – (Interjection)

Mr Speaker: Just a second, Mr Clerk. The Hon. Roy Clinton has a quick supplementary.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker, for your indulgence. A very quick question. Did I hear correctly that the Chief Minister stated that if, in his view, the Spanish government does not move quickly enough to remove us from the blacklist, he would take steps to rescind the tax agreement?

Hon. Chief Minister: Yes, Mr Speaker, I have repeated what I have said in that respect. I have said it before.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q316-17/2023
Tax Office and ITLD premises and staff –
Plans to relocate

Clerk: Question 316/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

930 Hon. D J Bossino: Does the Government have any plans to relocate the Tax Office and its complement of employees?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

935 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Question 317.

Clerk: Question 317/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

940 Hon. D J Bossino: Does the Government have any plans to relocate the offices of ITLD and its staff?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

945 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, as I mentioned at the last session of Parliament, plans for the relocation of some government departments are ongoing. An announcement will be made publicly if agreements with a new landlord can be finalised.

950 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I think the reference that he is making is to the question that I asked specifically in relation to the private landlord in the New Harbours area where the Bassadone Group have a building, and I understand that they are also building office space.

955 The information I have received is that as far as these departments were concerned, there was consideration being given to moving them. Is he able to state any further at this stage whether ...? He talks about 'some' government departments – is he able to say whether it is these government departments which he is considering making the move to the Bassadone premises?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, I cannot make a statement about that now.

960 Hon. D J Bossino: Is he able to provide the House with an update as to when he thinks he will be in a position to provide that information? If he recalls the particulars that I asked of him, presumably it is going to have a rental price tag attached to it ... when he expects to be in a position to provide that type of information to the House?

965 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am unable to update the House on when I will be able to update the House.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Hon. D J Bossino: Is there any particular reason for that?

970 Mr Speaker: Please, no. (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) No. Next question.

Q318/2023
Waterport fountain –
When to be fixed

Clerk: Question 318/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: When will the Waterport fountain be fixed?

975

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

980

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the repair of this fountain will involve public expenditure. Given the current issues surrounding public finances as a result of the spending on the COVID pandemic, this repair is not considered a priority over other spending.

985

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, we had a relatively lengthy exchange in relation to roundabouts yesterday – the Sundial – and he was able to provide, I think, in relation to that question, quite a lot of answers and replies around the fringes of it, in terms of the developments that were going to go ahead. Is it something that he is considering? It is genuine complaints that people have made to me within the context of tourism, and in fact I would have expected that the Hon. the Minister for Tourism would be answering it, but the Hon. the Chief Minister is answering it because of the expenditure that this would incur to the public finances of this place. Is he able to state whether it is his intention, and if it is his intention to refurbish it, when that is likely to happen? I would ask whether he has an idea of the cost of that.

990

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am, of course, delighted to provide such information as I can to the hon. Gentleman in respect of this eponymous fountain that he is asking after and say that the Government will continue to take the view that if it is possible to ask those who are developing in the area to provide enhancements for the area, we will be seeking to do that in the context of negotiations. There is one particular project in that area that is coming, that would no doubt benefit from this being repaired, perhaps even updated, modernised etc. and in such a manner that its colloquial reference might change from Capullo to something else.

1000

Mr Speaker: Next question.

1005

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, if I may – I think I have only asked one. In relation to that – we are talking about the fixing of it – is it within the realms of possibility, or does the Government have absolutely no cash available to it, to pay for the connection so that we have water spouting out from the relevant tubes of the fountain and it works as a properly functioning fountain?

1010

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if the issue were connection we might have been able to fix it, but it is not. And it is not about not having cash, it is about prioritising the use of cash, which is what I told the hon. Gentleman yesterday. Yesterday, I told him it was about prioritising. Today, he says, 'Today, you have absolutely no cash available,' which mischaracterises the public finances in a way that I can only associate with his desire to spin everything.

1015

Mr Speaker: This is the last supplementary.

Hon. D J Bossino: I am grateful, Mr Speaker. If it is not a matter of connection, what is it?

Hon. Chief Minister: Another type of repair.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q319-20/2023

Stronger links with Morocco –
Dates of Chief Minister’s visits; announcement

1020 Clerk: Question 319/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: On what dates has the Chief Minister visited Morocco in order to establish stronger links, since the last election?

1025 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Question 320.

1030 Clerk: Question 320/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: When will announcements be made in relation to the establishment of stronger links with Morocco?

1035 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, in relation to Question 320, an announcement will be made as soon as possible.

1040 Additionally, as I have already told the hon. Gentleman in this House, it is not in the public interest, at this stage, for me to say any more in relation to this issue given the very live and complex political context we currently find ourselves in. When it is, I shall look forward to making the relevant announcement.

1045 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker. We had this exchange in this House back in October, I think it was, and I am going to refer the hon. Member to the answer he gave at the time. It was not him, actually, it was his colleague the Minister for Tourism. There was already, at that stage, disclosure provided in the prepared answer to my question, not even in response to a supplementary, and the answer was this, and I quote:

the Chief Minister has engaged in a number of visits to Morocco to seek to establish stronger links, and announcements which show those links bearing fruit are expected in coming months.

1050 This was in November. Given that it is already in the public domain that the hon. Gentleman has visited on a number of occasions the Kingdom of Morocco, why can't he provide me with the dates?

1055 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, for the reasons I have referred him to a few moments ago. We are all in politics to try to make Gibraltar better, I hope. We are all in politics to try to improve Gibraltar. If somebody I have known since we were 12 years old hears me say, 'It is not in our interest that I give you any more information,' I hope he knows me well enough that I would not be trying to hide behind that to avoid giving him an answer. So even though it might appear to him to be innocuous, can he take it from me that it is not in the public interest that I should say more?

1060 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I am happy to take it from him to an extent, but I would like to understand the premise for the rationale of that position. His colleague, a Member of his Cabinet and Government, has already stated in this House – on public record, it is in Hansard – that the hon. Gentleman has visited the Kingdom of Morocco on a number of occasions. I am asking him 1065 to simply state the dates. Why is it that that has an impact on the public interest of Gibraltar in the negotiations? I simply do not understand it.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, who has mentioned the negotiations? I said in the complex political context we currently find ourselves in. He has mentioned the negotiations. Why is he making that link?

1070 Mr Speaker, in the Gibraltar in which I was brought up, if the Chief Minister of Gibraltar or a senior Minister said, 'Look, it is not in Gibraltar's interest that we talk about this,' people would say, 'Fair enough, we are all in it together.' Here, I am being pressed to explain the public interest. If I explain the public interest, I am going to give the game away. It is not in the public interest that I should explain the public interest. The hon. Gentleman is pushing me to give him answers which 1075 are right out of the script of Yes Minister. I would have thought that somebody who has been following and involved in politics from the age I was would understand what I am trying to say to him and that if we are all in it together, the nation is not going to fall because I do not give him this answer across the floor of the House today. Why press?

1080 Mr Speaker: This will be the final supplementary.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, so be it. Simply to put to him that I have not plucked that interpretation of what he has given the House on this occasion from thin air. I made a direct reference to the negotiations with the EU not because I have invented it, but because the hon.
1085 Gentleman himself said so in the context of his reply in November when he said, and I am quoting:

the hon. Gentleman knows that we are in the middle of a negotiation. That negotiation involves the United Kingdom, it involves the European Union and it involves Spain, as a member state of the European Union.

He says that by asking that question I may disadvantage Gibraltar, simply asking him to provide me the dates in relation to visits that the Hon. Minister said he had made to Morocco. I ask him to accept that the premise of my question was relevant in the context of the EU negotiation, because he himself said it could have an impact on the EU negotiations, but now he is saying it 1090 could have an impact on other things.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I ask that you rule that the hon. Gentleman's remarks are out of order, given that they were not ended with a question.

1095 Hon. D J Bossino: I am asking –

Mr Speaker: Would you add a question on to what you have just said?

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I have asked him to make a comment in relation to the point I 1100 have just made. It was a question.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have absolutely no intention of further commenting in respect of this matter, and I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave a few moments ago.

1105 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q321/2023
Drug dogs –
Location of teams

Clerk: Question 321/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Does HM Customs still have a drug dogs team, and have any dogs been transferred between HM Customs and the RGP; and, if so, how many?

1110

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, HM Customs has two drug dogs with their respective handlers, who are both customs officers. Both teams are trained to search for controlled drugs and cash.

1115

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, can I ask the Chief Minister – I do not believe he answered my question – the part about have any dogs been transferred between HM Customs and the RGP?

1120

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, in fact the opposite happened. The drug dogs at the RGP I think at one stage were transferred to HM Customs.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you, Mr Speaker. And if that is the case, has that left the RGP without any dogs, or have they replaced them?

1125

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the RGP came to me, through the Minister for Justice, to say that they no longer wanted to have a drug dog capability. They did not believe that Gibraltar needed to have two drug dog capabilities and two explosive detector dog capabilities. GDP have explosive detector dogs and Customs have drug detector dogs. This was entirely driven by the Commissioner of the RGP, who approached us on that basis.

1130

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q322/2023
COVID memorial –
Completion date

Clerk: Question 322/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

1135

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: When will Government hold the promised memorial for those who died during the COVID pandemic?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1140

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, the COVID memorial is currently at an advanced stage in the construction process. The Government will make an announcement as to the exact date of the memorial as soon as it is able to do so after confirmation of completion of works, which are likely to take another six weeks or so.

1145 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, has Government identified ...? Perhaps I have not seen it. Have they shared with the public where this memorial will be?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I believe we have.

1150 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Can I ask him to repeat this information here?

Hon. Chief Minister: Not with any certainty, because I do not think I have it here, but I think there has been an announcement of which the successful design has been. Yes, in fact I do have it here, Mr Speaker. It is a press release of 16 June last year: Press Release 415/2022.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, is the Chief Minister telling us that if the design of the works is finished within the next six weeks, there will be a memorial ceremony and this will be taking place in the next couple of months, for example?

1160 Hon. Chief Minister: Yes.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q323/2023
COVID inquiry –
Details

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: When will the Government inquiry into the handling of the COVID crisis take place, and does Government have a structure prepared for who and how it will be run?

1165

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, final arrangements are being made for this important inquiry to be convened. The Government has an eye on the UK inquiry, to deliver the best inquiry for Gibraltar, to learn the lessons of this pandemic before the inevitable next one, although I sincerely hope it will not come for many decades and generations.

1170

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you, Mr Speaker, and I thank the Member for the answer. Will that mean that he is looking at holding this inquiry into our next legislature regardless of who wins the next election? His sights are on the next term of office when this will be taking place?

1175

Hon. Chief Minister: I do not know what the hon. Lady is implying in her answer. The Government will convene the inquiry. It is my view that that inquiry will be convened during the lifetime of this Parliament. The inquiry will run for a considerable period of time. Inquiries are not in any way linked to the lifetimes of parliaments. It could run for the lifetime of two parliaments, it could run for a quarter of the lifetime of a parliament, but it is very likely that the inquiry will run through from the lifetime of this Parliament to another Parliament.

1180

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I was asking because if the Chief Minister was saying that he was waiting on certain information or things to be in place before holding the inquiry – and there are, I think, objectively, a maximum of six or seven months left of this legislature, the lifetime of this Parliament ... That is why I was asking if it was likely to take place in the next legislature.

1185

1190 My question would be whether the Chief Minister is involved or making arrangements and preparing structures for this inquiry in terms of who is going to be running it, so that we can guarantee maximum independence.

1195 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, yes, sir, but given that the election is not going to be called tomorrow, as apparently there is a strong rumour that it would be, there is plenty of time to do it.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q324-27/2023

ID cards –

Number of printers; printers operational on 7th March 2023; days when printers not operational in 2022-23; current waiting time

Clerk: Question 324/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

1200 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: How many ID card printers does the Government possess?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1205 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I will answer with Questions 325 to 327.

Clerk: Question 325/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

1210 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: How many ID card printers were operational and fully functioning on 7th March 2023?

Clerk: Question 326/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

1215 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Please list the number of working days on which the Government ID card printers have not been operational in 2022 and 2023?

Clerk: Question 327/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

1220 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What is the current waiting time for an ID card?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1225 Hon. Chief Minister: HMGoG possesses three printers with the ability to print electronic ID and civilian registration cards. Two of these are located at the Civil Status and Registration Office and one at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Department.

All printers were fully functional on 7th March 2023.

The electronic card printers at the CSRO have not been operational during the following dates:
from 13th October to 19th October 2022 inclusive, and from 30th January to 28th February 2023 inclusive.

1230 The current average waiting time for an identity card is 10 working days, and 25 working days for a civilian registration card.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q328-29/2023

Public sector workers –

Cost of living adjustment to salaries; heads of department salary increases

Clerk: Question 328/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

1235 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: When is the Government expected to review its policy on granting civil servants a cost of living adjustment to their salaries, given that the cost of living has increased dramatically in the last four years?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1240

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): I will answer with Question 329.

Clerk: Question 329/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

1245 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Can Government provide a list, within the last four years, of Civil Service, public service and government-owned company heads of department who have received a salary increase, with a breakdown of each individual post, the original salary and their salary after the increase?

1250

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, as the hon. Lady should know, any announcement related to the Government's recurrent expenditure will be made at the debate on the Appropriation Bill later this year. This allows for the Government to properly cost and plan for the next 12 months having had sight of its revenue and expenditure for the past financial year, which ends later this month. The Government has created a forum with all of Gibraltar's public sector unions to consider these issues with the representatives of our colleagues in the public sector.

1255 All civil servants, public servants and government-owned company heads of department received a salary increase on 1st August 2019 in line with the IRP, which was the last relevant date before the pandemic plunged us into deficit from the previous historic surpluses we had achieved. In addition, over the last four years any officer who was not on the maximum of their pay scale has also received the applicable annual increase until they have reached the maximum scale. The salary increases any individual officer might have enjoyed in the past four years are reflected in the Estimates Book and are therefore available to the hon Lady.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, if I ask a question and I ask Government to provide a list for this House and the Government does not, or points me somewhere else, is that all right?

1270 Hon. Chief Minister: What I have said is that the information she has asked for is public. It is not that I am not providing the list, it is that she has the list. She has it in her Estimates Book. If she goes to one Estimates Book she sees the list of every single public officer, and if she goes to the next one she sees the same list, and every single one of those salaries increased. What she has asked me for is to pull out the pages at the back of the Book and give them to her. I have my Book, she has hers.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

1280 In relation to the hon. Lady's Question 328, I think I heard the Chief Minister refer to the creation of a forum with the trade unions. I believe Unite announced this on 13th March and described it as a recent breakthrough, with the Government committing to engage with the unions via an employer/trade union public sector negotiating forum. Can the Chief Minister provide more information to the House as to the remit for this forum? And how long does he expect it to be in existence for?

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, what I have said about this forum is that it is a forum to hear the union's views in respect of public sector pay in years when we are expecting to be in deficit. In years when we have been in surplus, the unions have been very happy to come and see me. They have asked me for a 2% pay rise. I have said I hear what they say, I have come to the House and I have given them a 3% pay rise. They have walked out of the House very happy and everybody has been very happy because there is a surplus.

1290

If there is a surplus, we must ensure that we share that surplus with working people, whether we do it through increases in the Minimum Wage – because we also pay people the Minimum Wage – or we do it through increases in the salaries of those in the public sector, or other benefits that we provide more widely in the community, but when we are in deficit ... I accept that the unions want to be able to influence the Government's decisions in respect of public sector pay and therefore they want a negotiation rather than just a discussion, so I am committed to having this forum for the period when Gibraltar is in deficit, and I am very happy to start that process of talking to the public sector unions this year.

1295

1300

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q330/2023

Morrisons pay dispute – Discussions held

Clerk: Question 330/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

1305

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: What discussions, if any, have there been between the Government, Morrisons and Unite the Union regarding the current pay dispute?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Chief Minister.

1310

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have written, as Chief Minister of His Majesty's Government of Gibraltar, to the parties involved in the current pay dispute between Morrisons and Unite the Union to offer the services of my office, in particular our industrial relations machinery, to assist in finding an appropriate solution to the dispute. I wrote on 8th February. Unfortunately, we have not been able to assist, but we stand by to help if we are able.

1315

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the Chief Minister for his answer. Is Government able to share with this House any information on what has been discussed or whether he believes that there is any solution coming any time soon?

1320

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the only thing I can share with the hon. Lady is that I have written to both parties, I have offered to help and my offer has not been taken up – but we are third parties to that dispute.

HOUSING, EMPLOYMENT, YOUTH AND SPORT

Q294/2023

Housing waiting list –

Applicants remaining pre-November 2011

Clerk: Question 294/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

1325 Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, of those individuals who were on the housing waiting list in November 2011, how many are still on the housing waiting list today and how many are divorced or separated fathers waiting for a one-bedroom flat?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

1330 Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, 76 applicants on the housing waiting list with an application dated pre-November 2011 remain on the list. Many may have been offered allocations they have refused. As far as the Ministry for Housing is aware, from the information available about each applicant, none are divorced or separated fathers waiting for a one-bedroom flat.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, he said that many have been offered and refused. How many is 'many'?

1340 Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, I have not got the exact number of how many is 'many', but I would suggest it is near the 76.

1345 Hon. D A Feetham: He is responsible, obviously, for the accuracy of answers he provides to this House. May I drill down on that answer that it is close to 76? Has he seen any statistics that would allow him to come to this House and answer the question that I have posed, using the using the word 'many'?

1350 Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, quite frankly, this is extra information that I gave him from the question. He had not specifically asked that question, and therefore the official has put that many may have been offered allocations they have refused. I could go back and ask specifically that question, which he has not done.

1355 Hon. D A Feetham: Yes, I would like him, if I may, Mr Speaker – I would like the Minister; I apologise – to provide me with that information. I have to say that I am surprised that the Minister, when he saw the answer, which referred to 'many', did not ask the question. I have sat on that side of the House and it is a natural question to ask the public servants: how many is 'many'? But yes, I would appreciate it, Mr Speaker. He is absolutely certain that none of the 76 are divorced or separated fathers? He has asked about that and he is absolutely certain about that?

1360 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): No, Mr Speaker, what the answer says is from the information available in their filed application. It is impossible for us otherwise to know, and that is why it is prefaced with those words.

1365 Hon. D A Feetham: So in actual fact, the answer is that it is really impossible for the Minister, on the information that the Minister has, to provide any answer to that question because he just really does not have the information. That ought to be the answer.

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, the answer is what the answer is, that from the information available about each applicant none of them are divorced or separated fathers waiting for a one-bedroom flat. If they were, that should be on the application because one of the things that you are asked is about your family composition, your marital status etc. The information that we have about these people suggests that they are not, because they have filled in those things contrary to the information that they should have provided to suggest it. So we do have information about the status, and from that information none of them appear to be, but they could, since filling in the form, have got married, got divorced and now want a one-bedroom for that reason, for all we know. That is why we cannot give more certainty and we have to ensure that we provide it in this way, so that what we are saying to the House is entirely correct.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, the reason why I am asking this question is because I know of several individuals who are on the housing waiting list for a one-bedroom flat, who have been on the housing waiting list going back to 2011 and still have not have not been allocated a flat.

I will pose my question in a moment, but the reason why I am asking is because I have asked in the past, and the point that I have made in the past is that actually divorced fathers do really get a very raw deal in a variety of ways, this being one of them, because invariably they are the ones who have to leave the matrimonial home. Let's assume that it is a government rental, for example. When they try to get onto the housing waiting list, they are told, 'You are only entitled to a one-bedroom flat,' even though they may have, for example, three or four children. This is a government policy going back to the GSD years. I never agreed with it, I have to say, but I could never persuade anybody to change policy in this regard. The argument is why should a child have two rooms, one with the father and one with the mother? The problem, of course, is that you end up, as a father, not being able to have meaningful overnights. (Interjection) I am going to ask a question. I am just explaining, so that I can – (Interjections)

Mr Speaker: Chief Minister, I allowed the Hon. Daniel Feetham to make a short preamble. I am allowing him to do that.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, thank you very much. It is my only question because, as he knows, I have agreed to take other questions in writing.

They get a raw deal, and some of them have been on the waiting list since 2011. If I provide to the Minister the details of the individuals in question, will he at least look at these individual cases to see whether something can be done about them? They really are, in my view, getting a raw deal.

Hon. S E Linares: Firstly, Mr Speaker, I do not agree with the premise of the hon. Member's assertion that we do not help divorced or separated parents – or fathers – because sometimes it is also mothers, not only fathers. But we have helped loads of them.

I am assuming that of the 76 on whom I am getting information, because this is the question ... He is saying it is before 2011 because those are the ones who are probably more pressing. I do appreciate that he does give me a list of those, so that we can look into what the issues are, and I am sure we probably have already, but we are willing to explore that. I do not have an issue with that. But we do help parents and we have to look at exactly what the fathers' rights are in relation to the children as well, because some fathers claim, 'I want to have my children with me' – and I can tell the hon. Gentleman that some of the children are 26 and 28 years old – because they still think that it is their children. Of course they are their children until they die, but the point is that, at times, divorced fathers and mothers want to have their 'children' – and I say children in inverted commas because a person ceases to be a child at a certain age ... they want to live with their children. That means the son or the daughter can go and sleep in their house.

Also, there are many divorced fathers who we have looked at and analysed, who do not have court jurisdiction for their children, and they have to obtain that. And we have done that many 1420 times, where they go to court, they say, 'Who has custody of the children? Is it 50/50? Is the father able to see the children because of certain things that have happened during the family composition?' We look at all that. That is important because if the father comes and says, 'I have 1425 been a good father. I married and divorced and I want my children to stay with me and they are young,' usually we do try to accommodate that father as best we can. We might not be able to give them, say, a three-bedroom flat where they have one room for each child. We might be able to give them a lower composition, but we definitely do, and I can honestly ... For me, the most important people here are not the divorced mothers or fathers, it is the children. That is the concern, and I can honestly say that whenever ... With everything that I look at, it is always what 1430 are the consequences to the children, and that is what I prioritise. For me, it is not the divorced father, it is the children of those divorced fathers.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q295/2023
Government housing estates –
Rules for tenants

Clerk: Question 295/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

1435 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, does the Government intend to rationalise the rules for tenants in the various government housing estates?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Industrial Relations, Employment, Housing and Sport.

1440 Minister for Housing, Employment, Youth and Sport (Hon. S E Linares): Mr Speaker, no, sir.

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker – (Interjection)

Hon. S E Linares: Apologies – it is yes, sir! (Laughter)

1445 Hon. K Azopardi: Well, I am glad that we got a U-turn after three seconds.

Mr Speaker, I can I just ask is the rationalisation in the context of the review of the Housing Act that that the Hon. Minister has been speaking about on previous occasions? And is the rationalisation to the extent that the aim and objective would be that each housing estate should have a common set of rules?

1450 Hon. S E Linares: Yes, Mr Speaker, it is a combination of being in the Housing Act and also on each individual tenancy agreement, which will be a general tenancy agreement for all households in the government stock. So it will not be different from one estate to the other, everybody will get the same, which is the agreement that we are writing out, and that will be reflected within the 1455 Housing Act and will be reflected in the tenancy agreement.

Hon. K Azopardi: And does the Minister have any kind of idea of the kind of timescale for the rollout of that rationalisation?

1460 Hon. S E Linares: Mr Speaker, I hope I am not bound to, but I am trying to do it even before the summer. But please do not hold me to that because I have been pressing all my staff that we have all the list of things to do with housing to be ready. That is the Housing Act, the booklet, the tenancy agreement, the housing allocation scheme, all these to be rolled out. I have said it before:

1465 it is probably rolling out the Act first – I am looking now at putting it maybe just after Easter, the whole of the Housing Act – and then the things later will follow behind, because the Act is the basis on which all the others follow.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

JUSTICE, EQUALITY AND PUBLIC STANDARDS AND REGULATIONS

Q256/2023

Parental alienation –
Update on Government plans

Clerk: Question 256/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

1470

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, can the Government please update the House on its plans to tackle parental alienation?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards.

1475

1480

Hon. D A Feetham: Has the drafting of new legislation commenced yet?

1485

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, the drafting itself has not commenced. We have, however, had a lot of stakeholders who are involved in the whole process involved in working together to advise me on the exact changes we need to make, because really the outcome that I want will probably be better than the initial outcome I sought when I started the consultation process on this. That, in fact, is the beauty of consultation when it is done properly. We had feedback from almost 50 individuals on the parental alienation exercise. I myself, I think, saw about 35 of these, and after having spent probably between half an hour and an hour with each of these individuals and hearing their stories, by the end of that process when we started looking at what we needed to do, we came to the conclusion that to make it better, our changes needed to go beyond this point and be wider reaching. That itself will entail a lot more work and therefore it will take longer than we envisaged when we set out, but hopefully we will have a much better product and a much better outcome at the end.

1490

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, when the hon. Lady talks about a wider remit, can she inform the House as to what issues are contained in that wider remit?

1500

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, parental alienation is one of the matters that is contained in the Children Act. It pretty much arises upon the breakdown of a family relationship. So the focus that I have is on trying to streamline and better enhance and improve the process for marital breakdown. This is in the context of a wider review of the Children Act, which goes beyond family breakdown. The Children Act, as the hon. Gentleman will know, has different parts to it and 1510 it deals with private law and public law, so we are looking at this piece of legislation to see how we can bring it up to date. It has been a considerable period since this was passed. Things have changed, family dynamics are changing, and I want to bring it in line to reflect more the modern situation that we find ourselves in, which unfortunately is, each time, more and more complex.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I am just not clear. I can understand that there might be merit and that the Minister might want to update the Children Act because that may be a worthwhile task in itself. It was a good piece of legislation when I introduced it, I have to say in our defence, 1515 but I can understand that –

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: I was not –

Hon. D A Feetham: No, and I know that it is not a criticism. I am just not clear why the 1520 consultation process would have given rise to issues that are associated with parental alienation that causes a delay in attempting to deal with parental alienation as a, as she has described it, net issue.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, for the avoidance of doubt, this was not a criticism of 1525 the Children Act, which I know the hon. Gentleman worked very hard on in his time as the Minister for Justice. But this piece of legislation is 2009 legislation, so a considerable time has passed and family dynamics have changed.

To answer the latest supplementary from the hon. Gentleman, what transpired and what became apparent to us as part of the consultation process was that a lot of people came to see us 1530 at the invitation of people coming to see us for parental alienation, but a lot of the complaints that they had, once we had spoken to them, were not actually of parental alienation. Parental alienation is very specifically defined in law and parental alienation will only crystallise when children stop seeing the other parent. What we found, and it was predominantly from fathers but not exclusively, was that they were not seeing their children as much as they wanted to see them. 1535 So, whereas we started off with one intention, by the time we finished, really the picture that we got was a different one. There was a constant trend that people found the procedure difficult to manage and people's expectations at the end of the procedure were difficult to manage.

What we want to do is have a more formulaic system of dealing with the situation of family breakdown, so that it becomes easier on the parties. The aspiration, of course, is that if it is easier 1540 for the parties and it becomes less acrimonious, then it will have a better outcome for the children, because ultimately the fundamental basis of the Children Act is that the welfare of the child be paramount. I know that the hon. Gentleman attempted this when the Children Act was commenced in 2009 and the hon. Gentleman produced some booklets as guidelines. We have, in fact, spoken about this across the floor of this House in previous questions that the hon. 1545 Gentleman has posed to me. Whereas I think back in 2009-10, when that was certainly a good intention on the part of the hon. Gentleman, it was not really something that took off, so I want to deal with it with the same intention but in a different way, and probably by way of secondary legislation so that the framework and the parameters are, in reality, more effective, and particularly in the context of where we find ourselves with an increasing number of marital 1550 breakdowns. So the whole intention is to make the whole process much better for all the parties involved and more streamlined.

Hon. D A Feetham: Could the hon. Lady perhaps inform this House as to how close we are to a white paper, for example, on new legislation? 1555

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, realistically, I cannot see us having a draft ready for this for a number of months, at least – I would say two months, three months. I think my last meeting on this may have been last week or the week before, before the question was posed.

1560 Because it is so far reaching, I want to make sure that I have all the stakeholders involved. If we are going to make all these changes, and they will end up being quite big and quite significant, I need to make sure that I hear from all the parties.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Elliot Phillips.

1565 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful. It will be very short. The Minister will know that, like the hon. Gentleman to the left of me, I have been a passionate advocate, as she has as well, insofar as parental alienation, and she will know, of course, that two months after I was first elected to this House in 2016, I attempted to promote the issue of parental alienation and training for our judiciary, family lawyers and, indeed, Social Services. Can the Minister confirm that that 1570 training has now been conducted? Principally, the best way of dealing with parental alienation is dealing with that behaviour at the very beginning, to drive it out, because it can be a toxic development in the relationship of children with their parents.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, save for the point I made earlier, which is that what 1575 we found when we spoke to people who came for part of the consultation process ... We found that the issue was actually not parental alienation. People perceive not having 50% contact with children once they separate as parental alienation, but that is not parental alienation. This is the advice that I get from social workers. Social workers, by virtue of their profession, are trained in this. There has not been additional training for the judiciary on this because, actually, parental 1580 alienation is not an issue that has arisen. It is more of a perceived issue of parental alienation than an actual situation of parental alienation as defined in the law.

I am happy to give the hon. Gentleman a more specific breakdown and we can look at the legislation on that on another occasion, because it is more of a technical discussion that we need to have.

1585 Mr Speaker, I have dealt with all the questions this afternoon.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

DIGITAL, FINANCIAL SERVICES, HEALTH AUTHORITY AND PUBLIC UTILITIES

Q296/2023 Semaglutide – GHA prescribing

Clerk: Question 296/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1590 Hon. E J Phillips: I welcome the Hon. Minister back home.
Mr Speaker, can the Government state whether the GHA is prescribing the weight-loss drug semaglutide?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

1595 Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola):
Yes, Mr Speaker, I am informed by the GHA that it is prescribing semaglutide. It is prescribed in line with current NICE guidelines for its use. These will be reviewed as and when appropriate.

1600 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for the answer. Just one additional question that arises from that. There have been some concerns post the approval of this drug in the United Kingdom, given the significant implications for muscle wastage as a result of taking the weight-loss medication. Can the Minister explain whether or not this particular drug is also used in the context of type 2 diabetes, for which I understand it is being used and licensed in other countries?

1605

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, yes, primarily. If I can give him more information, there are currently some eight patients being prescribed this medication, five of them are for diabetes and three are for weight loss, so it is a very small number and there is clearly no abuse of that nature.

Cancelled and rescheduled operations in last 12 months

Clerk: Question 297/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1610

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state the number of cancelled or rescheduled operations in the GHA in the last 12 months?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

1615

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, there have been a total of 1,670 cancellations between March 2022 and February 2023. All cancelled procedures are rescheduled as soon as possible unless there are reasons to not reschedule. For example, a patient may choose not to go through with the procedure or a patient may be not deemed medically fit to go through with that procedure.

1620

The reasons are as follows: patient unwilling to proceed, 686, which is 41%, so a very big chunk of the 1,670 are actually patients not wanting to proceed and there may be a whole series of reasons for that – it may not just be that they do not want to, there may be a good reason; operational, 396, which is 24%; no longer required, 325, which is 19% – so that is 60% that are patient or no longer required; patient not fit for surgery, 175, which is 10%; and COVID-19, 88, which is 5%. In terms of the GHA, it is 24% of those numbers that are cancelled operations.

1625

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for that answer, and actually these types of very helpful statistics dispel many of the rumours in our community. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for providing the detailed breakdown that he obliged us with just now.

1630

Just in relation to the percentages, does he have any visibility on previous years and how they correspond to this particular year that he has referred to?

Hon. A J Isola: No, Mr Speaker, I do not, but obviously the difficulty with comparing the last couple of years with COVID is that it would be completely unusual to compare to such an exceptional couple of years. To do a fair comparison it would have to be pre-COVID, and I have not got those numbers with me.

1635

What I can tell the hon. Member by way of further information that I have available to me is cancellations on the same day are 30.84%, so almost 31%, and within seven days are 29.54%. So it is 60% cancelled seven days before, which causes big problems for the hospital in terms of the use that could have been made of those facilities did they have time.

1640

Obviously when I talk about operational reasons, some of those could be, for example, that there are emergencies that require to take precedence over planned operations. So there are a whole load of reasons as to why operations are cancelled, but the largest chunk by far is patient decision.

1645

1650 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, one final question. Of course you can understand why the GHA might have operational reasons for cancelling or rescheduling appointments, but insofar as that very large chunk of patients not willing to proceed, what measures are the Government taking to try to avoid that happening? The disruption must be very significant on resources at the GHA, and as I said before, I think these are very useful data points to explain to the public the importance of keeping their appointments. There may be reasons why they do not want to have the operation, there may be many reasons for that, but what other steps are the GHA taking to avoid that scenario, which wastes our resources in that way?

1655 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, it is a very difficult one. Obviously, the GHA cannot force people to turn up for an operation they do not want to have. As I said before, there may be some very good reasons as to why people wish to cancel the operation at a particular given time. I think, for us, the hardest thing the GHA have to cope with is the lack of notice when preparations are made, goods are ordered. Parts may be needed, if I can call them that, which are ordered in advance and everything is prepared for a given day, and then it has to be pulled seven days before in 60% of those cancellations. It is difficult.

1660 I think the GHA takes every precaution to ensure that people are ready. I know one particular individual who would come under patient not fit for surgery, and that is not the patient's choice. Something may have happened to them – maybe too much weight to risk, or other conditions that have arisen between the operation being placed and the operation happening.

1665 Like a lot of the things we talk about when it comes to the GHA, it is very difficult to look at these as pure numbers, because every single number has a story that is different to the other. And so I always urge caution, not inferring things which are well intentioned but could be very misleading in how we interpret some of these numbers.

1670 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q298/2023
GHA –
Number of sponsored patients

Clerk: Question 298/2023. The Hon. E J Phillips.

1675 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, can the Government state the number of sponsored patients broken down to medical issue or discipline?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

1680 Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I now hand over a schedule to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Answer to Question 298/2023

Allergy	1
Cardiology	214
Colorectal	63
Dental	8
Dermatology	7
Endocrinology and on call medicine	30
ENT	155
Gastroenterology and on call medicine	45
General and On-call Medicine	1
General Surgery	156
Geriatric and On-call Medicine	61
Gynaecology	84
Haematology	39
Maxillofacial	9
Nephrology and on call medicine	35
Nephrostomy / Thoracoscopy	3
Neurology	69
Oncology	38
Ophthalmology	110
Orthopaedics	119
Paediatrics	213
Pain Clinic	15
Psychiatry	7
Radiotherapy	2
Respiratory and On-call Medicine	79
Spinal	78
Transgender Surgery	2
Urology	74
Vascular	81

1685 Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we will obviously digest these numbers, but does the Minister express a view in relation to paediatrics? That seems fairly significantly high in the context of all of these numbers. I would say that in the context of all the glowing reports that I receive from many constituents about paediatrics generally, given the team that we have there. I wonder, has he got a view as to why they are so high in relation to sponsored patients outside of Gibraltar for paediatric care?

1690 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, no, I do not, but I will happily get that information to the hon. Member before the next sitting, if there is in fact any reason or if it is disproportionately high or higher than it should be. I am not aware of it, but I will certainly come back to him.

Obviously these are for both the UK and Spain, so there may be some tertiary centres in Spain that we send children to who need help and the expertise is available across the way. But I will get that information over to my hon. Friend.

1695 Hon. E J Phillips: And insofar as cardiology is concerned, just one question in relation to that. The Government has made very recent announcements in relation to a partnership – loosely I characterise it as that; I am sure he will correct me if I am wrong insofar as that characterisation is concerned, but that is clearly intended to drive down that number where we send people abroad so that they can be treated at home. Is that right?

1700 Hon. A J Isola: Yes, it is, Mr Speaker. We believe that will make the experience far better for patients. The access will be far quicker available to people in time – it is an issue in cardiology – and we hope to be able to reduce the numbers of sponsored patients we have significantly by having these services available here in St Bernard’s.

1705 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can I just ask, in terms of transgender surgery, what protocol is the GHA operating when it considers these issues? Is there a specific protocol criteria being drawn up with the clinicians involved? Does it involve input from across specialities when these services are being offered? Does the Minister have information on that?

1710 Hon. A J Isola: Yes, Mr Speaker. There is a tertiary referrals board that considers every single application for clinical assistance outside Gibraltar, and they are the ones, on clinical grounds only, who make a recommendation as to whether a patient should be referred for any of the specialities that are listed on the schedule. That tertiary referral board can be large. It is multidisciplinary, so it covers every single area – and it changes too – of the Hospital. So yes, it is a purely clinical decision.

1715 Hon. K Azopardi: I appreciate it is a purely clinical decision; I was not suggesting otherwise. I was trying to probe into whether there was a specific protocol in these areas – we are all aware of the debate going on in other jurisdictions about the availability of services in this very delicate area – and whether there are age issues involved and so on, in terms of the patient. I am just asking whether the GHA specifically operates a particular protocol in these areas. Is it something that is being debated within the GHA, or not? Is the Minister aware of the age of the particular patients, for example?

1725 Hon. A J Isola: No, Mr Speaker, I am not, but I am happy to get that information and let the hon. Member have it.

1730 Hon. K Azopardi: Is the Minister aware whether beyond there being a tertiary board there is a specific clinical protocol being adopted in these cases? That is what I am asking. (Interjection) Yes.

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I am not aware, but I will find out from the GHA what that is and how that operates and let the hon. Member have that information.

1735 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q299/2023
Removal from FATF grey list –
Update

Clerk: Question 299/2023. The Hon. R M Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, can the Government provide an update on the removal of Gibraltar from the FATF grey list?

1740 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola):
Mr Speaker, the answer to the question is in the Government Press Release 100/2023 dated 24th February 2023. This explains that only one action point of the original two remains outstanding, being that relating to the pursuit of more financial confiscation judgments and that a further report will be made to the FATF Review Group in May of this year ahead of the FATF June plenary.

1745 Those are the facts. I am happy to speak behind the Speaker's Chair and perhaps give some more detail, but I think that is what I should limit myself to here.

1750

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q300/2023
St Michael's Cave –
Water delivery issue

Clerk: Question 300/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

1755 Hon. D J Bossino: When will the issues impacting on the delivery of water by the St Michael's Cave site be resolved?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

1760 Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola):
Mr Speaker, the St Michael's Cave area is provided potable water by the Ministry of Defence network in the Upper Rock and salt water by the AquaGib network. AquaGib is not aware of any salt water issues and currently has no network in the area to be able to provide potable water to St Michael's Cave. I am also informed by AquaGib that they have received no live customer reports of any issues in the area.

1770 Hon. D J Bossino: As far as the first limb of his reply is concerned, I am aware that the potable water provision is conducted by the MoD whilst the salt water is provided by AquaGib. But as far as the second one is concerned, that is not the information that I have been receiving. I am told that it is an embarrassment when visitors to that particular site face this issue. His reply is what it is. He is saying that whoever has prepared the reply for him – I imagine it is AquaGib – has told him that there are not any issues, but I would ask him, please, to fact check that a bit further. There is no reason to doubt that the information that I have received is correct, which is that it is an issue and it is a cause of embarrassment because people who visit the area are having to use the facilities that the only business that is there is able to provide in order to alleviate the issue.

1775 It is quite an embarrassment as far as Gibraltar PLC is concerned, so I would ask him whether he would consider looking at that a bit further and trying to resolve it. I am appreciative of the fact that this is an MoD responsibility, but I think the MoD needs to be spoken to.

1780 Hon. A J Isola: The hon. Member has just thrown me by the last bit. Is he telling me that there are complaints in respect of salt water and potable water?

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, as I understand it, it is the MoD that provides potable water – yes? – and the complaints relate to potable water only. (Interjection) No, I understand it is potable water.

1785 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, therefore the information I have given him is correct, that AquaGib is not aware of any live customer reports of any issues in the area. (Hon. D J Bossino: Okay.) Okay. So the information that I have been given is correct.

1790 I am not aware of any issues in respect of potable water. I would ask the hon. Member to ask the individuals concerned to write to me and I will certainly take it up with the MoD myself. I am not aware of those issues. Nobody has corresponded with my office or indeed with AquaGib, who are not aware either, in respect of the potable water issue. If they would write to me and give me the details, I would be very happy to press that with the MoD.

1795 Hon. D J Bossino: And indeed, Mr Speaker, it may very well be that I am the one who needs to do a bit of fact checking. I will do so. Once I have clarified that the position as I have explained it to him across the floor of the House is correct, I will write to him and present to him the relevant facts.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q301/2023
St Bernard's Hospital –
Redesign of reception area

1800 Clerk: Question 301/2023. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, are there plans to redesign the reception area at St Bernard's Hospital; and, if so, how?

1805 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, I can confirm that the GHA has plans to redesign the reception area at the entrance to St Bernard's Hospital. These plans are at the inception stage.

1810 Hon. K Azopardi: I see. Can the Minister give us a bit of an idea of the nature of those works?

1815 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, not at this stage. As I said, they are at inception stage. They have not yet been considered by Cabinet, and in anticipation of that I would not like to give any more details which may subsequently prove to be inaccurate.

1820 Hon. K Azopardi: Presumably the same would apply if I asked about costs and things like that. There is no idea on that until there is approval. Is that correct? And when he says it has not been discussed by Cabinet, is it the intention that it should be discussed so as to form part of the forthcoming Budget? Or has that boat been missed, so it would not be for the 2023-24 Budget?

1825 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I think to talk about cost is just ... We have very approximate costs which are pre-costing costs, if I can say that, which I could not possibly give because that would just be commercially daft. I think all I can say is that at the time that an announcement is made – if it is approved, because I do not know if it is going to be approved by my colleagues – it will become clear as to why this is yet to be ... We cannot say anything at this stage. It will become more apparent once we have some sort of approval from Cabinet to go forward and make a public announcement in respect of what the ideas are, both in respect of funding and in respect of what is proposed.

1830 Hon. K Azopardi: Is the Minister able to say why this is even necessary even at the inception stage? It is a fairly modern building. You have the health centre next door. It seems to have a usable reception. What is the underlying reason why you would want to redesign the reception area?

1835 Hon. A J Isola: I think if the plans were made public, it would answer all of those questions. There are good reasons. It is not just aesthetic. There are good reasons which have been looked into by the GHA in respect of the better management of the estate, the better use of space within the estate. As you know, we have different rooms all over the Hospital that are waiting rooms. It would be far easier to centralise within one area and make better use of space. So it is about space and providing a single point of entry into the facility, which I think will work very well.

1840

Hon. K Azopardi: I am not going to probe the hon. Member too much if he is not ready, but it was suggested to me when the rumourology ... as these things trickle down to the Members on this side, that ... I went for a check-up today at the Hospital. Every place has its own little waiting areas and administration. You check in at different counters, on different floors and so on. Is this an idea for there to be one waiting room, one entry point only, a mega one, and then you would do away with all these other facilities? And if so, is the conceptual discussion involving whether that is going to have an impact on staff?

1845

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, no. I think we are running a bit too fast to talk about those things before any form of determination is made. I have no doubt that there will be some areas that will need less space as a result of the new entrance and the new facilities being put there, but I think to go into any more than that at this stage – it is purely a conceptual stage – would be a mistake, so if the hon. Member does not mind, I will defer from doing that.

1850

1855 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q302/2023
GHA restructuring –
Update

Clerk: Question 302/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

1860 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: The Director General announced a new restructure as part of the GHA's Reset, Restart and Recover initiative. Following the new Medical Director and Deputy Medical Director appointments, have we got any updates on the restructuring of the organisation?

1865 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, the restructure of the organisation is ongoing. The consultation phase of how the organisation will be set up moving forward will concentrate on strengthening clinical focus across the diverse range of services it provides and tighter financial and managerial accountability.

1870 The above is being progressed by the current Director General and further updates will be provided when the GHA is in a position to do so.

1875 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, can the Minister tell us whether it is true that the clinical nurse managers will be abolished, adding a layer of management while these individuals are effectively demoted after 10 years and more of service from some of them?

1880 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, no, sir. Obviously, as I have just said, the restructure of the organisation is ongoing. As and when we are in a position to be able to publish that strategy, which will include, by the way ... obviously when the new Director General is appointed and he has had an opportunity to have some input into the proposed strategy. So the answer to the hon. Lady's question is no.

1885 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, these consultations and discussions, are they being based on any particular model that the GHA might be following?

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the only model being followed is what the experts are advising us should be happening at the Hospital.

1890 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, when the Minister says 'experts', can he give us any more details on who these experts might be?

Hon. A J Isola: The GHA senior management team, Mr Speaker.

Q300/2023

St Michael's Cave water delivery issue – Supplementary question

1895 Mr Speaker: Would the Hon. Minister be prepared to take a supplementary to Question 300 from the Hon. Damian Bossino? He has further information about the matter of delivery of water to St Michael's Cave.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Yes.

1900 Mr Speaker: Please proceed.

1905 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, simply to tell him that I have fact checked what I related to him across the floor of the House a few minutes ago, and that the position is that (1) there are huge issues in relation to potable water, which we understand is an MoD responsibility; (2) AquaGib provides a bowser and takes it all the way up there to try to alleviate the issue – the individual who provided him with the answer should have been aware of that; and (3) Mr Cortes, presumably under the guise of a different responsibility, has had meetings with the business in the area, aware of the issue, and I understand that the issue is that the MoD piping is rather antiquated and the Government is doing what it can to resolve that issue.

1910 I would ask him, please, to confirm what I am telling him. As I said earlier, it is a huge embarrassment.

1915 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I thank him for that. Clearly, I stand by what I said earlier, that I have not been aware of any of these issues, but if the hon. Member's contact person who is at the receiving end of that suffering writes to me or writes via the hon. Member, I would be very happy to take it up with MoD.

1920 The fact that AquaGib have been supporting by providing bowsers from time to time as a way of support should be welcomed and I am grateful to them for having done that, but they have no responsibility for that, so I would not expect them to have reported that to me. In any event, as far as they are concerned, in respect of the areas that they provide, which is the salt water, they have had no issues at all, and obviously the hon. Member has just confirmed that.

Thank you.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q303/2023
Cost of HRT to the consumer –
GHA policy

1925 Clerk: Question 303/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Is the GHA looking to review its policy on HRT prescription medication costs to the consumer?

1930 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, the GHA does not have a HRT policy, but it has prescriber guidelines set out in the GHA formulary policy. There are no plans currently to review this.

1935

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I might have to declare a potential interest here, but on to the issue – in Gibraltar, it is capped, from my understanding, at £15 monthly for a series of three medications, which is the typical amount that is taken, two to three, and in the UK it is capped at £20 per year. So you can see the difference. Practically what we are paying monthly is what we would pay yearly in the UK. Considering that it is an essential treatment and that in the UK the government is cutting the cost of treatment – and we do often aspire to the UK system for so many of our of our policies, and in these departments especially – would the Minister be willing to take some advice or launch a consultation on this? Would he welcome any correspondence from me that might furnish him with more information to perhaps persuade him to consider this a viable new policy for the GHA and for our women in menopause?

1945

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I am always happy to receive correspondence from the hon. Lady and whatever she sends will be considered and discussed with the senior management team at the GHA.

1950

Every prescription is clinically given. It is not that the prescriptions that everyone else gets are by choice and these are not. So I think the comparison, for me, becomes difficult, but I am very happy to consider whatever representations the hon. Lady makes and to look at them carefully.

I would say that in the United Kingdom, from the information I have, the cost for two single prescriptions is currently £18.70, and that is just for two, so I do not understand where the 12-month cost of £20 comes from, but I am happy to look at it. I do not have enough detail in front of me to be able to have a discussion, so I am very happy to receive correspondence from the hon. Lady and look at it further.

1955

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Thank you, Mr Speaker. If I may – just a short comment, not a question – just thank the Minister. I will be writing to him because my information is that it is capped at £20 per year and the disparity between that and the £15 per month in Gibraltar is quite stark. I thank him again and I will be writing to him to discuss this further.

1960

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q304/2023
Individuals with complex needs –
Continuity of care

1965 Clerk: Question 304/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: How does the Health Minister justify the chopping and changing of carers to individuals with very complex needs who depend on the bond, consistency and familiarity that they build with their individual carers over time?

1970

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, the Care Agency ensures continuity of care through implementation of care plans and positive behaviour support plans that form the basis of how all staff should work with each individual. Core staff who have established a bond with the service user and the gradual introduction of new workers to build the same bond over a period of time allows for resilience in staff teams to ensure there is always cover in the event of an absence by team members. No dependency is developed on any one carer, as this may cause a negative impact on service users in the event that they no longer work for the Care Agency. Measures taken and changes implemented intend to ensure that effective and efficient care is delivered from the existing resources within the services.

1980

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for his answer. There are many individuals who tell stories of how many carers they get in the space of a month, six months or a year, and how that affects their quality of life. In fact, a couple asked me to put this question here in this House because they wanted to understand the answer to this. So could I ask the Minister what he would tell someone with disabilities who feels that they are not getting that consistency and they feel hard done by, lost or a little intimidated by the fact that they do not have the familiarity with a carer because they are going through so many in a short period of time? What would that individual need to do to persuade Government to perhaps change the way that person is receiving their care package?

1985

1990

Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the Government does not design care packages or care plans; obviously the hon. Lady knows the Care Agency does, based on the expertise that they have available. What they are telling us is that it is far better to have a care plan for a service user that allows for continuity of care as opposed to dependency on any one carer, which will cause problems to the user if that carer then moves on to other employment and the service users become dependent on that single carer.

1995

We all want the same thing, which is the best possible care for the user. The question is how do you deliver that, and the view of the Care Agency is that having a proper care plan and having a proper positive behaviour support plan with a variety of people distributing that plan ensures that you get (1) continuity of care and (2) no dependency on any particular one carer, to avoid the precise problems of the cliff edge if one carer then moves on.

2005 I suspect there is no one answer fits all, but as a plan, that certainly seems, to me, to be logical, and from the meetings and discussions I have had with the representatives of the Care Agency and the senior management team, it seems to be working well for the vast majority of users of the service.

2010 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q305/2023
e-Government portal –
Dates and times when offline, and reasons

Clerk: Question 305/2023. The Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Please list the days in 2022 and 2023 that the e-Government portal has been offline, stating the reason for each of the times that the portal was down.

2015

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Health, Digital and Financial Services.

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, throughout 2022 and 2023 the gov.gi portal has suffered a total of 31 technical issues resulting in either portal downtime or limited availability of individual e-services. Some of these failures were rectified during the course of the same working day. ITLD server logs are wiped and rotated every three months due to their large size, and therefore it is not possible to detail the exact times that systems were offline. Steps are always being taken to minimise the likelihood of similar occurrences happening in the future.

2020

2025 I will now hand over a schedule to the hon. Member with the specific days.

Answer to Question 305/2023

Date	Issue	Reason
01/02/2022	Document digital signing service (DocuSign)- Server issues	DocuSign Server failure affecting Gov.gi Employment eServices.

24/01/2023	Portal login issues	Network change impacted delivery of eServices
31/01/2023	Registration errors - Firewall changes	Network change impacted delivery of eServices

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, from the list, which I thank the hon. Member for, I see 22 outages in the space of a year alone, in 2022. How would the Minister respond to this number of mishaps or outages after the amount of money that the e-Government portal has cost us? This is the equivalent of about two a month. Considering the price we have paid for this service, does he think it is okay that we have had so many of these, which obviously set back individuals and businesses who are trying to use the portal?

2035 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, the first thing is when the amount of money being spent is referred to by the hon. Lady, I think you need to understand that the amount of money you spend has got nothing to do with the number of outages you have, or the fact that you have an outage at all. If I can give the hon. Lady some recent examples of Facebook having an outage, Amazon having an outage, British Airways having an outage, Sony having an outage, (A Member: WhatsApp.) British Airways again, WhatsApp, Twitter eight times in one day, Google Search, Amazon Web Services, WhatsApp – my hon. colleague has just referred to that – ASDA, the London Marathon website, 2040 TSB Bank, UK Quarantine Hotel booking site, the National Lottery website.

There is no relevance between the amount of money that you spend in providing any service and outages or hitches, because they happen. Unfortunately, in technology, we all know of banks that have had to stop all trade because of an outage in their systems. So the comparison the hon. Lady is seeking to draw, that you have spent an amount of money, therefore you should not have 2045 an outage, is for the birds. Frankly, if you look at the first tranche of companies I referred the hon. Lady to, you will notice that they all happen to be tech companies – Amazon, Google, WhatsApp, Facebook, Twitter. These are all the super-duper tech companies of the future. They have all had outages and they all spend millions of times more than we do in respect of what they invest in their technology.

2050 No outage should happen – with that comment I agree – and the fewer outages we have, the better for Government and for all of our service users. That is what ITLD is working to do, because obviously all of these outages are system outages, which we need to get better at. I am working closely with ITLD to ensure that we have the minimum number of outages possible. I know that they are putting in a huge amount of effort to ensure that these are happening less and less. So 2055 in February, for example, there were very few outages, if any at all, and in March zero; we are clearly getting better at what we do.

Some of these outages are simply because, as a result of a security patching, we have had to shut the system down, do the different updates, do the upgrades and then open them again. So many of these are not actually failures, they are opportunities for the team to ensure that we are 2060 fully up to date in respect of our security and other software that we need to provide.

So I think there is not the right analogy that the hon. Member has sought to draw, and I think it is a very unfair one to draw on the systems at all.

2065 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for his answer, but I remind him that my job is obviously to test Government and seek accountability for the way that things operate or do not operate in Gibraltar.

Can I just ask him, following on from that, whether he is satisfied generally with the quality and standard of the e-government portal at present and after a huge investment in this?

2070 Hon. A J Isola: Mr Speaker, I am never satisfied because I would have liked to have been far further forward than we are at this time, and that has been my position for a considerable period of time.

Hon. Members frown when we say the word COVID, but COVID was a two-year period during which the programme stopped and the entire workforce shifted to what we called CRS, the 2075 counter reduction services, so that we continued to operate during lockdown, and that happened very effectively and very successfully. And so yes, it is taking longer, but I think there is a two-year hole that we cannot run away from, in which we dealt with counter reduction services.

Would I like to be further forward? Absolutely. Would my colleagues in Cabinet prefer to be further forward? Absolutely. Would the Chief Minister wish I had finished? A hundred per cent, 2080 yes. But that is what we are working towards. We have to face the realities of what we have faced over the past 24 to 36 months, and I am looking forward to delivering more and more as we go forward in the future.

Questions for Written Answer

Clerk: Answers to Written Questions.

2085 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to table the answers to Written Questions submitted by the Hon. Mr Clinton numbered W9/2023 to W14/2023.

Mr Speaker, having made progress in dealing with the questions and it still being 6 p.m., I would propose that, seeking to avoid bringing hon. Members back tomorrow, we now adjourn until quarter past six and continue with the short motion that is on the Agenda and the Bills.

2090 There is one Bill that is on the Agenda, which is the Education Bill. We notice that Mr Reyes is not here. We are very happy to leave it to the next session when Mr Reyes is here, so that he can deal with the issue. It is not time sensitive for us now, it is time sensitive for July.

I move that the House should recess until 6.15.

2095 Mr Speaker: The House will now recess to 6.15.

The House recessed at 6 p.m. and resumed at 6.15 p.m.

Order of the Day

Standing Order 19 suspending to proceed with Government motion

Clerk: (ix) Order of the Day – Government motions. The Hon. the Chief Minister.

2100 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I hereby give notice, under Standing Order 59, to proceed with the suspension of Standing Order 19 in order to proceed with a Government motion.

Mr Speaker: Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

GOVERNMENT MOTION

Code of Conduct for Members of Parliament – Motion carried

Clerk: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

2105 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move the motion standing in my name, which reads as follows:

This House hereby formally RESOLVES to adopt as binding on all current and future members of it the Code of Conduct of Members of Parliament laid on the table by the Chief Minister on Wednesday and as attached hereto; and FURTHER RESOLVES to provide for a review of the said Code on an annual basis.

2110 I put this motion for the reasons that became apparent during the course of my laying on the table both this Code that I refer to in the motion and indeed the other code, the code on ministerial conduct, the Ministerial Code. I note the rules on relevance in debate, so I will not be referring to the Ministerial Code, because that is not the code that is before the House, it is the Code for Members. I said what I intended to say about the Code in my statement on laying these papers on the table.

2115 I would just note that the Code of Conduct for Members of Parliament is literally one page long. It contains six rules – the purpose of the Code, the scope of the Code, the duties of Members, the general principles of conduct, the rules of conduct and the rules relating to upholding the Code – and then attaches, almost as an annexe, the Seven Principles of Public Life, which are the same principles of public life which appear in the Ministerial Code.

2120 The Ministerial Code is a considerably longer document, but this is the document that is before the House, and for all of the reasons that I set out as I laid the paper on the table, and in answer to the questions for clarification that the hon. Members opposite asked me to deal with, I commend the terms of the motion to the House, so that in keeping with the request from hon. Members opposite, the Code now be adopted formally by resolution of the whole House.

2125 Mr Speaker: I now propose the question in the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. the Chief Minister.

The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

2130 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, we are going to support this motion. I just want to explain, very briefly, if I may, and I do so in these terms, because, first of all, I welcome the fact that the motion is here and that the Hon. Chief Minister has presented this motion after that exchange that we had yesterday in relation to the specific ratification of this and adoption by the House.

2135 I just extend my remarks in this way because there was an exchange with the Chair yesterday, where Mr Speaker invited both the Hon. Mr Clinton and the Chief Minister to make comment to you. I am aware that my friend Mr Clinton has delivered a letter to you, which presumably will then find its way to the Chief Minister, so that there is comment on that, and that requests a specific ruling. I just add, if I may, some of my comments, so that when there is a transcription of today's session it also has my comments as to why it is important for this procedure to be adopted, so that Mr Speaker can also consider my remarks in the context of whether or not Mr Speaker decides it is appropriate for there to be a ruling on this issue.

2140 As I said yesterday, the view that I took, and hence the comments that I made yesterday were influenced by considering the Parliament Act and also the constitutional position. Section 36 of the Constitution says:

The Legislature may prescribe the privileges, immunities and powers of the Parliament and its Members, but no such privileges, immunities or powers shall exceed those of the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom or of the members thereof.

Section 39 of the Constitution says:

The Parliament may from time to time make, amend and revoke rules of procedure for the regulation and orderly conduct of its proceedings and the despatch of business, and for the passing, intituling and numbering of bills and for the presentation thereof to the Governor for assent.

2145 Both in terms of the letter of the Constitution and its spirit, it is clear that this House can regulate its procedure and the powers and interests, liabilities and privileges of Members of this House that will impact also on our duties. In doing so, the language of the Constitution very clearly says that the Parliament 'may from time to time make, amend and revoke' or indeed prescribe – it says the legislature may prescribe.

2150 I am influenced also by the fact that the very first line of Standing Orders says that they are Standing Orders adopted by the House pursuant to section 39 of the Constitution, and therefore it seems to me that there needs to be a moment of prescription, a moment that the legislature makes and a decision needs to be taken. Whether it is done by resolution or by motion, I have no 2155 view on that – any of those procedures could be followed – but it is certainly my view that there needs to be a moment of prescription and making. Indeed, the hon. Members, in their manifestos both in 2015 and 2019 in relation to the Ministerial Code, had indicated that there would be approval of a select committee. They did not go as far as to say that there would then be a moment of prescription, but I would suggest that it is necessary. My hon. colleague Mr Clinton did also make reference to that 1979 debate when this House did follow a moment of prescription and making, and I would say that it is necessary for that reason.

2160 That deals with the formalism. I make those remarks because I consider that is important, and I think it is also important from the point of view that ... We all agree on this, on both sides of the House, that there should be a Code of Conduct for Members, that it should be adopted and that there should be a moment when we debate these and, if necessary, we take positions on it.
Happily, I can confirm that as far as the Members of this House I speak for, we are going to vote 2165 in favour of this motion and that this will, therefore, be binding on those terms.

Mr Speaker, I simply repeat what I said yesterday in relation to the content itself. The Hon. the Chief Minister indicated yesterday there were some differences between this Code and the 2015 version. It is not a long document, but it may be that it does require improvement. The Chief Minister indicated yesterday it would be subject to an annual review. I welcome that. It is the first 2170 step. I would not say it is the most conclusive step. There may be work that needs to be done to improve this Code, and certainly we would welcome engagement on that issue. It may be that we need to be much more comprehensive in the effort to codify the rules and what affects Members of this Parliament, but with those initial remarks, and subject to any other remarks that any Member on this side of the House may want to make on this issue, I confirm our support for the 2175 motion.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

2180 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, I also welcome the motion and I echo and stand by the comments that have just been voiced by the Leader of the Opposition.

It is clear that honesty and ethical conduct are things that every public servant should aspire to, so needless to say we should all be welcoming this motion and remember to keep reviewing it and always consider it as a fluid document in order to keep maintaining standards.

I will be voting in favour of this motion.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

2190 First of all, I will, of course, echo the sentiments of the Leader of the Opposition and the hon.
Lady in welcoming that we have this motion before the House and we have the formal process for adopting a Code of Conduct for Members of this House. But, if I may, I would have formed part of the Select Committee on Parliamentary Reform, which would have had sight of the document that was tabled yesterday, and we would have then presumably had a constructive discussion as to the drafting, the content and the thinking behind some of the things that are in the document.

2195 The first point I want to make is that yes, there was a document produced in September 2015, but certainly on the opposition benches, many of us who were elected on 26th November 2015 were not party to the drafting of the original document. It is a self-evident truth that there is quite a significant difference. For example, in terms of the purpose of the Code, it is completely different, the Code of Conduct tabled yesterday, to that which was in the 2015 original Code of 2200 Conduct.

I do note that the Deputy Chief Minister had a hand in updating and redrafting it to bring it into line with the latest UK parliamentary code of conduct for members, but if you obtained a copy of the UK guide – and the one I have is the one approved by the House of Commons on 12th December 2022, which I presume is the one the Deputy Chief Minister was working off – you will see it is a fairly chunky document. It is not four pages long, it is 51 pages long. The reason it is 51 pages long is because although the code of conduct is, in their case, again fairly brief, four or five pages long, there are 50-odd pages of guidance attached to it, interpreting the code of conduct. So there is quite an extensive set of rules and guidance to the rules as to the code of conduct. It is unfortunate that we have not taken the opportunity to include this in the Code of Conduct. I do not know why the Chief Minister is shaking his head, because it seems obvious that – (Hon. Chief Minister: Give way?) Well, I will finish and then you can reply to the whole thing. (Interjection by Hon. D A Feetham) Sorry, I missed that.

Hon. D A Feetham: It was an elegant way of saying no, absolutely. (Laughter)

Hon. D J Bossino: He's entitled to.

Hon. Chief Minister: He was wondering why I was laughing. I asked whether he would give way so I could explain it to him. He has not given way, so he will just see me laughing without knowing why.

Mr Speaker: Let us continue. The Hon. Roy Clinton was not prepared to give way to the Chief Minister; fine. So we move on.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker, this is a serious matter for this House.

The guidance notes that would have been attached to the conduct of Members are quite extensive and in fact they combine in here the registration of Members' financial interests, which, as we all know and as we have been referred to, was first put together in 1979. We could have taken the opportunity to update that and include it in here, but alas, that has not been done.

I would draw the attention of the House to the fact that although we may take some comfort, again on a very cursory view it does look as if the Code of Conduct for Members of the Gibraltar Parliament that was tabled yesterday is pretty much a carbon copy of the UK guidelines; however ... This is only on a cursory view and perhaps the Deputy Chief Minister can explain it. I give him one example of what may be a slip of the pen, but then I will give him another example which is perhaps a little bit more serious.

The slip of the pen appears to be on page 4 of our Code of Conduct under 'Leadership'. The first line says:

Holders of public office should exhibit these principles in their own behaviour.

The UK one says:

Holders of public office should exhibit these principles in their own behaviour and treat others with respect.

These should be carbon copies. I do not understand why those words have been omitted; it may be a simple clerical error. So again, this should be a carbon copy of the UK rules, but there are differences. We have not had time to go through in great depth as to the language. We can only get some general comfort that it does appear to be similar to the UK code.

But the biggest issue I have identified so far is, of course, that the UK rules, which I presume the Deputy Chief Minister has been working off, assume that the guidance notes are attached. So, when it comes to the rules of conduct, on our page 5 at paragraph 11, which says 'The acceptance by a Member of a bribe ... is contrary to law of Parliament', it is identical to the UK one.

Paragraph 13: 'Members must fulfil conscientiously the requirements of Parliament ...' That is fine. But the one that comes in between, our number 12, which is the UK's number 4, says – and I will read it out, just so you understand where I am coming from:

Members must conduct themselves properly and rigorously when lobbying for or against a particular point of view on any matter and should seek guidance from the Speaker or the Clerk when unsure.

2250 The equivalent paragraph in the UK rules of conduct says:

Members must rigorously follow the rules on lobbying set out in the Guide to the Rules.

When you look at the guide, which is attached, and you look at the rules on lobbying, they are all about professional lobbying and payment and other such matters, but that bears no relation, or there is no indication in our paragraph 12 on what should Members conduct themselves properly and rigorously when lobbying. It does not say what it means by 'lobbying' – it could even be arguing in a debate for or against a particular point of view; 'and should seek guidance from the Speaker or Clerk when unsure' – unsure of what?

2255 This is where we missed an opportunity just to tidy up the language in the Code of Conduct. Again, the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition has indicated we are fully in support of having these codes of conduct in place, but we have just missed an opportunity to get it 100% right. There are obviously gaps and areas which could have done with some tidying up, and it is a shame that the opportunity to set up a select committee, even if only for a day, to consider this was not taken, and it is a shame that we are not producing the best Code of Conduct that we could have done.

2260 I can take comfort from the fact that the idea would be to review this at least on an annual basis, if not more frequently, and we can perhaps address some of these issues sooner rather than later. Again, with the limited time we have had available to us to consider the Code of Conduct tabled yesterday and compare it to the UK code of conduct, which is a much more substantial document overall, that is as much as I can say with any certainty are the concerns that I have at the moment, but it may be that if we had more time to go through a line-by-line comparison, we may come up with other issues or other points. But again, we would want to approach this constructively, and we would have wished that we would have been engaged with constructively before it was tabled yesterday, so that we ended up with the best Code of Conduct for the House. At the end of the day, this is for us as Members of this House and it is in our collective interest to get it right.

2270 Thank you, Mr Speaker.

2275 Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the motion is a short motion and the Code is a short code, exactly like the United Kingdom code that we have adopted, so I am very pleased that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition therefore welcomes the motion, that Mr Clinton welcomes the motion and that Ms Hassan Nahon welcomes the motion, although they then go on to say things which do not appear to confirm how welcoming they pretend to be.

I am not going to deal with the issues that are raised about laying on the table or not laying on the table. I understand you have something from Mr Clinton that, which I am happy to look at.

2285 I moved the motion, as I said yesterday, to try to bring an element of unanimity to this particular issue, because I think it is important that we should be moving with unanimity on this. It should be clear that all sides are committed to the Code, as we have been since 2015 and they are only from today.

Mr Speaker, yesterday I said –

2290 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: That is not correct.

Hon. Chief Minister. Mr Speaker, the hon. Member is saying that it is not correct. I presented these Codes in 2015. Some of them were here, some of them were not. I said then that we would adhere to the Codes from then. I invited them yesterday, when I laid on the table the papers, to say that they would adhere to them even before we had the motion. They would not say that. Today, they say they are going to vote in favour of the motion, so in that case they would at least be adhering from today. That is important because yesterday I said there will be an annual review, we are happy to consider any proposed changes – and, indeed, if you wanted to make any proposals since 2015 you were entirely free to do so, and you have not. We engaged with the GSD in 2015. The GSD told us not to proceed because they wanted further consideration. There has been absolutely nothing since then.

The hon. Lady tells us that she stands by the comments of the Leader of the Opposition and that she hopes we will keep this under constant review as a fluid document. She is agreeing not with the Leader of the Opposition, she is agreeing with the Leader of the House, because that is what I said yesterday would be the case.

Mr Clinton says he would have formed part of the Select Committee on Parliamentary Reform and would, therefore, have been able to be consulted on the Code to be adopted in a constructive discussion on drafting etc. Well, why hasn't he addressed this issue before? Of all of us, he is the one who has plenty of time to be engaging in writing to you overnight on something like the laying of papers on the table, and yet in the 60 meetings we have had since 2015 he has not thought it necessary to read the Code that governs his membership of this House. He has not thought it relevant to read those six pages which were laid then. (Interjection by Hon. R M Clinton)

He suggests that there is a problem with carbon copying the UK, when in fact we use Erskine May already as an almost carbon copy of the UK rules to interpret what it is that we are doing. Well, why is it that he has not suggested any changes to the document that was before the House since 2015? And when we have put our own modern version, he has identified one issue. (Hon. R M Clinton: Two.) No, I will tell you why you have only identified one, although you think you have identified two. He has identified one issue, Mr Speaker: the inclusion of the words 'and treat others with respect', which were not in the draft that the Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister was looking for. I have no difficulty with the inclusion of those words and I am very pleased to include those words, and we should consider the Code, in my view, amended to include those words in the section on leadership, because if they had been removed in the UK version that we were looking at, they should not have been removed. They are worthwhile words to have. (Interjection by Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon)

Why is it that I say there is no other point that the hon. Gentleman has identified? Well, for a simple reason: we did not believe it was necessary to copy the guides into the pages we were going to put before the House. Why? Because the guidelines are much wider, there are many more areas of difference between Gibraltar and the United Kingdom, and instead of doing that – and this is what I would have said, the only point I would have made if he had allowed me to interrupt him whilst he spoke – we have added a new paragraph 26 – 'The interpretation of this Code of Conduct shall have regard, where relevant, to the The Code of Conduct of the House of Commons' – in order to impute all of the guidance which is given for the interpretation of the UK Code. It is a clause not dissimilar to the clause in our Rules which says in having regard to the interpretation of these Rules we shall look at the rules in the House of Commons and Erskine May. All of the guidance notes, which is what he has made such a meal of, are imputed into the interpretation under paragraph 26, and so there is no question of there being a need to reprint the guidance notes in order for them to apply, because we are already applying them by paragraph 26.

The Code in Gibraltar is as long or as short as you might like to describe the code in the UK. In the UK it is five pages; probably because of the print, here it is six. That is the code; we have taken the code. The guidance notes – just like in financial services, just like in any other matter – are for interpretation, and we have imputed them in by paragraph 26. So they are in, and that is why the hon. Member has only identified one difference with the UK code, not two, because the other issue is there in paragraph 26.

2345 Mr Speaker, let's be frank: in 2015 when we published the parliamentary code as well as the Ministerial Code, we also did not publish the guidelines. Nobody from the GSD in the – I said 60 months; I am wrong – 86 months, at least, since we published the Code said, 'By the way, why haven't you published the guidelines?' We would have said, obviously, 'Because the guidelines are what interprets the code in the UK, and our interpretation of the code will be like the UK

2350 code – that is to say also with the guidelines. So, if I may say so with respect to the Hon. Mr Clinton, that is a complete non-point.

Finally, Mr Speaker, to say that in the short time they have had available they have only been able to identify these two things but they may identify more, I do not want to labour the 86-month point – they have had 86 months to consider this – but I would say that it is six pages. In fact, it is 2355 not six pages. Of the six pages, the first is the cover and the second is the index, which has six points on it, so we are talking about reading four pages. Of those four pages, on one page are the Seven Principles of Public Life –

Hon. R M Clinton: Which you got wrong.

Hon. Chief Minister: Which we did not get wrong. Mr Clinton says, from a sedentary position, in his usual provocative and ungenerous style, which is not designed to bring about constructive debate, but just to poke and needle in a way that does not do this community any service other than to give him the pleasure of showing that he has needled a speaker ... The Seven Principles of 2365 Public Life, amended with that extra phrase or not, would also not require much consideration, so he is saying that in 24 hours, although he does not do a day job like we do, he has not had the time to consider three pages of text, but that with more time he might have made a better job than the drafters of the UK code.

I think we have brought this community on leaps and bounds in many ways, not least because 2370 by 2015 we had already adopted these Codes and we had made ourselves already voluntarily subject to them. Now we have made everyone subject to them, and going forward these can be amended and improved.

I do not believe that it is necessary for the Gibraltar Parliament of 15 people to have a Code that provides more codification of rules, as the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition has suggested,

2375 than the United Kingdom Parliament for 650 people, especially when we are already imputing the guidelines in the UK. The Leader of the Opposition, when he opened, said, 'I believe it may be necessary to provide more codification.' Well, I do not believe it is necessary to provide more codification. With this Code and with the guidance notes in the UK, which are imputed under paragraph 26, we have more than enough to ensure that the conduct of Members of Parliament

2380 is now – as, by the way, I believe it always has been on both sides of the House – in keeping with the Seven Principles of Public Life; that is that we are here to serve, we are here to do the best for our people and we are here to discharge our functions as public servants. That huge step forward should not be in any way affected or mired by the lack of generosity we have seen in respect of some of the interventions from the other side, although I do welcome the fact that this motion will, apparently, pass by unanimity and the Code will be adopted by unanimity.

2385

Mr Speaker: I now put the question in terms of the motion proposed by the Hon. the Chief Minister. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? The motion is carried.

BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Admiralty Waters and Naval Base (Gibraltar) Bill 2022 –
First Reading approved

2390 Clerk: Bills – First and Second Reading.

A Bill for an Act to designate Admiralty Waters and to regulate activities, operations and vessel movements in relation to such waters, and the approaches thereto; to designate an area as His Majesty's Naval Base Gibraltar; to provide for the appointment of a King's Harbour Master; and for matters connected thereto.

2395 The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to designate Admiralty Waters and to regulate activities, operations and vessel movements in relation to such waters, and the approaches thereto; to designate an area as His Majesty's Naval Base Gibraltar; to provide for the appointment of a King's Harbour Master; and for matters connected thereto be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to designate Admiralty Waters and to regulate activities, operations and vessel movements in relation to such waters, and the approaches thereto; to designate an area as His Majesty's Naval Base Gibraltar; to provide for the appointment of a King's Harbour Master; and for matters connected thereto be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Admiralty Waters and Naval Base (Gibraltar) Act 2022.

Admiralty Waters and Naval Base (Gibraltar) Bill 2022 –
Second Reading approved

2410 Clerk: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the Bill for the Admiralty Waters and Naval Base (Gibraltar) Act 2022 be read a second time. Of course, when this Bill becomes an Act, it will be referred to as the 2023 Act, not 2022, but the Bill is very much a 2022 Bill.

2415 Presently, 'Admiralty Waters' are defined by an Order in Council, namely the Admiralty Waters (Gibraltar) Order 1972, and a set of regulations made thereunder. This Bill principally seeks to achieve two things, therefore: first of all, to transfer responsibility for legislating to this Parliament; and second, redefining the extent of Admiralty Waters.

2420 Under the 1972 Order, most of the waters within the Port of Gibraltar are stated to be Admiralty Waters. In the 50 years since that Order was made, much has changed on the ground. Indeed, a lot of the water has changed into ground. In practice, most of the Port is now de facto under civilian use and control. This Bill was proposed to the Government by the MoD itself, however, and is the product of engagement by lawyers and officials from both sides.

2425 Turning to the clauses of the Bill itself, clauses 1 and 2 provide for the title and commencement if approved by the House, and that the Act will come into operation when the 1972 Order ceases to have effect. This ensures that there is a seamless transition from one regime to the next.

2430 Clause 3 provides for the interpretation of the Act. Notably, there is a reference to the Naval Base, and this is demarcated in the schedule as the area in the vicinity of the tower. The sole purpose of the definition is to provide for an element of control by the King's Harbour Master (KHM) of activities undertaken on that area of land that may impact on Admiralty Waters. In terms of having a mental picture of what area will remain Admiralty Waters, if people think of the boom that is brought across from one end of the South Mole to the tower, that is more or less the area, but with additional areas in order to provide for turning circles and openings to remain.

2435 Clause 4 confers a power for the Minister with responsibility for the Port to vary the limits of Admiralty Waters and the Naval Base, with this power being exercisable with the consent of the Governor.

2440 Clause 5 confers control over Admiralty Waters upon the senior officer, which is defined in clause 3, whilst responsibility vests in the senior officer controls to be exercised by the KHM.

The KHM is appointed by the senior officer under clause 6.

2445 Clauses 7 to 9 provide for the exercise of controls in Admiralty Waters by the KHM, including by issuing permits and directions.

Clause 10 confers a duty on the Captain of the Port to ensure that the approaches to Admiralty Waters are kept clear from wrecks or obstructions, and, where such an obstruction occurs, for the Captain to keep the KHM informed.

2450 Clauses 11 and 12 make further provisions regarding navigation in Admiralty Waters.

The penal provisions for breaches are set out in clauses 13 and 14, and they provide for recovery of sums in the Supreme Court where appropriate.

2455 Clause 15 is a regulation-making power. Should Parliament approve the Bill, regulations that are equivalent to those made under the 1972 Order in Council will be made on the date of commencement.

Non-military vessels will access Admiralty Waters, not least those going to or from dry docks. Clause 16 ensures that such vessels continue to be governed by the provisions of the Port Act, save where there is an inconsistency with the provisions of this Act.

2460 Consequential amendments to other legislation are set out in clause 17.

The Schedule sets out the co-ordinates of Admiralty Waters. These, and the extent of the Naval Base, are set out in the extract from the relevant Admiralty chart.

2465 Mr Speaker, hon. Members will have heard me say that the power of the Minister with responsibility for the Port is exercisable only with the consent of the Governor. That should not be regarded as unusual, because dealing with Admiralty Waters we are dealing with a matter that relates to defence and security, and our Constitution and Parliament Act already provides that a Bill cannot be moved in respect of those matters without the consent of the Governor. We are still in that same space here, but this is a huge bringing to this Parliament of a power that was previously outside it under the old Constitution and under the new Constitution, and given the new conventions in respect of Orders in Council in respect of Gibraltar it is right not only that no new Orders in Council should be made in respect of Gibraltar, other than with the consent of the people of Gibraltar expressed through their Government, but also that where there are Orders in Council still in place and those can be repatriated to Acts of this Parliament, we should do so where appropriate.

2470 Given that we are tidying up the extent of Admiralty Waters, this is the right moment to do so in respect of this matter, and I commend the Bill to the House.

2475 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. Elliott Phillips.

Hon. E J Phillips: Mr Speaker, we thank the hon. Gentleman, the Chief Minister, for his explanation of the Bill. It will receive the Opposition's full support, although we have just two points for clarification. The first is, insofar as the schedule that the Chief Minister has referred to and the explanation that he has given, is it right that Admiralty Waters as defined and the limits 2480 will now be reduced? I am in no way criticising that, I am just saying is it a fact that the Admiralty Waters will now reduce from the previous schedule contained in the Order in Council from 1972? That is the first point.

2485 The second point: just in relation to recovery of sums and because of the complexity around some of these vessels and the recovery of wrecks, I note that the Chief Minister refers to the small claims procedure, which is generally easier to deal with because, of course, the Registrar of the Supreme Court also doubles up as the Admiralty Marshal. Is there a mechanism to allow for cases of complexity and high value – for instance, in cases of wrecks – to be transferred to the Supreme Court? I do not think there is a mechanism within this amending piece of legislation for that to happen so that it does not take up too much of the time of the small claims jurisdiction. I just thought that we may want to consider a transfer of more complex cases and more high-value wrecks in this particular matter to go to the Supreme Court directly, but that is just an observation about this particular mechanism.

2495 Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

2500 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, I only rise to add to my hon. and learned colleague to my right – although viewed from that side, of course, he is to my left, probably, and ideologically so. (Laughter) He has already confirmed that we will vote in favour of this Bill, but I add this because it is an important issue on the general principles. This is an important constitutional moment for Gibraltar where we legislate in relation to Admiralty Waters, and it is done by Act of this House to give it legitimacy, so that we decide on behalf of the people we represent, the people of Gibraltar, what is done within our waters by the Admiralty, and it is not done, as before, without reference to this House. That is an important issue for us to put on the record which I share with the Chief Minister. I think it is an important constitutional moment that we legislate specifically to give permission for these things to happen within our waters.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

2510 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for hon. Members indicating they will be supporting this Bill, not least for the reasons that I have indicated and the Leader of the Opposition has agreed with, which I think are fundamentally important, although, if I may say so, we are not here legislating for what is going to be done in our waters, we are legislating for where things are going to be done in our waters, but the where and the what are almost interchangeable because the ‘whats’ can now only be done in the ‘wheres’ that we permit.

2515 It is right that that is set out more clearly in legislation in the context of Admiralty Waters now under this amending legislation, this legislation which will take what is in the Order in Council into the Act of this Parliament, because that is the nature of the relationship with the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom is sovereign in Gibraltar through the free will of the people of Gibraltar. That is how the people of the United Kingdom would want it to be, and it is how the people of Gibraltar want it to be. It goes to the core of the nature of the relationship, which is misinterpreted by others to be colonial in nature. If it were colonial in nature, we would be tolerating the sovereignty of the United Kingdom in Gibraltar, and we are not tolerating it, we are very much supportive of it, and so this is an illustration, in the context of Admiralty Waters, of the nature of that relationship.

2530 Therefore, Admiralty Waters are considerably reduced from the 1972 provision, which was, as I said in my opening statement, almost the whole of the area of the Port, and indeed there are funny stories that the Hon. the Father of the House tells of why Europa Point is designed like a semi-circle and where the ammunition barges used to be, where the discharge of ammunition used to be, the turning circles and all the rest of it. All of those issues involved Admiralty Waters and difficult negotiations – led by Michael Feetham as a Minister – with the MoD on how to be able to reach an entente cordiale as to reclamations etc. So that was the whole extent of Admiralty Waters in those days, and it is now reduced to what the MoD needs. If the MoD needed more, we would have been happy to consider more, but what the MoD needed is now reflected in what is set out in the Schedule to this Bill.

2535

Under section 14, the hon. Gentleman is right that claims are sent to the small claims procedure of the Supreme Court, but his point that larger claims would then be sent directly to the Supreme Court I think is dealt with by the last phrase of that section, which says 'notwithstanding that the amount claimed exceeds £10,000'. So, even if the claim is for £10 million, it can still go through the small claims procedure in the Supreme Court. You are still in the Supreme Court, which means you still have the inherent jurisdiction, you have all the rules and powers of the Supreme Court available to you, but you do not have the costs of a full-blown Supreme Court action, so to an extent I think this is a more helpful way of dealing with things.

2540

Mr Speaker, that is all I have to say in dealing with the points that hon. Members have made, other than that given the confusion that seems to be arising between what is to his left and to his right, I can tell the hon. Gentleman that we have a very good view of what is happening and we are quite happy to tell him who is to his left and who is to his right, even though it might seem the opposite to him from where he is sitting.

2545

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to designate Admiralty Waters and to regulate activities, operations and vessel movements in relation to such waters, and the approaches thereto; to designate an area as His Majesty's Naval Base Gibraltar; to provide for the appointment of a King's Harbour Master; and for matters connected thereto be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

2550

Clerk: The Admiralty Waters and Naval Base (Gibraltar) Act 2022.

Admiralty Waters and Naval Base (Gibraltar) Bill 2022 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

Immigration, Asylum and Refugee (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Immigration, Asylum and Refugee Act to allow for the issuing of a permit of residence for a period of time not exceeding 12 months to persons enrolled at the University of Gibraltar and expand on what would constitute comprehensive sickness cover in relation to students.

The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to amend the Immigration, Asylum and Refugee Act to allow for the issuing of a permit of residence for a period of time not exceeding 12 months to persons enrolled at the University of 2570

Gibraltar and expand on what would constitute comprehensive sickness cover in relation to students be read a first time.

2575 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Immigration, Asylum and Refugee Act to allow for the issuing of a permit of residence for a period of time not exceeding 12 months to persons enrolled at the University of Gibraltar and expand on what would constitute comprehensive sickness cover in relation to students be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

2580 Clerk: The Immigration, Asylum and Refugee (Amendment) Act 2022.

Immigration, Asylum and Refugee (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Second Reading approved

Clerk: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill now be read a second time.

2585 This Bill works in tandem with the amendments that were made to the Medical Group Practice Scheme Act as part of the changes that would allow a student enrolled in a full-time academic course at the University of Gibraltar to register on a medical group practice scheme. The nature of this Bill is to aid the administrative side of this initiative, and this is illustrated with the introduction of a new permit of residence not exceeding 12 months available only to those 2590 enrolled at the University of Gibraltar on a full-time academic course. This will streamline the procedure for all parties involved in the administration of the process here in Gibraltar.

In addition to the above change, a further change has been made to ensure that our current commitments under Part 4 of the Immigration, Asylum and Refugee Act are maintained whilst negotiations on the future relationship between Gibraltar and the European Union are ongoing.

2595 Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

2600 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, as this is working in tandem with the other Bill, I cannot recall if this information was given at the time, but is there an assessment of how many people would fall within the remit of this? And in terms of their eligibility in the group practice scheme, are they then making a contribution to the scheme in any particular way, as part of the fees or something? Is that how it is being done?

Minister for Digital, Financial Services, Health Authority and Public Utilities (Hon. A J Isola): Mr Speaker, yes, in order to qualify, the previous Act – the Bill that we passed last time in relation to this – specified that they had to be fully paid up and also make a contribution to the GPMS Scheme in order to be able to qualify for this.

2610 In terms of who it is, the previous piece of legislation we passed excluded any members of the individual student's family, so no dependents were allowed; it was only the student himself. So it is only the individual who is coming to do a full-time course at the University who contributes to the GPMS that would qualify, and that is what this legislation seeks to do from an immigration perspective.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

2620 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, I have nothing to add. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for indicating support from the other side and to my ministerial colleague Mr Isola for the clarification sought by the Leader of the Opposition.

2625 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to amend the Immigration, Asylum and Refugee Act to allow for the issuing of a permit of residence for a period of time not exceeding 12 months to persons enrolled at the University of Gibraltar and expand on what would constitute comprehensive sickness cover in relation to students be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Immigration, Asylum and Refugee (Amendment) Act 2022.

Immigration, Asylum and Refugee (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

2630 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of this Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

Gibraltar National Park Bill 2021 –
First Reading approved

2635 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to make provision for the Gibraltar National Park and the establishment of a Gibraltar National Park Coordination Board; and for connected purposes.

The Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education.

2640 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to make provision for the Gibraltar National Park and the establishment of a Gibraltar National Park Coordination Board; and for connected purposes be read a first time.

2645 Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision for the Gibraltar National Park and the establishment of a Gibraltar National Park Coordination Board; and for connected purposes be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Gibraltar National Park Act 2021.

Gibraltar National Park Bill 2021 –
Second Reading approved

2650 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill now be read a second time.

We are incredibly fortunate in Gibraltar to have a breadth of natural, historical and cultural heritage to enjoy. Embedded in the concept of a green Gibraltar is sustainability, that this heritage should be preserved and protected for current generations and also future generations. This Bill delivers this and more.

2655 This Bill designates certain areas in Gibraltar as making up the Gibraltar National Park. It also establishes a new body, to be known as the Gibraltar National Park Coordination Board, which will ensure the enhancement and promotion nationally and internationally of the natural beauty, wildlife and cultural heritage of the areas designated as constituting the Gibraltar National Park. The Board will also be responsible for promoting opportunities for the understanding and enjoyment by members of the public of the special qualities that the areas in the National Park have to offer. It will serve to ensure better understanding of Gibraltar's heritage in its widest sense, both within and outside Gibraltar, as well as, importantly, ensuring co-ordination between the different entities responsible for the different constituent parts of the National Park.

2660 National parks have a huge reputation on the international scene, and this initiative will allow the involvement of Gibraltar in relevant international organisations and partnerships, once again promoting the status of Gibraltar on a world scale.

2665 The drafting of this Bill has been largely bespoke, given that Gibraltar's geography differs considerably from any other territory's. However, the concept and certain provisions of the Bill have been based on certain acts of the United Kingdom and Scottish Parliaments, namely the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949, the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000, the Countryside (Scotland) Act 1967 and the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003. Like the Bill, those Acts aim to ensure that the natural landscape is made available to the general public for their enjoyment by giving them a special status.

2670 The Bill is divided into four Parts. Part 1 contains the definitions used in the Bill. Two of the most important terms defined here are 'cultural heritage' and 'natural heritage'. These terms bring together all of Gibraltar's rich heritage, which the Bill safeguards for the enjoyment of the public.

2675 Part 2 of the Bill creates a National Parks Coordination Board. The Coordination Board will be made up of members who, as a collective, will have knowledge and experience in environmental matters and in the cultural and natural heritage of Gibraltar. This experience will be vital for the Board to successfully exercise its functions. The Coordination Board will report annually to the Minister for the Environment and the report will be laid before Parliament, ensuring accountability and transparency.

2680 Part 3 of the Bill creates the Gibraltar National Park. This comprises areas which are contained in the Schedule or in future are recommended for their natural beauty, biodiversity and natural or cultural heritage or the opportunities they afford for open-air recreation.

2685 The Schedule lists those areas which form part of the National Park, including areas of environmental importance such as the Nature Reserve, historically significant areas such as Gorham's Cave, the Trafalgar Cemetery and Moorish Castle, and areas of recreational and cultural enjoyment such as the Garrison Library, the Gibraltar National Museum, the Commonwealth Park and the Gibraltar Botanic Gardens, to name a few. The Gibraltar National Trails created under the Gibraltar National Trails Act 2021 also fall within the Gibraltar National Park, achieving our objective of expanding on areas which are to be enjoyed by the public as a whole. The area will be demarcated on plans which will be displayed on the Government's geographical information systems.

2695 The final Part of the Bill makes provision for secondary legislation.

2700 Mr Speaker, in my letter to you, dated 23rd November 2022, I gave notice of a number of amendments for consideration at Committee Stage. These have arisen following feedback on the Bill from stakeholders who pointed out that the Bill, in ways, duplicated the functions of other bodies such as are set out in the Heritage and Antiquities Act, the Nature Protection Act and the Town Planning Act. The amendments remove these regulatory powers that are best held elsewhere and ensure that the Coordination Board deals with co-operation, enhancement and promotion as its key roles.

2705 In my letter to you dated 18th January this year, I gave notice of further amendments which followed discussion with the Hon. Damon Bossino, to whom I am most grateful for the constructive manner in which he has raised them. They have served to clarify ambiguities and make the Bill more user friendly. Further amendments correct repetition and update references to Commonwealth and Campion Parks to reflect the Bill that I took at a recent meeting of this House.

2710 This Bill will ensure that the gems in Gibraltar's heritage are properly enjoyed by the people of Gibraltar of current and future generations and, most importantly, are better known and understood by the rest of the world.

I commend this Bill to the House.

2715 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. Damon Bossino.

2720 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I acknowledge the comments that he has made in relation to me. Let me just add that I also welcome the constructive approach that he himself has adopted. We have spent quite a bit of time in terms of improving the legislation, and that has resulted, let me tell him, in a slight shift on this side of the House. We started off from a position of deep scepticism as to whether the things that he has said in terms of the principles and what he wants to achieve are going to be achieved with the legislation as presented in this green paper, and there is a slight shift from a negative no vote on our side to one of likely abstention because we still have ... We have not become ardent believers of the things that he has said he wants to achieve as a result of the introduction of this Bill, but because there has been, I think, a significant and considerable improvement from the position as it was when it was first presented to the House, we are willing to adopt a position, in effect, of suck it and see whether the things he says are going to come to fruition as a result of the introduction of this Bill and into an Act as part of our statute book will happen.

2730 We are now at the end of the lifetime of this Parliament. On any possible analysis we are likely to have a general election before the end of this calendar year, and it is possible, should the complexion of the Government change after that as a result of the expression of the will of the electorate, that we take a different view and approach in a different direction.

2735 Mr Speaker, a lot of the points that we discussed have been reflected in the amendments he will be introducing at Committee Stage. I have had an opportunity of reading the letter, in particular the last letter of 18th January 2023, which he kindly send to me via WhatsApp the other day. A lot of the points that were raised he has accepted and he has volunteered alternative wording which I am much happier with, in terms of clarification. But can I ask him, in terms of those just two or three pockets of areas which have not been amended? He has explained to me via email why he is not doing so, and that is fair enough, but I think it is important, as I have said on previous occasions, that that is somehow recorded in Hansard. I would like to take him to it, and then, when he replies, I will give him an opportunity to state it for the record.

2740 In relation to clause 4, where, if he recalls, I raised the distinction that is made in clause 4(1) and 4(2)(a), where there is a constant cross-referencing to the statutory definition of 'Gibraltar National Park', but then in terms of clause 4(2)(c), when it talks about the promotion and the exhibiting of the 'natural and cultural heritage assets', it talks about the wider Gibraltar. I would like him to explain why that distinction. In other words, why isn't it restrictive in nature and restricted to the Gibraltar National Park as defined, and is actually wider and includes Gibraltar?

2750 He has explained that by email briefly, but I would simply flag it for him, so it gives him an opportunity to state it across the floor of the House for the reasons I have alluded to earlier.

In relation to clause 5(1), which talks about ... I made the point about the Minister being given wide discretion on appointments and I asked whether there should not be a legislative imperative that the appointees to the Board include pertinent NGOs. His position was that his intention is to mirror the composition of the National Trails Board, and he said that that will be reflected in regulations – if he could perhaps expand on that a bit further.
2755

And finally, in relation to clause 5(5), where the issue that I had related to a point of drafting and one which I think, as currently drafted – and he is sticking to that wording – I felt it was not sufficiently clear on the face of the wording as presented in the Bill. But as I understand it, what this is intended to do is to, in effect, invite those interested parties to meetings of the Board who are not officially appointees on an ad hoc basis. I think that is the position – he is nodding his head – but I would again give him an opportunity to state that for the record.
2760

Other than that, Mr Speaker, I have no further contributions to make.

Mr Speaker: Does any other hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

The Hon. Minister will know that I hold heritage and culture quite close to my heart, and we have worked constructively in the past, as I know my colleague has worked with him on the Heritage and Antiquities Act, and I think we worked quite well on that. In normal circumstances, I usually support everything in this respect, in terms of anything to do with heritage that the Minister does, but I must confess that in this case, in respect of this particular Bill, I really am struggling to understand what this Bill will do that other Bills do not already do. There is already legislation on our statute book that covers, for example, heritage. There is legislation on parks, there is legislation on the marine environment, there is legislation on lots of things – nature trails. There is the Museum Act, there is the Garrison Library Trust Act and there are other Acts. I am not sure what this Bill actually is adding in terms of functionality.

The Minister is the Minister for Heritage and Culture. If there was any co-ordination to be done, he does not need an advisory board; he has an entire Department at his disposal and he has access to all the different people on all the other entities that are encapsulated, for example, in the Heritage and Antiquities Act or the National Museum or the Garrison Library Trust, which have their own boards. These are not free-standing entities of just one or two people; they actually have their own governing bodies. This Act seems, to an extent, possibly to usurp some of those powers or functions. I give him one example: the ability to charge fees; if they decided that one of the bodies within the designated schedule – for example, the National Museum or the Garrison Library – should charge admission fees. Why is that even in there, if it is meant to be just a co-ordinating body?
2780

It may be that the use of the word ‘park’ is a misnomer in this Bill. Maybe it is a deep-seated psychological thing for the Minister where everything has to be a park. Maybe it would read better if it were called Gibraltar National Trust or Gibraltar National Heritage, because I just cannot see how a library full of books can be called a park. He is nodding. He thinks it can be. I know there are such things as industrial parks, but I have never heard of a library being described as a park or a museum described as a park. But he will have us describe it as a park. As I said, it may be some deep-seated, subconscious thing with the Minister where everything has to be a park. I do apologise to the Minister. He knows I would normally support him on this, but this Bill frankly just does not do it for me. I do not see what value this adds to anything.
2790

The list of items on the Schedule is eclectic. He has the Trafalgar Cemetery, the city walls – which were already protected – then the Moorish Castle, then he has underwater marine, then he has the entire Nature Reserve, then the National Museum, then the Garrison Library and then a whole lot of other parks. It is like spot the difference. I do not understand what the Garrison Library is doing on this list, or even the National Museum. It may make sense in his mind, but I have yet to be convinced.

2805 As to his list, Mr Speaker, how was it devised? Why aren't the Northern Defences on there? And what about the artistic heritage? Why isn't the City Hall Art Gallery, the Mario Finlayson Art Gallery ...? Why isn't that on the schedule, if he is so concerned about our cultural heritage? He is fixated on parks. I can understand that. Why aren't the Great Siege Tunnels in there? Why aren't the other tunnels in there? We could go on forever.

2810 The reason we already have legislation that covers most of this is because we know it needs protection, enhancement and promotion, but that legislation already exists and I cannot see where the gaps are that this will fill. I know, Mr Speaker, he is dying to ... I do not think he is ... No, let me finish.

2815 On the Coordination Board's membership, if you look at the Heritage and Antiquities Act, the membership is actually designated, and in a very sensible way. You have specific persons from specific bodies who sit on it. This one is just completely open ended. He can appoint ... It says in the Bill it shall have regard to the desirability, but the Bill does not actually specify who should be on this Coordination Board.

2820 Also, I fear to suggest they may even be slightly overlapping with tourism in terms of promoting and exhibiting cultural, geographic, historic ... within Gibraltar and encouraging ... and what other things should be done etc. It may be overlapping with the Tourist Board, even.

2825 Unless he can actually give us a real, rational explanation as to what this piece of legislation is trying to do, we remain unconvinced. I am really sorry to say this because the Minister knows that I always support anything in heritage that I think is positive for Gibraltar, but this is just a piece of legislation for the sake of legislation and adds no value. For that reason, as my hon. Friend has already espoused – who is the shadow for Heritage; I am only standing up as I have a special interest in heritage, and that is well known to the Minister – (Interjection) Well, maybe I will carry on talking. I quite enjoy being up here! (Laughter and interjection) I can feel the grass growing underneath my feet! Unless the Minister can come up with some rational explanation as to why Gibraltar needs this legislation and what value it will add to the protection of our cultural assets, 2830 I will, of course, be abstaining with my colleagues.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

2835 Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: While the general objective of this Bill, Mr Speaker, is commendable, I just have an issue with the fact that under 'Constitution of Coordination Board', in subclause 5(1):

Subject to subsection (2) the Coordination Board consists of the Minister, who is the chairperson, and at least 3 but no more than 7 other members as the Minister may appoint, of whom one may be appointed to be deputy chairperson.

2840 Why does this Board have to be appointed directly by a Minister? Why not set up a system that does not politicise, or at least has a non-partisan presence? What is essentially the preservation of our natural resources and our wildlife? Why can't there be a process of consultation with academics and civil society, who will most certainly be in a better position to make this decision than a Minister? Perhaps not right now, because we can all agree that we have one who is quite qualified in this field, but it might not always be the case. We are tired of seeing Ministers with dubious qualifications – like I said, it does not appear now – running government departments, and the people of Gibraltar are tired of seeing supposedly independent entities and institutions 2845 that are supposed to work for the benefit of the wider community being politically infiltrated and thoroughly manipulated, on many occasions for partisan goals.

I think this way of operating could be much improved, Mr Speaker. That is my tuppence-worth. Thank you.

2850 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Prof. J E Cortes: Mr Speaker, I will thank the hon. Lady. I thought I would also thank the Members of the official Opposition, but if they are going to abstain anyway, I do not know whether I should really bother to reply, although I think they more than deserve a reply because ... I will get to them in a minute, but first of all I will address the point made by the hon. Lady.

2855 There are many boards which are chaired by Ministers in a lot of our legislation. This includes, for example, the Heritage and Antiquities Act, which I chair. I chair, also, the Garrison Library Trust and others. So we are not departing from established practice. I think on this occasion, as I think you will see when I reply to the other points made, it does need a certain amount of steer by somebody whose vision this has been – I will use the word ‘vision’ again in another context later – but I do assure the hon. Lady that this Board will include academics and representatives of civil society, indeed as the National Trails Board already does.

2860 In reply to the points made by the Hon. Mr Bossino and the Hon. Mr Clinton – I would not have been so kind to Mr Bossino if I had thought that he was going to be so relatively unkind to me – they have missed the point completely and I think they have shown an incredible lack of vision and understanding.

2870 The Gibraltar National Park is modelled on the UK national park model. We are not talking about Yellowstone National Park or the Galapagos Islands, which are wilderness parks. We are talking about the UK model of national parks and, indeed, the model which is now being pursued by cities, including London, which will shortly, in all likelihood, be declared a national park city in which the park embraces not just natural features but monuments and stately homes, where I am sure, just as in the Garrison Library, there are also books which are part of the national park. Therefore, the word ‘park’ is used very broadly because it encompasses things that people will appreciate and enjoy, and that is a very important point.

2875 Another point that I think has been made in both the presentations is this lack of understanding as to how this comes about and how it will be constituted. NGOs have been consulted on this from the very start and support it, as have the different entities that will come in to form the Gibraltar National Park – the Garrison Library, the Museum, the Botanic Gardens. All these entities already exist, they have their own existence, but one thing that is lacking is co-ordination between all of them so that they get the right messages out consistently and so that they add value to each other in promoting Gibraltar as a whole. Why should it be restricted to just what is found within these particularly specified areas if they can use the huge profile that they are going to get to sell Gibraltar as a whole, as a destination? This is why it is particularly disturbing that the hon. Member who represents tourism should not see the value of this.

2885 I said in my speech Gibraltar will have a national park which can now be sold out there as a national park consistent with the kind of national park that I am talking about and which can join international organisations, international programmes, and maybe even attract funding because it is a national park. I reassure the Hon. Mr Clinton that there is no problem at all that there is an overlap with tourism. The Hon. Minister for Tourism, my hon. Friend Minister Daryanani, and the CEO of the Gibraltar Tourist Board have actually met and had a presentation even at the stages that we were drafting it. So there is going to be clearly an overlap with tourism because this is a huge marketing tool for Gibraltar. There is a world out there that googles ‘national parks Europe’. This will spring up and all the different things about Gibraltar – not just within these sites, but the whole of Gibraltar – will come up and people will be interested and will want to visit. It is a huge and very inexpensive marketing strategy, and I just cannot understand why the hon. Members opposite have failed to see that point.

2890 There were three specific points that were raised by Mr Bossino. I explained already the wider Gibraltar. I explained also that there are parallels in the National Trails Board and that that will 2900 have representation from NGOs. On the third point, the people who will be attending meetings, even if they are not officially part of the board, are those people who actually run the different constituent parts of it. So if the Board is discussing how to promote different things about Gibraltar, we may want to call a representative from the Garrison Library or a representative from the Museum so that there would be a general discussion. In the past, we have been criticised, and 2905 not just by the Opposition, that government departments do not talk to each other, that different organisations do not talk to each other. This is the ideal body to make them talk to each other, to co-ordinate, to get added value and then to put it out there and promote it.

So this is huge. It is much bigger than they can see. I believe the Opposition abstained when we created Commonwealth Park and when we created legislation to support the formation of the Botanic Garden. They were wrong then; they did not have the vision. I ask them to reconsider 2910 because Gibraltar National Park, certainly if we co-ordinate it and if we go through with it in the way that I have already discussed with the NGOs and with the constituent members, will be hugely significant in promoting Gibraltar and its image with all its assets out there in the wider world, which Gibraltar sorely needs now, probably more than ever.

2915 Mr Speaker, with that, I commend this Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to make provision for the Gibraltar National Park and the establishment of a Gibraltar National Park Coordination Board; and for connected purposes be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those 2920 against? Carried.

Clerk: The Gibraltar National Park Act 2021.

Gibraltar National Park Bill 2021 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today, if all hon. Members agree.
2925

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

Crimes and Miscellaneous Provisions (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
First Reading approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to provide for the revival of the common law offence of conspiracy to defraud; to amend the Crimes Act 2011, the Legal Services Act 2017 and for connected purposes.
2930 The Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality, Public Standards and Regulations.

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that a Bill for an Act to provide for the revival of the common law offence of conspiracy to defraud; to amend the Crimes Act 2011, the Legal 2935 Services Act 2017 and for connected purposes be read a first time.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to provide for the revival of the common law offence of conspiracy to defraud; to amend the Crimes Act 2011, the Legal 2940 Services Act 2017 and for connected purposes be read a first time. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Crimes and Miscellaneous Provisions (Amendment) Act 2022.

Crimes and Miscellaneous Provisions (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Second Reading approved

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the Bill for the Crimes and 2945 Miscellaneous Provisions (Amendment) Act 2022 be read a second time.

This Bill addresses some errors in the Crimes Act 2011, which is a very substantial piece of legislation, and it is intended to be somewhat of a clean-up as these issues have arisen.

2950 Clause 3 addresses a question in relation to the continued existence or otherwise of the offence of common law conspiracy to defraud on the basis of potential ambiguity over the provisions of section 35 of the Crimes Act 2011, and on that basis this Bill clarifies that the common law offence of conspiracy to defraud continues to have effect. It may assist if I explain that the provisions of section 35 of the Crimes Act 2011 closely mirror section 5 of the English Criminal Law Act 1977. In England, section 5 abolished the common law offence of conspiracy at common law but saved the offence so far as it relates to conspiracy to defraud. In contrast, our own section 35 2955 does not contain the saving provision. Instead, there is a section 34 which refers to an offence of conspiracy to defraud, and there is therefore an argument that a statutory offence of conspiracy to defraud was created. However, in order to make it absolutely clear that the common law offence of conspiracy to defraud is to continue to exist, this Bill recognises the possibility that the common law offence was abolished by section 35 in 2011 and expressly provides that the offence 2960 continued to have effect as if it had not been abolished. Clause 3(2) makes it clear that a person may not be prosecuted for the common law offence of conspiracy to defraud in respect of conduct occurring after the abolition and before the revival. Clauses 34 and 35 of the Crimes Act 2011 are amended to reflect this provision.

2965 Clause 4 replaces section 209 of the Crimes Act. This relates to sexual offences committed outside of Gibraltar. Subsection (1) of the current section 298 makes it an offence in Gibraltar to commit certain acts overseas against a child. The act must amount to a sexual offence listed in Part A of Schedule 2 and must also amount to an offence in the country where it was committed.
The exact description of the offence does not need to be the same in both countries. For example, 2970 the provisions could apply to someone who raped a child in another country, although that offence was described differently under the law of that country. However, there is no provision requiring that there be a link between the person being prosecuted with Gibraltar. This amendment corrects that position and it also updates the law to strengthen it. It makes an offence for a Gibraltar resident or Gibraltar national to commit an act outside Gibraltar which would constitute a relevant sexual offence if done in Gibraltar. For Gibraltar residents, there is no requirement 2975 that the act committed must also have been illegal in the country where it took place. However, this requirement remains for the prosecution of Gibraltar residents under the new section 298(2) and those who become Gibraltar residents or Gibraltar nationals under the new section 298(3) and (4).
Where a person becomes a Gibraltar resident or Gibraltar national after having committed a relevant sex offence in a country outside of Gibraltar, such a person must also be a Gibraltar resident or 2980 at the time the proceedings were brought. The new sections 298(5) to (8) replicate provisions in the current section 298. They provide rules relating to how the prosecution can prove that the offence was an offence in the country in which it was committed.

2985 Clause 5 addresses a minor omission. When the Legal Services (Amendment) Act 2022 amended section 6 of the Legal Services Act 2017, reference to part 5 of the register – and this relates to in-house lawyers – was inadvertently omitted after section 6(3)(e).

Mr Speaker, I commend the Bill to the House.

2990 Mr Speaker: Before I put the question, does any hon. Member wish to speak on the general principles and merits of the Bill? The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, the Opposition will be supporting the Bill.

The hon. Lady and I have spoken. She explained the rationale behind this before she stood and delivered her speech, in relation to which I am very grateful.

2995 I was originally responsible for steering the Crimes Bill, as it then was, through Parliament. At the time, it was the largest, I think, Bill in the – Does the Hon. the Chief Minister want me to give way? I am quite prepared. I feel in a generous spirit. Do you want me to give way?

3000 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, just to say that we have heard that speech before, and if he wants, we can just press play on what a magnificent Act it was, how it took so much of his time and all the rest of it. No problem, it is already in Hansard.

Hon. D A Feetham: Well, I am very grateful for his compliment. He should compliment Members of this side of the House more often. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) Right.

3005 Mr Speaker, I was responsible, as I said, for the Crimes Bill. At the time, it was the largest piece of legislation on our statute books. It came, as well, with a sister Bill, which was the Criminal Procedure and Evidence Bill, which was also, in itself, a huge piece of legislation. It is impossible to introduce legislation of that kind without perhaps having mistakes in them, and I accept that. Even if they did not contain mistakes, any Bill that is brought to this House in order to improve those pieces of legislation in the light of the experience within the courts etc. would obviously receive support from this side of the House.

3010 I just want to say a few words on section 298. Section 298 has been subject to comments from the courts – the former section 298, I mean – in relation to its adequacy in the context of a prosecution that was actually brought. I think it is important that the Government has brought this amendment because section 298 is designed to deal with a situation – amongst other things, but when we brought the Bill to the House, this is what we had in mind – where somebody in Gibraltar visits another jurisdiction in order to take advantage of children and have sexual intercourse with children, for example. This allows those people to be prosecuted in this jurisdiction, which is a phenomenally important piece of legislation, and for all those reasons, and despite the ungenerous interruptions from the other side, the Opposition is going to be supporting the Bill.

3020 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

3025 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I am very grateful for the hon. Gentleman's intervention. As he explained, we had a conversation on this and I am grateful for him agreeing. The hon. Gentleman has in the past referred to the Crimes Act and the related Criminal Procedure and Evidence Act as seminal pieces of legislation. They are, indeed, very substantial pieces of legislation. The Crimes Act ... anyone who picks it up knows it is this thick; it is over 500 pages long.

3030 As I said when I started my intervention, issues have arisen and this proposed Bill is to clean up some gaps and tighten some things that have now come to light. The hon. Gentleman is right: when it comes to the sexual offences provisions outside of the jurisdiction, this arose as a result of a matter in the Supreme Court. It was, therefore, brought to our attention in those circumstances, and it is only the right thing to do to enhance and strengthen that legislation so that there is no risk of any gaps in the future.

3035 I commend this Bill to the House.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that a Bill for an Act to provide for the revival of the common law offence of conspiracy to defraud; to amend the Crimes Act 2011, the Legal Services Act 2017 and for connected purposes be read a second time. Those in favour? (Members: 3040 Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Clerk: The Crimes and Miscellaneous Provisions (Amendment) Act 2022.

Crimes and Miscellaneous Provisions (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Committee Stage and Third Reading to be taken at this sitting

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): I beg to give notice that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken 3045 today, if all hon. Members agree.

Mr Speaker: Do all hon. Members agree that the Committee Stage and Third Reading of the Bill be taken today? (Members: Aye.)

COMMITTEE STAGE AND THIRD READING

Clerk: Committee Stage and Third Reading. The Hon. the Chief Minister. 3050

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to move that the House should resolve itself into Committee to consider the following Bill clause by clause: the Admiralty Waters and Naval Base (Gibraltar) Bill 2022, the Immigration, Asylum and Refugee (Amendment) Bill 2022, the Gibraltar National Park Bill 2021 and the Crimes and Miscellaneous Provisions 3055 (Amendment) Bill 2022.

In Committee of the whole House

Admiralty Waters and Naval Base (Gibraltar) Bill 2022 –
Clauses considered and approved

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to designate Admiralty Waters and to regulate activities, operations and vessel movements in relation to such waters, and the approaches thereto; to designate an area as His Majesty's Naval Base Gibraltar; to provide for the appointment of a King's Harbour Master; and for matters connected thereto. 3060

Clauses 1 to 17.

Mr Chairman: Clauses 1 to 17 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The Schedule.

3065 Mr Chairman: The Schedule stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: The long title stands part of the Bill.

Immigration, Asylum and Refugee (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Clauses considered and approved

3070 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to amend the Immigration, Asylum and Refugee Act to allow for the issuing of a permit of residence for a period of time not exceeding 12 months to persons enrolled at the University of Gibraltar and expand on what would constitute comprehensive sickness cover in relation to students.

Clauses 1 to 3.

3075 Mr Chairman: Clauses 1 to 3 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

3080 Mr Chairman: The long title stands part of the Bill.

Gibraltar National Park Bill 2021 –
Clauses considered and approved with amendments

Clerk: A Bill for an Act to make provision for the Gibraltar National Park and the establishment of a Gibraltar National Park Coordination Board; and for connected purposes.

3085 Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Chairman, just to formally, in this part of the proceedings, bring notice to the House of my letters of 23rd November 2022 and 18th January 2023, which amend the original Bill.

3090 Mr Chairman: Are the official Opposition and the lady content with the amendments circulated on 19th January 2023 and 23rd November 2022? Content, yes?

Clerk: Clauses 1 to 3.

Mr Chairman: Clauses 1 to 3 stand part of the Bill.

3095 Clerk: Clauses 4 to 6.

Mr Chairman: Clauses 4 to 6 stand part of the Bill.

3100 Clerk: Clauses 7 to 9.

Mr Chairman: Clauses 7 to 9 stand part of the Bill.

Clerk: Clause 10.

3105 Mr Chairman: I think clause 10 has been amended, and that should read clause 9. Clause 9 as amended stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: The Schedule.

3110 Mr Chairman: The Schedule, again as amended, stands part of the Bill.

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: The long title, as amended, stands part of the Bill.

Crimes and Miscellaneous Provisions (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Clauses considered and approved with amendments

3115 Clerk: A Bill for an Act to provide for the revival of the common law offence of conspiracy to defraud; to amend the Crimes Act 2011, the Legal Services Act 2017 and for connected purposes.

Mr Chairman: There are amendments which were circulated by the Hon. Minister on 16th March. Are the hon. Members of the official Opposition and the lady content? Right.

3120

Clerk: Clauses 1 to 5.

Mr Chairman: Clauses 1 to 5 stand part of the Bill.

3125

Clerk: The long title.

Mr Chairman: The long title stands part of the Bill.

Admiralty Waters and Naval Base (Gibraltar) Bill 2022;
Immigration, Asylum and Refugee (Amendment) Bill 2022; Gibraltar National Park Bill 2021;
Crimes and Miscellaneous Provisions (Amendment) Bill 2022 –
Third Reading approved: Bills passed

Clerk: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

3130 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to report that the Admiralty Waters and Naval Base (Gibraltar) Bill 2022, the Immigration, Asylum and Refugee (Amendment) Bill 2022, the Gibraltar National Park Bill 2021 and the Crimes and Miscellaneous Provisions (Amendment) Bill 2022 have been considered in Committee and agreed to with some amendments, and I now move that they be read a third time and passed.

Mr Speaker: I now put the question, which is that the Admiralty Waters and Naval Base (Gibraltar) Bill 2022, the Immigration, Asylum and Refugee (Amendment) Bill 2022, the Gibraltar National Park Bill 2021 as amended and the Crimes and Miscellaneous Provisions (Amendment) Bill 2022 as amended be read a third time and passed.

3140 Those in favour of the Admiralty Waters and Naval Base (Gibraltar) Bill 2022? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Those in favour of the Immigration, Asylum and Refugee (Amendment) Bill 2022? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

3145 Those in favour of the Gibraltar National Park Bill 2021? (Some Members: Aye.) The official Opposition is abstaining and the hon. Lady is voting in favour. Therefore, the Bill is carried.

Those in favour of the Crimes and Miscellaneous Provisions (Amendment) Bill 2022? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Carried.

Procedural –
Circulation of Estimates of Expenditure to Members

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I am grateful to Members for the Bills that they have supported, and disappointed in respect of their abstentions but not surprised.

3150 I now have the honour to move that the House should adjourn. Given that this is the adjournment before we get to the Easter break and the end of the financial year, there is a formula of words that I know you will have to share with us. Before I do that, I would just say that I look forward to coming back to the House in May. By then, spring will have sprung and I do hope that other things will also have come to a new life.

Mr Speaker: Before I propose the adjournment, as hon. Members are aware, it is a requirement under section 69(1) of the Constitution that the Estimates of Expenditure for the next financial year be circulated to hon. Members on a confidential basis not later than 30th April. Since the House is now not scheduled to meet until May, I am proposing that the provisions of the Constitution will be deemed to have been met if the estimates are circulated to all hon. Members before the end of April. This is what we have been doing for the last few years, so I propose that it should be the case again this year. Is that agreed?

3160

Members: Aye.

Adjournment

3165 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): I move that the House should now adjourn, Mr Speaker, sine die.

Mr Speaker: I now propose the question, which is that this House do now adjourn sine die.

3170 I now put the question, which is that this House do now adjourn sine die. Those in favour? (Members: Aye.) Those against? Passed.

The House will now adjourn sine die.

The House adjourned at 7.58 p.m.

CONFIRMATION OF MINUTES

Clerk: Meeting of Parliament, Tuesday, 23rd May 2023.

Order of Proceedings: (i) Oath of Allegiance; (ii) Confirmation of Minutes – the Minutes of the last meeting of Parliament, which was held on 15th and 16th March 2023.

5

Mr Speaker: May I sign the Minutes as correct?

Members: Aye.

Mr Speaker signed the Minutes.

COMMUNICATIONS FROM THE CHAIR

Challenge to Speaker's authority and suggestion of impartiality by Hon. R M Clinton – Clarification by Mr Speaker

Clerk: (iii) Communications from the Chair – the Hon. Mr Speaker.

10

Mr Speaker: On 20th April 2023, in the course of an interview on a Viewpoint programme on GBC, the Hon. Daniel Feetham was asked to comment on an incident which took place in Parliament on 26th November 2022. This related to an accusation by the Hon. Roy Clinton that I had not been completely impartial when dealing with an expression used by the Hon. Sir Joe Bossano – ‘Well, look, he can either believe it or he can lump it’ – when answering a supplementary question posed by the Hon. Damon Bossino. For the sake of completeness, I shall now proceed to inform Parliament of all the facts of this matter, so that it can be included for the record in Hansard.

15

Given the very serious nature of the Hon. Roy Clinton's accusation, I discussed the matter personally with the Speaker of the House of Commons, Sir Lindsay Hoyle, and it was proposed that I should refer this to his legal counsel. I provided the relevant extract from Hansard. A reply was received on 19th December 2022 as follows:

20

1. In general, I do not think the phrase ‘he can lump it’, if used in the House of Commons, would ordinarily be viewed as unparliamentary and warranting intervention by the Chair. In this instance, it appears that the Member who used the phrase had already tried various other means of making his point and resorted to this as perhaps an inelegant but not necessarily unparliamentary way of driving home his point.
2. I can see nothing in Mr Speaker Farrell's response which could be considered out of order. He is apparently trying to explain the context in which the comment was made, no doubt in an effort to reduce tensions in the Chamber, and his comments about Members are respectful and measured. He does not appear to be taking a side in the substantive issue under discussion.

3. While it is orderly for a Member to raise a point of order seeking clarification about a decision or ruling from the Chair, it is not for Members to challenge the authority of the Speaker, and in particular the Speaker's impartiality should not be questioned. Reflections upon the character or actions of the Speaker may be punished as breaches of privilege. Erskine May says that reflections on the character of the Speaker or accusations of partiality in the discharge of their duties have attracted the penal powers of the Commons.

25 Upon receipt of this advice from the House of Commons, I opted to deal with the matter internally. I spoke to hon. Members Clinton and Bossino in the presence of the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition behind the Speaker's Chair.

Code of Conduct for Members of the Gibraltar Parliament and Ministerial Code, amendments and revisions – Ruling by Mr Speaker

Mr Speaker: For my second intervention, on 15th March 2023 the Hon. Roy Clinton raised a point of order and sought a ruling in connection with the laying on the table by the Hon. the Chief Minister of two documents, namely the Code of Conduct for Members of the Gibraltar Parliament and the Ministerial Code.

30 The Hon. Roy Clinton's argument centred on his view that under Standing Order 12, the tabling of such documents was not the appropriate mechanism for their formal adoption and that this should be done by resolution of the House. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition, in supporting the hon. Member's position, pointed to the relevance of sections 36 and 39 of the Constitution.

35 The Hon. Roy Clinton recognised that the Hon. the Chief Minister had, on reflection, changed his position, and this subsequently led to a motion being moved the following day, giving effect by way of resolution to the Code of Conduct for Members of the Gibraltar Parliament. This procedure was not applied in respect of the Ministerial Code. In coming to his decision, the Hon. the Chief Minister had relied on the recommendations made in the Report to Parliament on Democratic and Parliamentary Reform of January 2013. At my request, the Hon. Roy Clinton wrote 40 to me, setting out the arguments in support of his request for a ruling. I provided the Hon. the Chief Minister with a copy of such.

In considering this matter, I have looked into the various procedures followed in the House in the past and the current practice in the House of Commons.

45 On 19th April 1979, several amendments to Standing Rules and Orders were approved by resolution of the House. On 31st October 1979, the House approved by motion the report of a Select Committee which contained recommendations for the creation of a Register of Members' Interests. On 2nd March 2007, revised Standing Rules and Orders were approved by resolution of the House following the coming into operation of the new Constitution. On 15th February 2013, the Report to Parliament on Democratic and Parliamentary Reform was tabled. It contained a 50 number of recommendations, including two which referred to the Code of Conduct for Members of Parliament and the Ministerial Code. In the case of the former, it was recommended that a code should be drafted and that Parliament should determine its introduction by resolution. In the case of the latter, it was recommended that a review of the Code should be conducted and that it should be drawn up along the lines applicable to Ministers in the United Kingdom and that it
55 should be kept under periodical review.

The position in the House of Commons in the context of the Codes is as follows. The Code of conduct for Members of Parliament is owned by the House in the sense that it is formally agreed by the House, and the House as a whole has to approve changes to it. By contrast, the Ministerial Code is not owned by Parliament. It is the responsibility of the Prime Minister and is approved by 60 the Prime Minister. It is not laid before Parliament, although the Code and its enforceability has been debated in the House of Commons.

In view of the foregoing, I rule that (1) amendments to or the revision of the Code of Conduct for Members of the Gibraltar Parliament and (2) amendments to or the revision of the Standing Rules and Orders of the Gibraltar Parliament can only be given effect by resolution of the House 65 after presentation of the appropriate motion.

In respect of the Ministerial Code, if I were to follow the procedure in the House of Commons and rule that the Code is a matter for the Hon. the Chief Minister, this would conflict with section 11 of the Code, which states that the Ministerial Code shall be subject to annual review by the Gibraltar Parliament. I therefore rule that changes to the Ministerial Code should be treated 70 in the same way as for the Code of Conduct for Members of the Gibraltar Parliament.

That ends my interventions.

Tribute to Ernest Britto

Clerk: The Hon. the Chief Minister.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, thank you, as ever, for those rulings on various 75 matters.

Before we begin today's session, I rise in sadness to pay tribute to the late Ernest Britto. Ernest, as those of us who had the pleasure of knowing him well knew, was a man of many talents. Although he is, of course, best known to us in this House for his time in Gibraltar politics, hon. Members will know that Mr Britto also enjoyed a long and successful military career. I think in the 80 old days we used to call him the hon. and gallant Mr Britto as a result. Following that very successful military career, Ernest sought and obtained a seat in this House in 1988 with the AACR, and then he became a Minister from 1996 with the GSD until 2011. He held various portfolios, including the portfolios for health, the environment and the other thing that was very close to his heart, sport.

In his younger years, Ernest was also an avid sportsman and, as a result of his military career perhaps, he discovered a talent for rifle shooting and went on to represent Gibraltar at the 1978 and 1982 Commonwealth Games. Indeed, he earned the happy moniker, in one of Gibraltar's 85 weeklies, of 'Ernestito mata monos' because he was charged, whilst he was a member of the Royal Gibraltar Regiment, with the shooting of apes when the numbers were getting too large and the regiment was in charge of that. He and I often enjoyed referring to that moniker behind the 90 Speaker's Chair when we were enjoying coffee or tea in the afternoon. In 1988 he was also elected the President of the Gibraltar Target Shooting Association and President of the Gibraltar Commonwealth Games Association.

But beyond all of those achievements in this House and outside of this House, if there is one 95 quality that I will remember Ernest Britto for, it is his humanity and his friendship, because across the floor of the House, when I was first elected and I was starting to do this adversarial thing that we call politics, I found in Ernest Britto a friend and somebody who was always ready to extend the hand of his experience to help along somebody who was on the opposite side but with whom he could get along. That non-partisan nature is what I think makes Ernest Britto somebody who 100 will be kindly and well-remembered across the floor of the House, across the political divide. I know that if Juan Carlos Perez were still with us he would be referring to Ernest Britto as a friend, and I cannot think of one more dyed in the wool of one side or the other, but both of them people who reached across and had friendships across the floor of the House, and that must be a man's greatest quality.

105 And so, on behalf of His Majesty's Government of Gibraltar and the people of Gibraltar, I now, in this place, once again express my most heartfelt and sincere condolences to Ernest's wife

Madeleine and to his children Germaine and Keith, as well to as all his grandchildren and his many family and friends. If I may say so, Mr Speaker, I thought that Germaine's tribute in the Cathedral on the occasion of the funeral was extraordinarily moving.

110 Mr Speaker, after tributes from other Members of the House, I invite the House to observe a minute's silence in Mr Britto's memory. (Banging on desks)

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

115 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, on behalf of the Members of the Opposition, I associate myself with the remarks of the Chief Minister.

Ernest was not just a colleague but a friend of mine and of many Members on this side of the House, and indeed Members on that side of the House. He was not just a politician; he was a politician, a military man and a sportsman and excelled in all those fields. He always liked to say, 120 when we were Members of the House together, that he was the only Member of the House who was honourable and gallant, and indeed he was a gallant politician as well as gallant because of his military career.

I rise with a mark of sadness, not just noting Ernest's passing but noting that he is now the third member of the 1996 team I served in who has regrettably passed, after the late Bernard Linares 125 and the late Hubert Corby. Years pass and it takes its toll on humanity. Ernest suffered, as his family did, towards the end of his years because of his condition, and anyone who had engagement with Ernest as a friend and colleague felt that suffering, which his family did much more closely, of course.

In politics he was one of the original band of people who came together after 1992 to build the platform that led to the GSD succeeding in the 1996 election. He served as deputy leader of the party between 1992 and 1995. In government, he served in several ministerial posts, as the Chief Minister has said, and excelled in all of them. His particular love of sport showed every time he had to do something ministerial in the sporting field, as indeed was marked in Germaine's lovely tribute to him in the Cathedral, as the Chief Minister has said.

135 Certainly we join the Members of the Government in offering our condolences and reflecting on his death, offering our condolences to Madeleine and all his family.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. the Deputy Chief Minister.

140 Deputy Chief Minister (Hon. Dr J J Garcia): Mr Speaker, I had the pleasure and privilege of serving with Ernest Britto in this House from 1999 when I was first elected until 2011 when he retired. I was very saddened to learn of his passing because he was in many ways a real parliamentarian, what you would expect a parliamentarian to be, and somebody who behaved in that way certainly in all the dealings that I had with him.

145 As the House knows, he was an ardent supporter of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, and indeed on two occasions he served on the committee of the international board of that organisation. In fact, in 1999, just a few weeks after I was first elected, and probably because nobody else wanted to go, I ended up travelling with him to the Caribbean, to a Commonwealth Parliamentary Association conference. I think that is where we hit it off and where we became, I would like to think, good friends. I remember he rescued us from a large creature that suddenly appeared one day. His military training, I think, helped to fend off the advances of this particular large, reptile creature that appeared in the doorway of our hotel one morning.

150 He was always polite, helpful, courteous and, I would like to think, a consensus politician, somebody who wanted to get things done by agreement rather than by conflict. In that role, he would sometimes call me and we would have discussions on the phone about issues which were 155 current. I valued those discussions; as I said, I had just been elected to this House. He was, as the Chief Minister has rightly said, a very human face to politics.

I would like to express my sincere condolences to his wife and to his family. May he rest in peace.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, thank you.

165 It is with a heavy heart and profound respect that we bid farewell to Ernest Britto, a stalwart of Gibraltar politics and a former MP of the AACR and then the Gibraltar Social Democrats.

Ernest Britto will be remembered for his tenacity and his political courage. He rose to prominence during a period of significant upheaval and change for Gibraltar in the late 1980s and 1990s. It was a time when our land was in disarray and grappling with socio-political and economic challenges, a time of tension and great polarisation in which being in opposition was only for the brave. Ernest Britto stepped forward in the spirit of service and embraced the responsibility to guide Gibraltar towards stability. His courage, like that of many of his peers, shone like a beacon during those tumultuous years, never shying away from making tough decisions or standing firm on principles that he believed would better Gibraltar. His unwavering commitment to serve was clear, a testament to his conviction and unyielding spirit. The contributions of his generation during those chaotic years are the bedrock upon which our current stability is founded.

Personally, I will always remember Ernest Britto with his charm and that twinkle in his eye, despite being rather unwell in the last years that I did see him.

180

Today, we stand united in grief but also in gratitude for Ernest Britto's life and legacy. As we remember him, let us also remember and strive to emulate his courage, his service and his deep love of Gibraltar.

185

I extend my condolences to his beloved wife, children and grandchildren. May he rest in peace. Thank you.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Minister Cortes.

185

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I knew Ernest Britto in another context, as he was Minister for Environment for quite a number of years when I worked in that field. I was, at the same time, working with him as Director of the Botanic Gardens and adviser to him, and also running GONHS and giving him grief on some issues, but the relationship was always excellent. He always respected my opinion, my point of view, and we worked very well together and made a lot of progress during the years when he was Minister for the Environment.

190

195

When towards the end of his political career I decided to stand for election, he actually, in a subtle way, as Ernest would do, encouraged me and was one of the first to congratulate me when I was elected as a Minister, even though I stood against his party. But that is the kind of man Ernest Britto was.

200

I just want to add my own personal experience to the other words spoken in this House in expressing my own personal condolences, because we spent a lot of time together, working together, and it was a pleasure and an honour to do that.

205

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Edwin Reyes.

Hon. E J Reyes: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

205

It must be really touching for Ernest's family to hear the nice words being said about him, especially because it has come through straight away that everyone coincides in having recognised those qualities in Ernest.

I first ended up having quite a close personal and professional relationship with Ernest prior to any interest he may have expressed in politics. We go back to 1974, which is almost 50 years ago,

210 when I first joined what at the time was the Gibraltar Regiment, now a royal regiment, and Ernest was already a captain, already the adjutant of the regiment. He also served as an honorary ADC to His Excellency the Governor, and I think he did that in respect of successive Governors. Ernest certainly came across as someone who knew his position of authority within the military ranks, but it did not deter him from stretching out his hand of friendship, like the Deputy Chief Minister 215 has said, in his way of offering advice, and he would rather resolve things through mutual discussion and agree to disagree, if need be at the end of the day, but always in a gentlemanlike manner.

He was always well noted for his ability in sport, not only, as the Chief Minister has rightly said, his achievements in being Gibraltar's top shooter and therefore representative in successive 220 Commonwealth Games, but he also made up part of the team of the Gibraltar Regiment playing hockey in the old N.O.P. grounds when it used to be tarmac, and even there he always had advice to give on how to get the best effect on the ball on a hard tarmac type of surface.

That friendship, that closeness with Ernest, eventually led to ... I do not know whether he bribed me or coerced me or not, but he had an interest in amateur dramatics and we ended up 225 performing on at least three or four occasions in the annual drama festival, in which Ernest was always an outstanding actor. I do not think he quite made the top prize of best actor that year, but certainly he was very much in the running and certainly was a top performer and had a leading role in those plays on more than one occasion at the drama festival. Whatever certificate I may still have at home that says I was part of a winning play, I would not say it is to be shared equally; 230 I would say that more than 50% of that goes to someone like Ernest for not only his own personal performance, but he managed to get the best, by hook or by crook, out of anybody else who was participating in any event with him.

With those happy memories of regimental days, plus all those happy memories that have been expressed across the floor of his parliamentary days, his family can continue to be rightly proud 235 of him. May we eventually, one day, meet together and go back on parade with Ernest leading at the front. The last honorary position he held was as president of the Gibraltar branch of the British Legion, so all those who have ever had to wear a military uniform will certainly be called to parade and be inspected by Ernest, who I am sure will continue to extend his hand of friendship.

Thank you, Mr Speaker.

240

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Daniel Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, I too associate myself with all the words that hon. Gentlemen and also the hon. Lady to my left have said about Ernest Britto.

245 We served together from 2007 to 2011 in government. He had been in government for 16 years. He could very easily have retired and simply left politics in 2011, but he opted to stay with the GSD as part of the GSD executive; in fact, he was the Chairman of the GSD. I found him phenomenally helpful and encouraging during my time as Leader of the Opposition and I personally will never forget that.

250 One of the things that has not been mentioned is that Ernest Britto was somebody who had a real sense of humour. There was one incident that was probably his favourite, because when I spoke to him he would often refer back to it, which shows the character of the man, that he did not mind looking at himself and also poking fun at himself. He was not the kind of guy who would take himself seriously. It was the incident that occurred when we were in government, when after 255 the session had been adjourned he asked who was going to be attending the dinner for the GSB, I think it was. Luis Montiel said, 'I am going to be attending,' and Ernest Britto said, 'Well, don't let Peter find out because 'te va cortar el cocote,' or words to that effect. What he had not realised was that the microphones were still on and it had been broadcast to people in Gibraltar. He would often refer back to that and have a laugh about it, and I think that is the measure of the kind of 260 individual we are talking about – not somebody who was afraid of also laughing at himself.

May I also join with other Members of this House to offer my condolences to his family and all his friends.

265 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, if others have finished their tributes, I would now invite the House to observe a minute's silence in honour of Ernst Britto.

Members observed a minute's silence.

PAPERS TO BE LAID

Clerk: (iv) Petitions; (v) Announcements; (vi) Papers to be laid – the Hon. the Chief Minister.

270 Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to lay on the table the Gibraltar Police Authority Annual Policing Plan for 2023 and 2024.

Mr Speaker: Ordered to lie.

275 Clerk: The Hon. the Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education.

Minister for the Environment, Sustainability, Climate Change and Education (Hon. Prof. J E Cortes): Mr Speaker, I have the honour to lay on the table the Heritage and Antiquities Advisory Council Parliamentary Report for 2018-19, 2020, 2021 and 2022.

280 Mr Speaker: Ordered to lie.

Clerk: The Hon. the Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port.

285 Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): I have the honour to lay on the table the Audited Accounts of the Gibraltar Port Authority for the year ended 31st March 2016.

Mr Speaker: Ordered to lie.

Questions for Oral Answer

BUSINESS, TOURISM AND THE PORT

Q406/2023 Airport toilets – Repairs

290 Clerk: (vii) Reports of Committees; (viii) Answers to Oral Questions.
Question 406/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: When will the toilets at the Airport be fixed?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business and Tourism.

295 Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, the short answer is that the toilets are not broken, nor have they been. To my knowledge, there have not been reports in the media or any written complaints regarding broken toilets. We check these daily and if any faults are found they are rectified as soon as possible. If the hon. Member can tell me which specific toilets he is referring to, I will be happy to have them checked out.

300 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I am happy to answer the hon. Member's question, although I am the one who is meant to be asking the questions.

305 The toilets that are broken are in the Airport. That is the only information I have. I have not seen them myself. It is information that has been reliably passed on to me by various sources. Can I ask him, therefore, to check his facts? I think he will establish that he is wrong and in fact the toilets are currently broken. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister)

Hon. V Daryanani: Absolutely. When he asked the question, he said he was – (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) First of all, let me tell him there are 19 separate toilets in the Airport. I am sure they are not all broken, and from the last information we had, none were broken. If there was some sort of fault in one of them it would have been fixed, but if there was any major fault it would have been brought to my attention. When they are fixed, they are fixed. They do not ask the Minister whether they should fix a toilet; they just get on with it and fix it.

315 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, he may deal with this matter flippantly, as he deals with most of the matters that are raised across the floor of the House by me. Is he telling me that of the 19 toilets that he says the Airport has ...? I sense that he is qualifying his answers slightly. I ask him, therefore, to confirm that he is saying that as the position currently stands ...

320 At the end of the day, this is an important entry and exit point for Gibraltar, and he is presiding over entry points and exit points in Gibraltar. The cruise terminal is a case in point and the Frontier entrance is a case in point, which are in, quite frankly, a dilapidated state and it is an indictment on his running of his Ministry.

Let me ask him this: can he confirm to me here and now that he is telling us that all 19 toilets are in proper working order and do not require to be fixed?

325 Hon. V Daryanani: Yes, sir.

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Evidence [inaudible] out of order.

330 Mr Speaker: Next question. (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) Next question, please.

Hon. Chief Minister: No, you said you were reliably informed.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

335 Hon. D J Bossino: Based on evidence, hence why it is reliable.

Hon. Chief Minister: [inaudible] provided.

340 Mr Speaker: Next question!

Clerk: Question number –

Mr Speaker: Yes.

345 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, the Hon. Mr Bossino is saying from a sedentary position that the Minister is misleading the House and that he has information to show that this fundamental issue, which is the state of repair of the 19 toilets at Gibraltar Airport, is not correct. Given that it is now 45 minutes after the House started and we have started to deal with this issue, if the hon.
350 Member has evidence to show that the information provided to the Minister, which the Minister is providing to the House, is incorrect, would he care to share it with us, or is it that he has no such information?

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, if the hon. Member is misleading the House, an appropriate motion will be brought to this House to that effect (Interjection) with the evidence in support.
355 This is a very important issue. It seems that the Hon. the Chief Minister who leads the Government is taking the same attitude as the Minister. I am not surprised by his attitude.

Mr Speaker: Right, that is enough. (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) Please resume your seat.
Next question.

360 Clerk: Question 407/2023. (Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister) The Hon. D J Bossino.
(Interjection by Hon. Chief Minister)

Hon. D J Bossino: Well, urinals at the bus stop.

365 Mr Speaker: Please, I ask the Chief Minister to calm down and also the hon. Damon Bossino.
Next question.

Q407/2023
Met Office strike –
Measures to prevent closure of Airport

Hon. D J Bossino: I will take your advice, Mr Speaker.
What measures, if any, can be introduced by the Government to prevent a repeat closure of 370 Gibraltar Airport as a result of a Met Office strike?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business and Tourism.

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, the Met Office 375 is contracted by the Ministry of Defence to provide meteorological services at Gibraltar Airport.
The Government, by means of the RAF Gibraltar Commercial User Agreement, has a contract with the MoD to provide aeronautical services at Gibraltar Airport.

As can be seen by this explanation, the Government has no direct contractual agreement with the Met Office and thus has very little scope to be able to influence matters in this respect.
380 However, the Government has reminded the MoD of its contractual obligations as a result of the Commercial User Agreement. The Government has and will continue to withhold payments due to the MoD for services under the Agreement on all days that services are not provided.

The Government has raised the issue with UK Ministers, as well as with the Commander British Forces.

385 Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, in exchanges that we have had across the floor of the House in the past in relation to this issue as a result of other issues that have provoked the closure of the Airport, the Hon. Chief Minister has stood up and provided responses and replies which are very similar to the one that the hon. Member has just provided.

390 Just by way of clarification, is it the position of the Gibraltar Government, as a result of the contractual arrangements that it has with the MoD, that each time the Airport is shut – for whatever reason, including on this occasion a strike by the Met Office, which was a UK-wide strike as I understand it, which had a ripple effect on Gibraltar – to withhold the fees that are paid under that commercial arrangement? Is that the position?

395

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Yes, Mr Speaker.

Hon. D J Bossino: And other than that lever that can be pulled by the Government, and he also said by way, presumably, of making representations to government ministers, is there any other thing that the Government has within its disposal to exert pressure so that this type of situation does not repeat itself?

400 It seems that for one reason or another – and I understand that there are myriad different reasons and causes – Gibraltar Airport has been shut more often than not. At least on an anecdotal basis, that is something that people are telling me and we can see it from the reporting that we are getting. It just seems to be that Gibraltar Airport, for one reason or another, is being shut. Is there anything else that the Gibraltar Government can do to try to prevent a repetition of this situation?

Hon. Chief Minister: No, Mr Speaker, because the Government is not all powerful and we do not control the Airport.

410 It is absolutely to mislead the House to say that the Airport has been shut more often than not. Those are the words that the hon. Gentleman used. The Airport may have been shut on three or four days in the past 180. That is not more often than not, but of course if a parliamentarian gets up and says that Gibraltar Airport has been shut more often than not, it is not helpful to attract airlines to Gibraltar Airport, especially if it is just four days out of 180. So what the hon. Gentleman needs to reflect on is whether he wants, simply for the purposes of trying to catch a headline in the morning, to do permanent damage to Gibraltar Airport and our ability to operate more airlines. If he does, as he indicated a moment ago by his actions that he wants to ... whether he can continue to do so.

415 In terms of the substance, we do not handle Met Office services, we do not handle air traffic control services, and in fact, as is well known, it is only possible for an airfield of the characteristics of Gibraltar Airport to operate because it is an RAF airport subject to the control of the Military Aviation Authority and not a civilian airport subject to the civilian aviation authorities. Under the Gibraltar Constitution, the Government of Gibraltar has no responsibility for military matters, only for civilian matters. Therein lies the answer to the hon. Gentleman's question, an answer that I wager he knew before he asked.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, is it always going to be the case that when we are asking questions from this side of the House ...? The hon. Member always seems to suggest that I act in any way which is not on a bona fide basis. If it is when I ask the hon. Member about his trips to Morocco, he tells me to stop because it is not in the national interest. If it is when I ask something which is highly topical and affects directly our economy, he says I had better shut up because, if not, it may have an effect in terms of new airlines coming to Gibraltar. Or if I say something it may have an impact on his negotiations with the EU in relation to Gibexit. Come on, let's get real.

430 Let me ask him this in relation to the substance of this issue, in relation to this particular incident, which was the Met Office strike in the UK. According to press reports, in the past when this has happened, Gibraltar Airport has been safeguarded in terms of closure because Met Office personnel have been able to come to Gibraltar and man Gibraltar's Airport and therefore allow flights to continue, because at the end of the day Gibraltar Airport, in the scheme of things, in terms of the wider UK, is a relatively small airport when compared to the London airports, like Gatwick and Heathrow. So why is it that in this case we were not able to provide that type of service? Have they made inquiries of the MoD in relation to this? And can we get a bit more belt-and-braces assurances from the MoD that we get that type of service should there be a future strike of the Met Office?

445 Can I ask the Minister to respond on this occasion? I see that once again the Chief Minister is responding on his behalf.

Hon. Chief Minister: I am not going to respond on behalf of the Minister, Mr Speaker, I am going to respond on my own behalf for a simple reason. The person who was the Chief Minister of Gibraltar when he joined that party, Sir Peter Caruana, took responsibility for something called the Customer and User Agreement, which is signed by the Chief Minister of Gibraltar with the MoD, and when it is reviewed it comes to me for review. Therefore, all of the things that the hon. Gentleman is raising relate to my responsibilities, not the Hon. Minister's, because the Airport is in part touristic but it is also a fundamental artery used for Gibraltar more widely. And so the Airport, qua airport, is not the responsibility of the Minister. It is not just a touristic asset. It is an asset which successive Governments of Gibraltar, including the GSD when they were in government – indeed, they were the first to sign the Customer and User Agreement – decided should be something that should be dealt with out of 6 Convent Place. So all of the issues relating to the Met Office strike and to the air traffic controllers' issues relate to my responsibility and my interchanges with the CBF. That is just to deal, Mr Speaker, with the sideswipe that he makes at the end, before he sits down, that I am going to answer on behalf of the Minister and not on my own behalf because this is my responsibility, and he is now taking it beyond tourism – first of all.

Second, of course CBF in Gibraltar, the Government in Gibraltar, were both seeking to ensure that if it were possible we would have Met Office staff flown to Gibraltar to ensure that the Airport in Gibraltar could remain open. It was not possible and there were a number of operational reasons why it was not possible beyond any pressing that could be done by a Government of Gibraltar. That is to say if the alleged incompetents that are today in government, as the hon. Gentleman sees it, had been replaced by the alleged Senecas sitting opposite us, doing the magnificent job that they will allegedly do if they are ever in government, they would have had the same success in seeking to bring over Met Office staff to Gibraltar to cover on this occasion, for reasons which I cannot disclose across the floor of the House, but I am happy to tell him later because he will know, as I have just told him and he will remember, that this is an RAF airport. The RAF operates a number of different airports and there are a number of different operational imperatives applicable in respect of different airports at different times. Needless to say, there are many different theatres of military operation, not all of which are fed through Gibraltar at a particular time. On that basis, it was not possible on this occasion for us to obtain Met Office staff to come to Gibraltar to continue the operations of Gibraltar Airport. If it had been humanly possible with the advocacy of CBF in Gibraltar and the Government of Gibraltar – of whatever partisan complexion, because I am sure that all of us would have acted in the same way – then the Airport would have remained open, as it has in fact remained open more often than not.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: No, please resume your seat.

485 Does the Hon. Leader of the Opposition wish to ...? Yes.

Hon. K Azopardi: If I may, can I just ask, because the Hon. the Chief Minister says they have other responsibilities in other air terminals and so on ...? It was reported at the time that this happened – or at least it was implicit in one of the reports – that the Met resources were somehow deployed from Gibraltar to concentrate on ensuring that Heathrow continued to work. In the discussions with the Government, was that an issue that came up and was verified in terms of what had happened? Is it that the resources were not deployed to other RAF terminals elsewhere, but rather to ensure that Heathrow in fact continued to work?

495 Hon. Chief Minister: That is not the information we had, Mr Speaker. We had the information about other RAF facilities.

500 Hon. K Azopardi: If I may, can I invite the Hon. Chief Minister to perhaps look at what was reported in the press on that issue? I believe it came from comments that had been made by the MoD itself. He may want to verify it in his discussions with the CBF, in particular to ensure that this does not happen again, that we are not just left lame, as it were, not because of military issues but rather because they are simply choosing to prefer other air terminals and not ours.

505 Hon. Chief Minister: Mr Speaker, when I saw that I took the matter up. I think it is an interpretation of how things have been expressed, but I have seen the source information and I am satisfied that the source information – not the commentary, the source information – is the information that is correct. I do not act on the basis of what I read in newspapers when I have the source information and I can see how things are being translated, or indeed, on some occasions, traduced.

510 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q408/2023
Cruise passenger tours to Spain –
Measures to prevent

Clerk: Question 408/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

515 Hon. D J Bossino: Does the Government plan to introduce any measures following the recent excursion to La Linea of cruise liner passengers on a vessel which had docked in Gibraltar?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business and Tourism.

520 Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, this tour for 20 cruise passengers was organised by a local cruise agent. The Government was not aware of this. We were not asked for permission and neither should they need to do so.

Since this came out publicly, I have spoken to the agents and expressed my concern. Their explanation was fair and I have asked to be kept abreast of these tours if there is any further interest.

525 Hon. D J Bossino: The hon. Member talks about the operator not having to seek the Government's consent – I think is the word he used – in relation to possible tours outside of Gibraltar, and I think he is absolutely right if the Government of Gibraltar should continue on the basis that the private sector should do more or less, within certain parameters, what it likes in order to earn profit. But then he talks about expressing a concern. The question really is what is 530 the Government's policy in relation to this? When he says he has a concern, what concern does he have? And if I may, Mr Speaker, how does he seek to address that concern? It could have been perfectly plausible for him to have said, 'I have no concern about this.' In fact, the Government could take the view that this is not necessarily a bad thing so long as the vessels dock in Gibraltar, but he said he has a concern in relation to this and I would ask him to expand on that, and what 535 concern, in fact, he does have.

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I am always concerned when a tourist comes to Gibraltar and does not spend all his time here. That is what I am referring to.

540 We need to look at the wider picture here. Insofar as this cruise company is concerned, they have four calls coming to Gibraltar. This is information that I am sure he has, because I am sure he read the article in the Chronicle on 5th May in which the actual agents said that there were four cruise calls and there was interest from them to have something different, in Spain. They had other events, held here in Gibraltar, and there were 20 passengers who decided they wanted to go to La Linea.

545 We have to look at it in many ways. The agent thinks not exceeding 90 passengers will go to Spain with those four cruise calls, but on the whole we will probably have 3,900 passengers coming to Gibraltar from ships that dock in Spain. This will happen at frontier towns because people come in and will want to perhaps go across and have a look at what else there is on offer. It is the same as somebody coming on a plane, deciding to stay in Gibraltar, spending five nights here but venturing to La Linea for one night's dinner. We cannot stop them from doing that. We cannot say, 'If you come to Gibraltar, you cannot go to La Linea for dinner.' But it is still concerning for me, because I would rather they stay in Gibraltar, so when I speak of concern, that is the concern I speak of.

555 Hon. D J Bossino: What the hon. Member is saying is that he has no concern whatsoever that on this occasion, or indeed on possible future occasions, Gibraltar will not be able to continue to provide a sufficiently attractive offering so that people who are on those vessels and dock in Gibraltar will want to come to see Gibraltar. At the end of the day, even if the hon. Member did absolutely no marketing, even if the hon. Member decided not to sell Gibraltar at all, people would still come here on the basis that it is the famous Rock of Gibraltar with all his historical sites and all the rest of it. Is he able to confirm that he has absolutely no concerns, because this is something which is within his remit and within the Government's remit in terms of – as I have said before, in debates with him over the television and in this House – sprucing up and cleaning up Gibraltar to ensure that Gibraltar continues to be the attractive place it should be?

Hon. V Daryanani: We are constantly making Gibraltar more attractive and we will continue to do so, Mr Speaker.

A Member: Hear, hear.

Mr Speaker: The Hon. Marlene Hassan Nahon.

Hon. Ms M D Hassan Nahon: Mr Speaker, just picking up from this interchange, I understand the reasons the Minister has explained about a frontier town perhaps always being attractive on the other side. There are questions that I have posed relating to the issue of litter and rubbish and how Gibraltar looks.

575

Can I just ask does the Ministry of Tourism actually explore and perhaps liaise with the Ministry of the Environment at all in terms of what other factors might just be leading to this exodus – for lack of a better word – of tourists visiting La Linea? Does it just close itself in and say, 'We're doing everything we can,' or do they actually talk and say, 'Look, there could be other reasons – can we all work together and try to clean up Gibraltar and do different things?' There are many complaints, in that area of Waterport, of the smell and the grime. Do they talk about this? Do they try to improve the product, at least?

580

585 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I have just said that we are continuously trying to improve the product and we are continuously trying to make sure that Gibraltar is clean. Let me tell the hon. Lady that there is absolutely no exodus whatsoever. We are talking about 20 people here. We have millions of people coming into Gibraltar from Spain. That is an exodus, but not 20 people going to La Linea for a meal.

590 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker –

Mr Speaker: No. Please resume your seat.
595 Next question. (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) No. Next question.

Q409/2023

Seatrade Cruise Global Conference in Miami – Delegation, cost, meetings, new business secured, duration

Clerk: Question 409/2023. The Hon. D J Bossino.

Hon. D J Bossino: Please provide the following details relating to the recent visit to the Seatrade Cruise Global Conference in Miami: (i) who compromised the Government's delegation; 600 (ii) the total cost of the trip, broken down into air travel costs, lodgings and entertainment;
(iii) who the Minister or any member of the delegation met at each event; (iv) what new business has been secured as a result of the trip; and (v) the duration of the trip.

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business and Tourism.
605

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, the duration of the trip was five days. We continue to engage with all cruise lines to increase calls and to try to extend the duration of their stay in Gibraltar. We also spoke to two new cruise lines who hope to launch in the coming years and made them aware of what Gibraltar offers.

610 The rest of the information requested by the hon. Member is in the public domain. I refer him to my press release dated 11th April 2023 and statistics on the Government website.

Hon. D J Bossino: Mr Speaker, I do have a copy of the press release that he refers to, and I will ask him some questions arising from that. I have not had access to the information which he says 615 is on the website. I will check it, and perhaps I may be able to ask questions arising from that at the next meeting of the House.

In relation to that last point, can I ask him when that information was uploaded?

Hon. V Daryanani: Before he asked the question, Mr Speaker – before I received the question.
620

Hon. D J Bossino: Okay, well, that is a matter of record. I think the information is set out as to when it was uploaded and that will be checked because it has been a fact that on previous occasions when we have filed questions the information has been uploaded and then the hon.
Members stand up and say that the information is publicly available. It has happened in the past.

625 Mr Speaker, the hon. Member in his statement states that he 'put forward our case for increased calls and set out our ambitions with the industry'. Can he be more specific rather than being so wordy and not coming up with specific proposals in relation to this area? What is his case and what are his ambitions?

630 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, in this press release [inaudible] we met 25 cruise lines, so we had 25 meetings. Does he really expect me to give him a blow by blow account of each and every meeting I had and what I had to say to the cruise lines? Does he expect me to tell him publicly what I discuss with other cruise lines? I have told him this before.

635 The thing is – and I say this with the greatest of respect to him – I know he likes to fight about everything, but that is not what I am here to do. My job is to sell Gibraltar, to do my best and bring as many cruise lines to Gibraltar ...

640 Having said that, what he needs to understand is that there is huge competition out there in the cruising sector. There are ports coming out from all over the place, ports that have had nothing to do with cruising before, but now they are in the business of cruising because they see that it is a lucrative business. We need to be out there selling Gibraltar constantly, constantly showing our vision, constantly showing what ambition we have, and I can tell him that is why ... I can only give a summary in a press release and I cannot give him a blow by blow account of 25 meetings that I held.

645 Hon. D J Bossino: The hon. Member, each time he opens his mouth, honestly just makes me more and more concerned about the direction of his Department in that area of policy – really, Mr Speaker. I have not asked for a blow by blow account of the supposed 25 meetings he has held. I do not want that. I have asked him simply for his case and the ambitions that he relayed to them, and his vision, at that meeting. He has come up with absolute shallow waffle, and that makes me very concerned.

650 Is he at least able to provide this House with information about the two new cruise liners that are coming, which he says he has managed to secure for Gibraltar? If not the names, is he able to give us an indication of their size in terms of passenger numbers and that type of thing, and when he expects these two new cruise liners that he boasts will be coming to Gibraltar Port?

655 Hon. V Daryanani: First of all, Mr Speaker, I never said that I have secured two new cruise lines. I refer him to the answer that I gave him: ‘We also spoke to two new cruise lines who hope to launch in the coming years and made them aware of what Gibraltar offers.’ He should retract that because I have at no point said that we have secured two new cruise lines.

660 My vision is set out in our manifesto of the last elections, which the people decided to vote on. That is for starters. I am working extremely hard, like I said, with our CEO, Mr Bossino, to make sure that Gibraltar has as many cruise lines as possible and extended hours of stay at our port.

665 Mr Speaker: Next question.

Hon. D J Bossino: I am not sure the hon. Member has –

Mr Speaker: I said – (Interjection by Hon. D J Bossino) Resume –

670 Hon. D J Bossino: I am not certain the hon. Member has answered the question.

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, he said he has not even read it.

675 Hon. D J Bossino: Oh, right, okay, yes.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q410/2023

OS35 –

Cost of clean-up operation and recovery of costs

Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, what is the cost of the pollution clean-up operation in respect of the OS35 to 10th May 2023, and can the Government update the House on the prospects of recovery of these costs?

680 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Business and Tourism.

Minister for Business, Tourism and the Port (Hon. V Daryanani): Mr Speaker, the Gibraltar Port Authority has accumulated a total cost of £7,132,641.10 to date in expenses in dealing with and responding to the 0535 incident. We have also received to date an initial payment of 685 £981,124.45 on account, and are aware that a separate payment has been made to the Gibraltar Supreme Court for the purpose of establishing a limitation fund. This separate payment into the Supreme Court and the use of these funds are all subject to a court case which is still ongoing. Due to that, I will not be making any further comment on the matter.

690 Hon. K Azopardi: Mr Speaker, can I ask how much the separate payment made into the Supreme Court ... what was the quantum of that?

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, the matter being subject to court proceedings, I would rather not make that across the floor of the House, but I am happy to speak to him behind the Speaker's 695 Chair and give him further detail.

Hon. K Azopardi: I will take up his offer. I assume there is no confidentiality in that, necessarily, but if it is subject to some confidentiality regime of the court proceedings, then of course we are happy to – Yes, I am happy to give way.
700

Chief Minister (Hon. F R Picardo): Mr Speaker, I tend to agree. I think that was a payment into court made on the basis of an order in open court, not in chambers, so I think it is shareable across the floor of the House.

705 Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, the figure received was £14.2 million.

Hon. K Azopardi: £14.2 million is the payment into court and the expenses are £7.1 million, so can I just ask ...? Hearing what the Minister has said – that there is that money in court and there is going to be a dispute, which he does not want to discuss, and I accept that and perhaps we can 710 have a word behind the Speaker's Chair about that – insofar as the £981,000 which has been paid, can I assume there was no dispute and it is accepted?

Hon. V Daryanani: Yes, that is correct. The amount that was paid was not in dispute and the £14.2 million is in dispute, and that is why there are court proceedings.

Hon. K Azopardi: Testing, if I may – is his preface that he would rather not discuss openly the court proceedings? And if he does not want to answer this question for that reason, then perhaps we can have a word behind the Speaker's Chair. Am I to glean from what he has said that the dispute concerns the entire sum that has been paid into court? Is the Government hopeful that 720 insofar as the £7.1 million ...? Let me rephrase the question so that he understands what I am asking. That is why I am hopefully not treading into those issues that he is reticent to tread into. Is the balance of the £7.1 million beyond the £981,000 that has been paid ...? Is all of that balance in dispute, or is he hopeful that some of the £7.1 million is not subject to whatever is going on in court?
725

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, I would rather discuss this with him behind the Speaker's Chair, because I feel it is a little bit delicate.

Hon. K Azopardi: Again, this would be searchable information, so perhaps this will not cause 730 difficulty: the parties to the dispute in court would be who?

Hon. V Daryanani: Mr Speaker, the parties are the two owners of the respective vessels and the Attorney General.

735 Mr Speaker: The Hon. Roy Clinton.

Hon. R M Clinton: Mr Speaker, thank you. I just want to ask two technical questions of the Minister. The first is what entity has paid the £7.1 million? Is it the Port Authority or the Government of Gibraltar, or some other entity? And secondly, the £7.1 million, has it been paid or is it an accrued cost?

740
Hon. Chief Minister: Can I clarify the question? The hon. Gentleman has asked who has paid the costs so far and who has made the payment into court? (Hon. R M Clinton: No.) No? So what is the second question?

745 Hon. R M Clinton: I wanted to know which entity or entities are making the payment or have made the payment or accrued the cost, and whether the cost is accrued or has been paid across already.

750 Hon. V Daryanani: This has been paid from an advanced account of the Government General Account.

Hon. R M Clinton: So they are paid?

755 Hon. V Daryanani: They are paid from an advanced account of the Government General Account.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

JUSTICE, EQUALITY AND PUBLIC STANDARDS AND REGULATIONS

Q411/2023

Domestic abuse manslaughter – Review of sentences

760 Clerk: Question 411/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: I refer to Question 28/2022 on the Lishman case and the recent changes to the law related to domestic abuse, will the Government also be conducting a review of sentences for manslaughter?

765 Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Standards.

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, yes, sir.

770 Hon. D A Feetham: And can she perhaps give some information to this House as to whether the review is under way or whether, alternatively, the review is to be undertaken?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, both. The hon. Gentleman will be aware that we recently made significant changes to legislation with respect to domestic abuse. That is what this 775 case was. This new legislation, as the hon. Gentleman knows – in fact, I once again thank the hon.

Gentleman for praising me on this piece of legislation – includes new offences relating to coercive and controlling behaviour. They are now new criminal offences and they will also include threats to disclose private sexual photographs and films with intent to cause distress, and strangulation or suffocation, and setting out that consent to serious harm for sexual gratification is not a 780 defence. So, in relation to the first part of my answer, those are changes in the context of domestic abuse cases that have already been made.

The hon. Gentleman may recall that last year in my Budget address I specifically said that I was commissioning some changes to criminal legislation, so that will also form part of that. In relation to the sentencing offences also committed by a perpetrator who is personally connected to the 785 victim, the hon. Gentleman needs to bear in mind that this will be considered initially by a working group that I have set up on domestic abuse and they will then advise and inform the wider review on criminal reform that I have just alluded to.

Hon. D A Feetham: Thank you to the Minister for that answer, but specifically in relation to 790 manslaughter, can she confirm that this specifically forms part of the review that is being undertaken? That is one question.

If I ask the last one ... I will just wrap it up in one. Does she also not agree with me that given the special circumstances of a small community like Gibraltar, where those circumstances may be different to the circumstances and experiences of a large country like the United Kingdom and 795 how they deal with those who are found guilty of manslaughter, we should not be slavishly following UK law in relation to sentences?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I agree with the hon. Gentleman in that when it comes to Gibraltar, some things that we do will be different to the UK. However, the courts have always 800 expressed a desire that we align ourselves to the UK when it comes to sentencing practice.

Sentencing is a matter for the courts. The hon. Gentleman knows that sentencing involves wide parameters and when a court makes a decision in relation to sentencing, it will take into account the facts and circumstances of the case, and it is for the court to decide where in those parameters an appropriate sentence will fall. The hon. Gentleman will know, obviously, what the maximum 805 sentence for manslaughter is, so it is not an issue of reviewing the sentencing for the offence.
Ultimately, it is a matter that is in the hands of the court because the sentencing powers already exist.

Hon. D A Feetham: I apologise, Mr Speaker – it just arises specifically out of that answer 810 because of course, at risk of not being flavour of the month in that particular part of Main Street, in the Supreme Court, the reality of the situation is that it is for elected politicians – in other words, those who are elected to this House by the people of Gibraltar – to set the policy, and it is for the courts to apply that policy. That is the way the system has always worked. That is the way the system works in the future. Therefore, if she – the hon. Lady; I apologise, I did not mean any 815 disrespect. If the hon. Lady agrees with us that something potentially has gone wrong with the Lishman case and that perhaps ... I am not suggesting that the law ought to be changed, but that it certainly ought to be reviewed ... then of course it is, does she not agree with me, within her prerogative, and indeed her duty as a Minister to reflect on the sentencing guidelines and change those sentencing guidelines if the Government felt that perhaps they were too lenient in the 820 circumstances of this type or any other type of case?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I have informed the hon. Gentleman that there is a general review on the criminal law and I have informed the hon. Gentleman that there is a specific working group dedicated to looking at domestic abuse that will inform the wider group of the 825 criminal law review, so the answer to the hon. Gentleman's last question I answered in my previous supplementary. The answer is yes, but as part of that we will also have input from the 830 courts, and ultimately, whereas we may need to look at our circumstances a little bit differently in Gibraltar, the courts prefer to follow the sentencing guidelines in the UK because they are already established. That does not mean we have to follow that strictly, but of course, because I have all the stakeholders who are looking into this, I need to wait for their advice and their guidance and the outcome of the review that I referred to in my first response.

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q412/2023
Crime investigation –
Private consultants

Clerk: Question 412/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

835

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, in the last 10 years how many private consultants have the RGP or any other public body in Gibraltar contracted in order to investigate a potential crime?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Standards.

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J Sacramento): Mr Speaker, none.

845 Hon. D A Feetham: None, save for this private company that has been contracted in order to investigate, through the Northern Irish ex-police officer, the charges or investigation into the alleged issues with Mr McGrail?

850 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, there are other questions on the Order Paper in relation to a specific person who has been engaged, so in relation to this other question the answer is none, but then there is a separate answer in relation to the other questions.

Hon. D A Feetham: I just do not understand. The answer is there is one in the last 10 years?

855 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, but for the other two questions that are on the Order Paper that have been asked by the Opposition – the answer would have been one, but because there are two other questions the answer to this one is none, and then there will be an answer to the other two.

860 Hon. D A Feetham: I think for the purposes of Hansard, Mr Speaker, the answer is one, because of course I have asked for the last 10 years. I do not want to be difficult; it is just for the purpose of Hansard. I think the answer is one.

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, the answer, of course, which the House will see from the answer to the other questions, will be one.

865

Mr Speaker: Next question.

Q413/2023

Mandatory drugs tests at HM Prison –
Number undertaken since 2011

Clerk: Question 413/2023. The Hon. D A Feetham.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, how many mandatory drugs tests have been undertaken at 870 HM Prison since the legislation allowing it was introduced, which, of course, was 2011?

Clerk: Answer, the Hon. the Minister for Justice, Equality and Standards.

Minister for Justice, Equality and Public Standards and Regulations (Hon. Miss S J 875 Sacramento): Mr Speaker, HM Prison is only undertaking a voluntary drug testing programme.
Mandatory drug testing is not being undertaken.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, this is a question that I have asked over a number of years, even before Mr Speaker was occupying that Chair, and the answer I was given in the past was that 880 the Prison did not have the facilities at the time in order to conduct this type of test, but it was the Government's intention to facilitate mandatory drug testing. In other words, the Government thought that, as a policy, it was something that ought to be done. Can she say whether that policy has changed or whether the Government is still in the process of resourcing the Prison in order to allow the Prison to undertake mandatory drug testing?

Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, essentially it is both. There is a power in the Act that 885 allows for drug testing in prison to be undertaken. How that drug testing in prison is undertaken is very much a matter for the Superintendent of Prison.

I have been giving this subject a lot of thought, because ultimately the intention of drug testing 890 in prison is about the reduction of the use of drugs. The view of the Prison is that the take-up of the voluntary drug testing is successful to the extent that they prefer to undertake voluntary drug testing over mandatory drug testing. The current take-up of voluntary drug testing in prison, I am told, is 70%. That is up 10% from last year because the percentage last year was 60. In order to achieve the objective, which is the reduction of the use of drugs in prison, the Prison, I think, is 895 overall quite successful in achieving this through the voluntary drug testing regime, and sometimes an approach such as this can yield the results that you want, as opposed to forcing the drug testing through mandatory drug testing.

Mandatory drug testing, of course, also requires additional investment because the chain of custody procedure when it comes to mandatory drug testing changes is complex. This has been 900 the subject of discussion in our previous Parliament questions. We were looking at undertaking the mandatory drug testing locally because it would be cheaper than the original option, which, because of the chain of custody, was extortionately expensive, but because the success rate of the voluntary drug testing has increased, the mandatory drug testing has not been among the priorities that the Prison has had. All in all, I think the hon. Gentleman can agree that a 70% rate 905 of voluntary drug testing is, overall, quite good. It achieves the aim, and that is what it is about. It is not about how we achieve it, it is the fact that it is being achieved, and if it is being done on a voluntary basis, then I would dare say it is even better because it means that inmates are actually engaging in the programme on a voluntary basis, as opposed to being forced to do it.

Hon. D A Feetham: Mr Speaker, there is a lot to unpack there, and I have a number of 910 supplementary questions with your leave.

The first question is does the Prison Service have the resources and the wherewithal to conduct these mandatory drug tests?

915 Hon. Miss S J Sacramento: Mr Speaker, I am not quite sure what the hon. Gentleman means when he says, 'Does the Prison Service have the wherewithal?' When it comes to the resources, the Prison would not undertake the drug testing. It is something that would be outsourced by the Prison, so it would not be a question of prison resources, it would be a question of doing it for the Prison.

920

Hon. D A Feetham: At the very least, can the Minister answer this? Are the facilities in place in order to allow the Prison Service to conduct mandatory drug testing should they think that is necessary in any given case?

925
